I do not claim that the proposals in the Bill for a common funding formula for schools and colleges will achieve all those objectives overnight—nor do I believe that a common funding formula alone can address the crisis of funding or the chaotic legacy of the internal market that continues to damage post-16 education. For the nettle to be truly grasped, we need to establish new planning powers at regional level. However, the Bill would be an important means of getting the ball rolling in the right direction, and I commend it to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill ordered to be brought in by Mr. David Chaytor.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES (FUNDING FORMULA)

Mr. David Chaytor accordingly presented a Bill to make provision for a common funding formula for 16 to 19-year-old students in schools and colleges: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 13 November, and to be printed [Bill 247].

HUMAN RIGHTS BILL [LORDS] (PROGRAMME)

Ordered,

That the following provisions shall apply to the Human Rights Bill [Lords]:—

1. The proceedings on consideration and Third Reading shall be completed at this day's sitting.

2. The proceedings on consideration mentioned in the first column shall, if not previously concluded, be brought to a conclusion at the time mentioned in the second column:

New Clauses up to and including New Clause 2	1½ hours after commencement
New Clause 3	2½ hours after commencement
Amendments up to the end of line 24 on page 1	3 hours after commencement
Amendments up to the end of line 29 on page 7	4½ hours after commencement
Remaining amendments	6 hours after commencement

3. The proceedings on Third Reading shall, if not concluded, be brought to a conclusion 7 hours after commencement.

4. In paragraphs 2 and 3 "commencement" means commencement of the proceedings on the Motion for this resolution.

5. Standing Order No. 15(1) (Exempted business) shall apply to proceedings on consideration and Third Reading for any part of the period of 7 hours mentioned in paragraph 3 which falls after 10 o'clock.

6. Standing Order No. 82 (Business Committee) shall not apply to proceedings on the Bill.

7. For the purpose of concluding any proceedings which are to be brought to a conclusion at a time appointed by this Order—

(1) The Speaker shall put forthwith the following Questions (but no others)—

(a) any Question already proposed from the Chair;

(b) any Question necessary to bring to a decision a Question so proposed (including in the case of a new Clause which has been read a second time, the Question that the Clause be added to the Bill);

(c) the Question on any amendment moved or Motion made by a Minister of the Crown; and

(d) any other Question necessary for the disposal of the business to be concluded.

(2) Proceedings under sub-paragraph (1) shall not be interrupted under any Standing Order relating to sittings of the House and may be decided, though opposed, at any hour.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Orders of the Day

Human Rights Bill [Lords]

As amended (in the Committee), considered.

New clause 2

NO REMEDIAL ORDER BEFORE DETERMINATION OF EUROPEAN COMMISSION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

'.—Where

(a) a Court, as defined in section 4(5), has made a declaration of incompatibility in respect of any legislation and where there is no further domestic right of appeal; but

(b) it nonetheless appears to a Minister of the Crown that it is desirable in the public interest that the question of compatibility, and all and any issues arising in the proceedings which have given rise thereto should not be the subject of any remedial order unless and until such issues shall have been fully considered by the European Commission of Human Rights or, if admissible, should have been the subject of a judgement, decision, declaration or opinion of the European Court of Human Rights;

he may issue a certificate to the said effect in writing, and in such event the said declaration shall be of no effect pending consideration of the said issues by the Commission and the Court.'.—[Sir Nicholas Lyell.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

4.12 pm

Sir Nicholas Lyell (North-East Bedfordshire): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

With this Bill we now turn from the damage being done to the economy by the Government to the damage which, alas, is being done to our constitution. I do not think that that is the intention of the Home Secretary, but he is party to it.

We have two main debates on this aspect. First, there is the debate on new clause 2 which relates to the need for an appeal to Strasbourg for the Government and for local authorities in certain circumstances. Secondly, there is our continued resistance to the Government's proposal for a fast-track system for remedial orders—in other words, for a system whereby, if there is a declaration of incompatibility by our courts, instead of the matter coming before Parliament for a proper Bill and Act of Parliament in the normal way, with full consideration by the House, the matter can simply be pushed through with a three-hour debate after a period of outside consultation. Both those matters are important if our constitution is not to be damaged.

The purpose of the new clause, to which we return because of the rather uncomprehending and unsatisfactory response by the Government in Committee, is to make clear what is unclear at present—that is, that the object of the Bill and incorporation of the convention is to bring our law into line with that of Strasbourg and make it easier for UK citizens to get a ruling from our domestic courts on issues that would hitherto have been taken to Strasbourg.

I hope that the Home Secretary agrees that the object is not to create a substitute constitution in the broad language of the convention, against which our domestic courts might be tempted to reshape our law in a way that goes further than the requirements of the convention. The convention was not designed to become a substitute written constitution for the United Kingdom. It was designed to keep UK law in line with the human rights law of Council of Europe member states, as declared in Strasbourg.

The new clause seeks to help in that process and the Government have nothing to fear from it. I therefore call on the Home Secretary to make it clear that what I have outlined is the Government's objective, and no more.

Hopefully, the problems to which I refer will not arise, but they are not fanciful. The answer may be that those problems do not arise frequently on the continent of Europe, but there are significant differences between the structure of our law and that of civil law countries, such as France, Germany or Spain. Indeed, almost all countries on the mainland of Europe are civil law countries, and their laws are much more heavily codified than ours. They have much more "black letter" law. It is not open to their judiciaries to develop their law as our judiciary has developed ours through the common law over the centuries.

In most ways, our system is a strength. The development of the common law has been rightly informed by a belief in the rights and liberties contained in the convention. We are rightly reminded that the convention was largely drafted in Britain in the late 1940s and early 1950s. However, any common law development has—subject to the European convention—always been subject to modification by the elected representatives of the people in Parliament. That gives democratic legitimacy to our constitution.

In future, that is to change somewhat, but I hope that the House agrees that it must not change too far. It is one thing to keep our law in conformity with Strasbourg concepts, which are, on the whole, cautious and seek to enforce basic standards; but the commission and the court in Strasbourg have also recognised that there must be a "substantial margin of appreciation". That is Strasbourg jargon, which means a substantial discretion and latitude should be given to each member state in respect of the exact method of implementation of the high principles set out in the convention. That margin of appreciation must also apply to domestic judgments based on the convention.

I hope that the Home Secretary agrees that the convention is not to give the judiciary carte blanche to rewrite our laws. Although one hopes that our courts will not over-use their powers—I think that most of them will not—the Government are right to anticipate that they will frequently be requested to do so. They will often come under a great deal of pressure and hear a lot of carefully prepared arguments in that direction.

If hon. Members need convincing of that danger, they need only read the speech given by the Attorney-General to the Bar Council at the beginning of this month. He explained, and I agree with him, how every level of the Government needs to undergo training as to the reach and relevance of human rights law. Repeated and extensive arguments are to be anticipated by those who, on behalf of defendants and others, appear before the courts. He said that the Crown Prosecution Service is to be trained and furnished with model answers to the more obvious submissions that are to be anticipated. Magistrates and judiciary are likewise to receive training, but what will happen if there is a ruling by our domestic courts against the Government—of whatever complexion, for we are legislating for as far as the eye can see and beyond—or a public authority which is believed to have gone too far?

Here, with respect to the Home Secretary, his answer on 24 June—I am sorry that I could not be present, but, as he knows, I was in hospital—is not, in our view, adequate. We need to create a more formal structure so that the individual citizens involved in particular cases and the country at large know where they stand. Are the Government accepting a particular ruling, and do they propose to legislate promptly?

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Jack Straw): I am grateful to the right hon. and learned Gentleman. I simply want to ask him whether he has a reference for the occasion on which I made this point.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I shall look to help from the Bench behind, as the Home Secretary is better able to do. I should not say that he is better able to do that, because I have my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) with me.

Mr. Straw: The junior.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: No, my hon. and learned Friend is not my junior at all now; he is one of Her Majesty's counsel learned in the law, no less.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): Learned or not, may I interrupt my right hon. and learned Friend? The Home Secretary's speech, in response to mine, began at column 1127 of Hansard, or thereabouts.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Some of the Home Secretary's answers on that occasion seemed to be rather dismissive, or even—this is not like him—a little trite. I am sure that he did not intend them to be so, but the Opposition are well aware that there is no "right" of appeal for Governments or public authorities to Strasbourg. It is precisely because we are aware of that that it was necessary to draft new clause 2, the purpose of which we have already put before hon. Members in Committee, in this careful way.

My impression from the Government's answer is that they recognise that there will be occasions when it is necessary to force a case to continue on to Strasbourg. I should be grateful if the Home Secretary would either make it clear that he does not agree with that point or acknowledge that there are likely to be cases when the Government or public authorities would not think that our House of Lords, or whichever of the highest courts had ruled on the matter, had given a ruling in accordance with what was likely to be Strasbourg law, and would want the matter to continue to Strasbourg.

It is not good enough, in our opinion, for the Government in answer to say that the mechanism to force a case on to Strasbourg already sufficiently exists. It may exist in theory, if I understand the Home Secretary's answer correctly. It is true, as was argued by the Government on that occasion, that, if the Government of the day, having received a declaration of incompatibility, do precisely nothing, citizens will, sooner or later, be forced to take the matter on to Strasbourg or will find themselves deprived of their remedy—but what an unsatisfactory way in which to proceed.

How long is the citizen—the litigant—to wait? What is the country to assume in the meantime? What is the status today of the hallowed and rightly time-honoured convention that Government will never knowingly break the law? It cannot be satisfactory to leave such matters in limbo.

Having been Attorney-General, I ask myself and the House, in the hope of an answer from the Government, what an Attorney-General would say if there had been a ruling of incompatibility by the House of Lords on a particular aspect, but the Government had taken no steps to correct it. Would the Attorney-General remain silent while the Government considered what to do?

Would that ruling—which, under clause 4(6), would not have any legal effect at that stage—have no effect on the courts? If, the House of Lords having delivered its judgment, a new case came before the courts, could the matter be argued de novo, or would the ruling stand as authority? If the Government have thought about these matters, we should be grateful to hear their conclusions. If they have not thought about them, we should be grateful if they would do so and would tell us their conclusions at some future date, although it would be preferable to hear them now. It cannot be satisfactory to leave such matters in limbo.

The individual citizen and the country at large are entitled to be told within a reasonable time—we suggest six weeks—whether the Government intend to change the law and, again within a reasonable time, how they propose to do so. If they do not intend to change the law, the citizen and the country should be told. The citizen could then take his case to Strasbourg. There would be a proper mechanism, certainty and comparative expedition. However, what the Government seem to propose is a recipe for confusion, delay and injustice.

Although I said that such problems would, I hope, be rare, I also said that they were not fanciful. One only has to look across the Atlantic to see what powers the courts have taken for themselves under their own constitutions. Periods of judicial passivity can be followed by periods of judicial activism. The classic example—I hope that it is not thought too high flown—is the American constitution, which showed itself inadequate, despite its fine phrases, to protect its citizens from slavery, but has more recently been construed so as to overturn the views of the legislature on the subject of abortion.

Likewise in Canada, the courts have struck down the federal law and state laws on abortion. We hope that that would not happen here, but fashions change. The language of the convention is certainly broad enough to provide pegs on which the courts could hang an argument to intervene. If they were to do so, on that example most people would probably think that the judges had seriously overstepped the mark. They would want a particular case to be brought to Strasbourg to challenge and to test such a serious extension of judicial power. We would certainly wish to have it tested at Strasbourg, yet at present, no satisfactory mechanism exists to enable that to be done.

Even at this late stage of the Bill, we call on the Government to think again on this matter and, I hope, to accept our amendment. I am not saying that it is perfectly drafted, but it is carefully drafted, and if it needs polishing, let it be polished. If that involves a little ping-pong between this House and the other place, let that take place. Above all, let us get this right.

Our new clause establishes a straightforward and workable system under which everyone knows where they stand. If a case needs to go on to Strasbourg, the litigant can take the necessary steps without uncertainty or delay. If not, he can await with confidence some appropriate amendment of the law by the House. Above all, it will make it clear to our courts and judiciary that the House does not intend to set up the convention as a substitute constitution. I commend the new clause to the House.

4.30 pm

Mr. Garnier: Let me begin by correcting something that I said earlier. I believe that the Home Secretary's response to my few remarks in Committee began not in column 1127, but in column 1119. No doubt the right hon. Gentleman has spent many a happy hour since last June reading Hansard in order to hone his arguments in time for today's debate.

I commend what my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) has said, not least because, to a degree, it mirrors what I said in Committee last June. I say that not because I consider myself to be a man of great original thinking, but because all people of good will and common sense who have given the matter some thought will have reached the same conclusions as my right hon. and learned Friend and me. Indeed, much of what I said on 24 June flowed from discussions that I had on the telephone with my right hon. and learned Friend when he was on his sickbed.

Be that as it may, I hope that, over the recess and in the hours available to him when he has not been dealing with other matters, the Home Secretary has had an opportunity to reconsider his response to what I said in Committee on 24 June. Although he was, as always, very courteous in dealing with my arguments, I am not sure that he did himself or the Committee justice in responding to what I had said on behalf of the official Opposition.

Let me take the Home Secretary back to 24 June, and column 1121 of Hansard. He said—just before an intervention by the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan)—

> "Therefore, although I understand the point of new clause 2, it would not achieve anything. Nothing in it could not equally be achieved—and will not equally be achieved—within the framework of the Bill as it stands."

I regret to say—because I do not like being unduly controversial—that the Home Secretary missed not only the point, but the points. I fear that, unless it is amended to include new clause 2, the Bill will remain deficient, and will remain a source of aggravation and difficulty between the House, as the originator of legislation, and institutions and citizens who may, from time to time, come up against either the Government or Government institutions in complaining about the implications of the European convention on human rights under the Bill.

The points that I sought to make in my short contribution on 24 June were, I hope, reasonably clear. My first point was that we were left with an imbalance between Government and citizen. It seems to me that in any litigation, there should be fairness, if not parity, between the two parties to the action. In my view, each party—be it citizen or Government—should have the right of appeal to the highest court of appeal in the given system of justice. Under the convention and the Bill, the citizen has the right to take his concerns from the lowest courts—the courts of first instance—through our domestic appeal tribunals, to the court in Strasbourg. The Government do not have that right.

Responding to my point—this is also in column 1121—the Home Secretary said:

"New clause 2 seems to be based on two assumptions. The first is that a declaration of incompatibility will have some legal effect unless a ministerial certificate is issued. The second is that the Government must make a remedial order following a declaration of incompatibility."

However, he went on to say that there may be occasions when the Government might not do those things, which leaves the legal situation in a state of uncertainty.

Although there are advantages politically in leaving things in a state of uncertainty, as the Government demonstrate day by day, there are higher demands on a justice system than there are on party political interest. Where a Government, albeit ably assisted by men of integrity such as the Home Secretary, allow themselves to be led into a position where the citizen is unfairly advantaged compared with the opposite party in the litigation—the public institution, alias the Government—in the ability to appeal to the highest court, there is a glaring uncertainty, which our new clause would adequately deal with.

As I say, I do not like chiding the Home Secretary. I hope that he will see the reasonableness of the arguments of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North–East Bedfordshire and myself—on this and the previous occasion—and that they will convince him of the good sense of new clause 2.

It troubles me that the Home Secretary said on the previous occasion:

"Nor is there any obligation on the Government to remedy any incompatibility by means of a remedial order."—[Official Report, 24 June 1998; Vol. 314, c. 1121.]

If there is incompatibility, it should be remedied; otherwise there is no point in introducing into domestic law the terms of the European convention. I urge the Home Secretary either to come up with some new and better arguments, or to accede to our new clause.

Mr. Straw: I am delighted to see the right hon. and learned Member for North–East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) in his place and, I hope, fully recovered from his ills. He began his speech with some uncharacteristic hyperbole: with claims that we were damaging our constitution. I shall simply take that incantation as a necessary step that all Opposition Front Benchers have to go through. Then, because he was obviously uncomfortable with what I think is widely recognised in the House as wide of the mark, in relation to this Bill anyway, he went on to make his case in his usual reasoned way, joined by the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier).

I do not dismiss the arguments of the Opposition, but nor do I agree with them, and I should like to explain why. The right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire asks me first, and it is an important point, to confirm that we do not view this Bill as a substitute for a written constitution for the United Kingdom. The answer is that we do not.

It is precisely because we have been determined that it should not be a substitute written constitution for the UK that we have structured the Bill in the manner that we have and, in particular, ensured that no court in this land, not even the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords, can place itself in the position of sovereignty over the High Court of the elected Parliament.

We looked at various ways in which the European convention could be incorporated. We looked at the experience of not only continental countries—I accept what the right hon. and learned Member for North–East Bedfordshire says about the differences that arise because of the fundamental distinction between our common law tradition and their civil law traditions—but Commonwealth countries. They have not incorporated the European convention on human rights because they are not within the continent, but New Zealand and Canada, for example, have incorporated Bills of Rights, often drawn on the European convention, into their domestic law. Some of those countries have chosen to structure their incorporation legislation so that their bill of rights emerges as basic law.

The right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire spoke about "black letter" law, and I am grateful to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough for providing further and better particulars of the definition of such law. In countries that have written constitutions, there is not only statute law passed by the congress or Parliament but fundamental or—to use the continental term—basic law, which is the constitution itself. The constitution overrides, and is promulgated differently from, ordinary law.

If we had stated in the Bill that courts could not only declare incompatible any statute of this Parliament but override those statutes and declare them unenforceable, thereby abrogating them, we would have been establishing—either by the front or back door—a substitute written constitution for the United Kingdom. We would have been altering what I regard as a fundamental position established in our constitution: the sovereignty of Parliament. I think that one of the profound strengths of our system is that, although we may bind ourselves to the European Union, to United Nations treaties or to the European convention, we do not bind ourselves for ever, and that it remains open to this Parliament, at any stage that it chooses, to decide to withdraw from those conventions. Although we would, of course, have to accept the consequences of withdrawing, the decision would be made by this elected Chamber and the other place and by no one else.

The Government thought—there was no great argument about the matter, but it was important that we should deal with all the arguments—that it was important to enshrine Parliament's sovereignty in the Bill. We therefore developed the scheme of declarations of incompatibility. We did not propose that the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords should have the power to override Acts of Parliament by stating that, because they were incompatible with the convention, they were unenforceable and of no effect.

We said that the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords would be able to declare whether, in its opinion, an Act of Parliament was incompatible with the convention, and subsequently to refer the matter back to the Government, which is answerable to Parliament. In the overwhelming majority of cases, regardless of which party was in government, I think that Ministers would examine the matter and say, "A declaration of incompatibility has been made, and we shall have to accept it. We shall therefore have to remedy the defect in the law spotted by the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords." Therefore—as has been discussed in previous debates, and will be discussed again today—we have included in the Bill procedures for remedial orders. It is also always open to Ministers to introduce amending legislation in the normal way.

It is possible that the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords could make a declaration that, subsequently, Ministers propose, and Parliament accepts, should not be accepted. The right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire mentioned abortion, which provides a good example. Although I hope that it does not happen, it is possible to conceive that, some time in the future, a particularly composed Judicial Committee of the House of Lords reaches the view that provision for abortion in either the United Kingdom or part of the United Kingdom is incompatible with one or another article of the convention. Although the Committee would be entitled to say that such provision was incompatible with the convention, such a view would create very great controversy and, in some quarters, considerable social anxiety.

We judged that, in that event, it would be wrong simply to accept what the Committee had said, and that a right to abortion, albeit quite properly limited and developed in this country over a period of 30 years, should suddenly be cast aside. My guess—it can be no more than that—is that whichever party was in power would have to say that it was sorry, that it did not and would not accept that, and that it was going to continue with the existing abortion legislation.

I want to pick up two further points made by the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire.

4.45 pm

Mr. Garnier: Is the Home Secretary entirely satisfied with the argument that he is deploying? He cannot have it both ways. Either the Government are introducing into British domestic law the convention on human rights—or the bits that they have identified—and are setting up mechanisms whereby the courts can make declarations of compatibility or incompatibility, or they are not. If the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords, in its court capacity, says that certain legislation—on, say, abortion—is incompatible with the convention, and if the Government, speaking through their Ministers in the House of Commons, say, "You may say that, but we don't care and we don't intend to do anything about it," there is a lacuna in the constitution, which is unsatisfactory. The highest court in the land will be saying one thing, while Parliament, through its elected Members, will be saying another. That will lead to friction. With respect to the Home Secretary, it is no good his saying that he will leave it like that and will rely on clause 4(6). That leaves a vacuum that needs to be filled, and it will be filled by public dissension.

Mr. Straw: I do not accept that. Yes, indeed we would rely, as would any Ministers, on clause 4(6). That is its purpose. It does not leave a lacuna, because it states:

"A declaration under this section ('a declaration of incompatibility')—

(a) does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of the provision in respect of which it is given; and

(b) is not binding on the parties to the proceedings in which it is made."

That means that, as long as the Government, with the House's approval, say that they do not accept the declaration of incompatibility, the "validity, continuing operation or enforcement" of, in this case, the abortion legislation, would continue. I shall develop that point later.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I have been listening extremely carefully to the Home Secretary. I am grateful that we agree on the key point that the Bill is not to become a substitute constitution. I hesitated before getting to my feet, because I felt that the Home Secretary might be going to deal with this point, but what worries me—this formed the second part of my speech—is how the citizen will know where he or she stands. There is no structure in the Bill to force a Minister, or to enable a public authority through a Minister—we have suggested the latter—to say that, if there is no agreement and if someone wants to pursue a case, the case must go to Strasbourg, and new clause 2 would remedy that.

I do not want my intervention to be too long, but I want to make one more point. Let us consider a case that must be exercising the Home Secretary, just as it exercised me. It is that of Phyllis Bowman and the Society for the Protection of the Unborn Child and the effect of that case on our election law—that 24,000 or so leaflets could be put through the doors of the constituents of the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon). That seems to have driven a coach and horses through our election law.

Had that been the ruling of the House of Lords—although I do not think that it would have been—I am sure that it would be a good example of the kind of case that we would wish to push to Strasbourg to try to get it overturned as being a step too far. How would citizens know where they stood? How would Phyllis Bowman know where she stood? That is why we need an answer.

Mr. Straw: The Phyllis Bowman case has caused difficulties that we intend to address in future legislation, because the decision was taken by the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg and not by our domestic courts.

For the sake of argument, let us assume that an equivalent judgment had been made in the form of a declaration of incompatibility by the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords. It has been suggested that the Government would hide away and refuse to explain their position. Within five minutes of such a judgment being made, the Government would be asked for their position. If I happened to be the relevant Minister, I should say that we would study the judgment and no doubt consult the Law Officers, but within a matter of weeks we would have to explain our position, and quite rightly, too. If we did not volunteer our position—that would be an abdication of good government—we would be brought to the House to explain ourselves.

In those circumstances, there would be a number of options. First, we could accept the declaration of incompatibility and bring forward remedial orders, and that is a straightforward process. Secondly, we could make a compromise and say that we half accepted it—a solution that normally appeals to Ministers and their legal advisers—and cobble something together. [Interruption.] I speak in general terms.

Thirdly, we could say that we were very sorry, but we disagreed with it. Assuming that we gained the support of the House in that, we could say that we did not accept it for very good reasons and that the current law was right. Then the party to the proceedings—in this case, Mrs. Bowman—would say either, "This is no good. I am going to take the case to Strasbourg," or, "I have fought the good fight and I will put up with what has happened." In the first case, she would exercise her right of appeal and go to Strasbourg. Meanwhile, we would continue to apply the existing law unless and until there was an adverse judgment in Strasbourg.

As the right hon. and learned Gentleman knows, there has to be some certainty about the law. The alternative is that Mrs. Bowman, as the initiator of the proceedings, would decide not to proceed to Strasbourg, in which case, notwithstanding the declaration of incompatibility, the existing electoral law would continue to be valid and would continue in its operation and enforcement.

Precisely because of that, and with respect to the right hon. and learned Gentleman, I genuinely do not see that there is any need whatsoever for Government to be given a right of appeal to Strasbourg. Why should the House have a right of appeal to Strasbourg when simply doing nothing but saying that we did not accept a declaration of incompatibility would put it in the position it wanted? What is the point?

Let me make this point particularly to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough: it would have been necessary to give the Government and public authorities a right of appeal in respect of an adverse declaration of incompatibility in the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords had the Bill provided that decisions and judgments of the Judicial Committee overrode decisions by the House. If we had made the House subordinate to a supreme court, of course we would need a right of appeal to Strasbourg, as we would then have been providing a written constitution, and, essentially, vesting the House of Lords and the European Court of Human Rights with the function of a supreme court and removing the sovereignty of Parliament. We have not gone down that route.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: The cavalry is waiting to come to the Home Secretary's rescue. I have listened carefully to him and it is clear to me that either I have failed to get my point across or he does not understand the structure of his Bill. The purpose of the new clause is not to give the Government and public authorities a right of appeal, because it is not within the power of the House to do so. I am sure that the Home Secretary understands that. Only by changing the convention could the Government be given a right of appeal to Strasbourg. The convention gives the right to citizens only. That is the reason for the somewhat convoluted structure of the new clause, which those who have read it carefully will have noticed.

The new clause would do exactly what the Home Secretary says he will do. I was fascinated to listen to the Home Secretary telling the House that the Government will follow the structure that we have recommended in the new clause. If the Government agree with that, they should put it on the statute book. Otherwise, the citizen will not know where he stands. Will the Home Secretary please answer that point?

Mr. Straw: The proposition before the House on 24 June was that there should be a right of appeal exercised by the Government.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I drafted the new clause before 24 June. Its purpose is the same today, and it means what it says.

Mr. Straw rose—

Mr. David Lock (Wyre Forest) rose—

Mr. Straw: I shall give way to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Lock: I have listened to the debate with enormous interest, and it seems somewhat bizarre. Are not our opponents are making two criticisms of the Bill: first that it takes sovereignty from the House; and secondly that it politicises the judiciary? They are now proposing a new clause that will result in judges telling the House what it has to do, and will kick-start a political process—both of which consequences they vehemently oppose. I do not understand the logic or consistency of their position. Does my right hon. Friend agree with that analysis?

Mr. Straw: I understand my hon. Friend's point. I am glad about what the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire has said, because we have narrowed the ground considerably. He accepts what I say about the nature of the process and asks us to accept the new clause. However, we do not believe that it is necessary. All the processes that I have described are bound to happen anyway.

The hon. and learned Member for Harborough said that some great lacuna might develop—not a minor procedural hole, but a substantive black hole on the enforcement of the law. I do not think that I am misinterpreting him when I say that he was talking about a limbo developing in which no one knew where they were. People will know where they are. There is no question about that, because the situation will be clear. The speed of the Government response will depend on the complexity of what is handed down from the other place and on other matters, but the Government will respond.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: This leaves me breathless after 11 years in government. The idea that the Government come leaping forward with clear answers to difficult questions immediately does not correspond with the experience of any parliamentarian who has been in the House for any time. That is clearly not the Home Secretary's experience. The judgment on Bowman and the SPUC has stood for many months and we have not heard a whisper on how it should be dealt with. The Chahal judgment has stood for more than a year and we have not heard a whisper on that. The Home Secretary is saying that a report to the House as suggested in the new clause will happen in practice. That defies experience.

5 pm

Mr. Straw: I do not accept what the right hon. and learned Gentleman says. He mentioned the Chahal case; it makes our point, not his. We have acted on the issuing of the judgment. The Special Immigration Appeals Commission Act has provided a remedy to the mischief identified by the European Court in the Chahal case. That is a very good example. Since the original Chahal decision was made under the Government of whom he was a member, it is fair to point out that, quite quickly after the Chahal judgment, the previous Administration said what they needed to do, and got on with it.

The other point to be made about the Chahal judgment was that it was made by the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg and not by the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords. Had it been a judgment of the Judicial Committee and had the Bill been in force, it would have been open to the Government to say, "We do not accept this, and we shall simply run the procedures of the Immigration Act 1971 as we always have." They would have been very unwise to do that in that circumstance, because it would have been obvious that, since the matter was one of the liberty of a subject, there would be an appeal to Strasbourg, which almost certainly the Government would have lost. The Government may have decided—such considerations must be borne in mind—that it was worth taking such a risk for other reasons of state.

The new clause, which would tie us down, anticipates that, wherever there is a question of an incompatibility and it has not been the subject of a remedial order, there is likely to be an appeal to the European Court. I have already explained that there may not be such an appeal. Despite all the arguments about some hole developing in law enforcement, the default setting is the status quo.

My very last point is on the issue of both sides having a right of appeal—something that the hon. and learned Member for Harborough mentioned. He implied that the new clause was somehow a paver for both sides having a right of appeal. To dispose of that, I hope that I have satisfied the House that a circumstance in which both sides have the right of appeal would be incompatible with the sovereignty of Parliament and could arise only if, say, we had gone down the track of accepting that the European convention was a substitute for a written constitution and that Parliament would be subordinate to European courts. We do not intend to go down such a track.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I apologise to the Home Secretary for intervening again, but this is the last time that I can draw out from him the key point. As—I think—he accepts, it is not possible for any member state to create a right of appeal for Governments or public authorities without the agreement of all other member states. However, if we want issues to be taken to Strasbourg, we must have a structure whereby the Government or public authorities can legitimately refuse to abide by a declaration of their own courts, thus forcing the citizen to go to Strasbourg. The Home Secretary rightly pointed out that clause 4(6) provides a good deal of what is required in that direction.

Where the Home Secretary's argument does not, in my opinion, meet the requirements both of effective justice and proper legislation, is when he says that the Government will always come forward promptly with a declaration about what they will do, despite the fact that there will be nothing on the statute book to say that they should do so. We are relying entirely on the alertness of the Government to achieve what is suggested by new clause 2.

We do not seem to disagree in principle about the need to achieve what the new clause suggests. Taking my last opportunity to ask the Home Secretary to reconsider, I submit that it would be wiser for him to accept new clause 2 and take it on to the statute book. There would then be a framework enabling all citizens involved in litigation—and, what is more, the far greater number of citizens interested in the outcome of such litigation—to know where they stood.

At the moment, that is not clear; the position is dependent on the efficiency and good will of the Government. I do not doubt their good will, but with difficult issues, especially those involving public authorities, and perhaps equally those involving the Government themselves, the likelihood is that there would be periods of delay and uncertainty, and people would not know where they stood. The statement that a ruling of the Judicial Committee was to have no effect would cause great confusion.

I ask the Home Secretary—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. The right hon. and learned Gentleman is extending the right of intervention much too far.

Mr. Straw: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think that this will be my last point.

The right hon. and learned Gentleman would have a point if we were simply relying on the efficiency and good will of the Government, but we are not. We are relying on the black letter of clause 4(6). The default setting, which everybody knows about, is that a declaration of incompatibility by the Judicial Committee or the House of Lords

"(a) does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of the provision in respect of which it is given; and

(b) is not binding on the parties to the proceedings in which it is made."

There is certainty there.

The right hon. and learned Gentleman asked me what would happen with the lower courts, and whether they would follow the judgment. No, they would not, because clause 4(6) is clear: a declaration does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of the provisions in respect of which it is given. There is absolute clarity there. In a judicial and political sense, the status quo ante would apply. Then, obviously, the Government would have to consider, and in most cases they would consider the position pretty rapidly. No time limit is set down, but the reverse could not apply. We could not, for example, say that the declaration of incompatibility would have force unless or until the Government said the reverse. That would create considerable uncertainty, and that would be one of the effects of new clause 2.

I understand the point that the right hon. and learned Gentleman and his hon. Friends have made, and the debate has been illuminating, at least in making it clear that there is understanding on both sides of the House that giving the Government a substantive right of appeal to the European Court in Strasbourg would be outwith the structure of the convention.

I think that there is also understanding that that would be unnecessary for the Government, given the structure of the Bill. The issue comes down to one of procedure when there is a declaration of incompatibility. I am not making a nit-picking point about the phraseology or drafting of the new clause, because of course, if we accepted the principle behind it, those could be dealt with by the draftsmen.

However, the overall effect would be different from what I believe is the clearer idea contained in clause 4(6). That is why I hope that the right hon. and learned Gentleman will withdraw his new clause. If he does not, we shall have to resist it.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I am sorry for making a long intervention, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but this is a very important point. I shall not withdraw the new clause, for this fairly straightforward reason. This will be a real, practical problem. The Attorney-General, speaking to the Bar conference this year, made the point that there will need to be a great deal of training in the matter. We shall see a lot of human rights cases—

Mr. Paul Stinchcombe (Wellingborough) indicated assent.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman, who is nodding to me, recognises that.

There will be a great many attempts to make human rights points, particularly in the criminal sector—for example, in relation to manners of arrest. From time to time, there will be rulings that are adverse to our existing law and that we may or may not wish to accept. The Government will have to think about those matters, and decide whether they will amend the law in this House or whether they want the matter to go to Strasbourg on the basis that our courts have gone too far and that Strasbourg will give a wider margin of appreciation or discretion to us, as a member state, to make our own law. Unless there is a proper structure—whereby the Government come forward within a reasonable time to state what is happening—the courts will be in real difficulty.

I do not think that the Home Secretary understands the point, and I ask him to focus on it for a second. It is no good for the House to point to clause 4(6) and say that, because the clause states that a declaration of incompatibility shall have no effect on the law of this land, the rulings of the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords will not be followed in the lower courts in the meantime. It would be a recipe for absurdity for the lower courts—during a lacuna in which we say nothing—to pay no attention to a House of Lords ruling on a point of criminal procedure in this context until we amended the law. It would be far better for the Government to be clear, and for them to have a statutory requirement to come forward promptly to say either what they are doing or that the matter must go to Strasbourg.

In the interests of clarity and good legislation, I am afraid that I must ask the House to divide on this issue.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

New clause 3

CONSULTATION AND GUIDANCE PRIOR TO COMMENCEMENT OF ACT

'The Secretary of State shall, before making an order under section 22(3) of this Act—

(a) provide guidance to public authorities on the steps which they need to take to comply with section 6 of this Act,

(b) consult public authorities, and such other bodies and persons as he may consider appropriate, on the most effective long term arrangement for providing public authorities, and persons who may wish to exercise their rights under section 7 of this Act, with advice and assistance on their respective responsibilities and rights under this Act,

(c) include within that consultation the options for establishing a Human Rights Commission to fulfil those functions, and

(d) inform Parliament of the outcome of that consultation.'.—[Dr. Tony Wright.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Dr. Tony Wright (Cannock Chase): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

I move the new clause because I hope that the House will think it important and worth while. Also, it enables Members who are not lawyers to join in the debate, which is always refreshing during proceedings on this Bill.

As we reach the closing stages of this important Bill, the question is whether any gaps remain to be filled—gaps that might prevent the Bill from delivering its potential. We believe that there are such gaps, and seek, tentatively, to fill them by means of the new clause. It argues that, for the Bill to be effective, it will need some underpinning which is not in place and will not be unless the Government put it there. This is the moment when they should do so. They have put such support in place for every previous similar human rights measure—for example, with the Equal Opportunities Commission and the Commission for Racial Equality—that has extended and strengthened human rights.

In each of those cases, albeit 20 years ago, it was believed that some institutional structure should be put in place to ensure that the rights being enshrined in a Bill would be operational in practice. It was necessary to ensure that people could access the rights and that something would happen after the House had passed the measure. That legislation was given the necessary institutional support, and it is crucial for a similar approach to be taken with this measure.

It is crucial, too, that prevention issues be dealt with; for example, how we can prevent cases from even arising by developing good practice in public bodies and private bodies charged with public functions. How can we promote access to justice? How can we advise and assist the people who might benefit from the provisions of the Bill? How can we promote awareness of human rights and develop a real human rights culture in this country? How can we scrutinise draft legislation to ensure that it is consistent with the convention and with other human rights obligations to which this country has signed up? How can we advise Government and Parliament? The latter will need an independent source of advice, and this is our opportunity to ensure that it is put in place. For a range of reasons, it is essential at this late stage in the passage of the Bill that we insert a provision to ensure that all that can happen.

The new clause would provide the support that the Bill requires. As hon. Members may see, it asks the Government to take three steps prior to the Act's coming into force. The first step will be to provide guidance to public authorities on the steps that they need to take to ensure that they comply with the Act.

Everyone who has looked at the Bill knows that it has momentous implications for all public authorities and all private bodies that exercise public functions. The Government accepted that both in this House and in the other place. Indeed, in the other place there was talk of a transformation that would need to occur in the behaviour of public bodies.

[Dr. Tony Wright]

It is not difficult to assemble a long list of the issues that public bodies may have to face as a consequence of the Bill. The current issue of Local Government Chronicle carries the dramatic headline "Human rights Act unleashes legal deluge", and contains a long list of the Bill's legal implications for local authorities. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary spoke about exaggerated rhetoric and perhaps the article is over the top, but it is not difficult to assemble a wholly convincing list of matters about which public bodies may be required to respond.

5.30 pm

The Institute for Public Policy Research drew up such a list after a series of conferences between practitioners in different fields. It shows—I shall only dip into it—under which articles of the convention public bodies may have to respond. The cases that could arise for health authorities, for example, include, under article 2:

"inadequate steps taken to protect/save a life—shortage of resources may be no defence—eg Health Authority's refusal to fund expensive treatment for a child because it would only prolong his life a few months—or for an elderly person . . . failure to prevent death or injury by providing a senior/experienced enough doctor to carry out an operation . . . that turning off a life support system for someone in a vegetative state denied his/her right to life . . . that a foetus's right to life should override a woman's refusal to have a caesarean section".

Cases that may arise for local authorities include, under article 2:

"failure to protect the public from known and avoidable dangers—eg a local authority which failed to exercise its enforcement powers against a known polluter".

Cases that may arise under article 8 include a

"public landlord's failure to repair or maintain a home—or all of the homes within an estate . . . local authority's failure to issue an abatement and enforcement notice against a creator of a statutory nuisance—bad neighbour factory in a residential area".

An article 3 case may arise because of "any treatment in residential homes/institutions of the elderly, mentally ill, homeless, young people, asylum seekers, remand prisoners (for example) which could be considered degrading".

The list identifies cases that Government Departments may have to face, such as, under article 8,

"refusal to allow children conceived by artificial reproduction to know the identity of their birth parents . . . deportation of a parent which effectively denies a child the right to family life".

An article 3 case that could arise would be "degrading treatment by a public official".

The list mentions education authorities and schools. Under protocol 1, a case could arise concerning "whether a school's decision to expel a child was proportionate to his/her behaviour".

A case of

"whether the suspension of a pupil for writing a critical article about the school in a local paper denied his/her right to education and his/her right to freedom of expression" could arise under protocol 1 and article 10.

One can, without any difficulty, compile an extraordinarily long list of cases that will land on the desks of public authorities. Those of us who have supported the measure and who have long wanted to bring rights home must not allow the House to be misled about the scale and impact on public bodies of the proposals. We must ask from whom public authorities will obtain the guidance that they will need to know whether they are complying with the Bill. Where is the agency that will provide the public bodies with the help that they will need?

When the race and equal opportunities legislation was enacted, the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission were established precisely to provide such guidance for the bodies that would be covered and for the individuals who believed that their rights had been infringed. The commissions were the support mechanisms that underpinned the legislation. As a human rights commission has not been established to fulfil such a function in respect of this Bill, the implications for public authorities are far greater.

Senior lawyers who have been providing training on the implications of the Bill over the past weeks—mostly under the auspices of Justice—have drawn attention to cases of medical negligence, personal injury, environmental health and nuisance, family law, privacy and mental health. They have based their judgments on the cases that have been taken successfully to the European Commission and the European Court of Human Rights.

Not only will public bodies need advice prior to the Bill's enactment on the steps that they will have to take to avoid unnecessary litigation; they will also have a continuing need for advice as the case law develops—for example, on how, under article 3, the courts are defining degrading treatment or, under article 8, people's homes and correspondence and the scope of the right to respect private and family life.

Private bodies will urgently need guidance on the definition of public function so that they know whether they are covered by the legislation. Large public authorities and companies may rightly be expected to pay for legal advice, but it is unreasonable to expect voluntary organisations—such as Barnardos, which will be centrally involved in the operation of the measure, or bodies that provide residential care for education—to do so.

The new clause was designed to focus attention on prevention—how we can prevent cases being brought by ensuring that public authorities are behaving as they should. We cannot assume that the Bill's enactment will in itself lead to the culture of awareness to which we all look forward. In the absence of a human rights commission or a similar mechanism, the Government will need to be active in approaching the wide range of organisations to which the Bill applies so that the legislation leads to the desired change in culture rather than to a series of avoidable and expensive cases in the courts. Some training has begun, but there will have to be much more. A concerted and coherent programme is needed, and that must come from an agency that is provided for in the Bill.

The new clause would also require the Government to consult interested parties on the most effective long-term arrangements through which to provide guidance to public authorities and advice and assistance to individuals who believe that their rights have been infringed. In the White Paper and in subsequent debates, the Government have said that they are not convinced that a human rights commission is essential to the successful implementation of the Bill and that they want a greater consensus on the functions and structure of such a body before they legislate. However, it is clear from that that some arrangement is needed to provide continuing assistance to public bodies and individuals.

Paragraph (b) of the new clause would ensure that the Government take the lead in finding out what the most effective arrangements would be. The Government have, in a sense, conceded that there will need to be such arrangements, and the clause asks them to consult on that and to make those arrangements an integral part of the Bill.

Since the Bill was last debated in the House, the Northern Ireland Bill has been introduced, with its provision for a human rights commission in Northern Ireland. That body will have a responsibility to advise and assist individuals taking cases under the Human Rights Act. That assistance will be available whether a case raises issues related to Northern Ireland's particular problems, or issues which could equally have arisen in Britain, such as infringements of privacy or of the right to education. Such assistance will not be available to people living in Britain, with the exception of disabled people, who will be able to seek assistance from the proposed disability rights commission. Whether it is fair that people in Northern Ireland should have access to such support when people in Britain do not is surely a matter on which, at the very least, the Government should consult.

The Northern Ireland Office does not expect the human rights commission in Belfast to provide guidance to public bodies on their new responsibilities under the Human Rights Act, on the grounds that the provision of such guidance for public bodies throughout the UK will be the responsibility of the Home Office. That therefore leaves a gap.

Finally, there is the third step which the clause asks the Government to take in order to inform Parliament of the outcome of the consultation exercise that they have been invited to put in hand. On a number of occasions, the Government have suggested that Parliament should establish a human rights committee, and have proposed that the committee's first inquiry could be into the question of a human rights commission. We do not know when such a committee is to be established. The House has not considered it, and such a committee is clearly not in place.

It would be appropriate for that committee, if and when it is in place, to be informed of the outcome of the Government's consultation on the kind of arrangements that they think are appropriate and necessary for the Bill, so that it can then consider the issue and in turn make its own recommendation. If the Government fail to take the lead in conducting such a consultation exercise, there will inevitably be a long delay before the human rights committee could give the Government its view—a delay at the very moment when public bodies are in most need of the kind of support that the Act will mean they require.

During that time, the Government would have to be the principal source of guidance to public bodies, and individuals in Britain will have no statutory body to which they can turn for advice and assistance in taking cases under the Act.

Furthermore, it is my firm belief, based upon some little experience of the ombudsman model in Britain—it works well because a committee of the House, of the kind which has been proposed with the human rights committee, is linked to an external agency—that such a model is needed here if the measure is to be effective. It is because the ombudsman's office and the committee here work in partnership that the model is so effective. One is not a substitute for the other: they should properly be seen as complementary.

I have no desire to invite the Government to invent another quango. I am a fully paid-up member of the quango hunters club, and I have a track record to prove it. A body is only invented when there is a task to be done. I am persuaded—it is a view shared by almost every organisation that has been consulted on the matter—that for the Bill to be effective it will require some underpinning machinery, and that is what the clause affords. If the answer is to be, which it has, albeit obliquely, been, that all machinery is expensive, there is a moment when we have to decide whether we believe in something. If we do and we want it to be effective, it must be sustained and not be trumped by the Treasury saying, "It will cost tuppence ha'penny so we must not have it."

When Back Benchers are being difficult, they always say that they are being helpful, but I intend to be helpful here. New clause 3 is entirely in the spirit of everything that the Government have previously said about the measure. They have talked about the need for further machinery to support the Bill, they have said that they are not persuaded about a particular model—the human rights commission—but that they want to explore the matter further and want the relevant bodies to come to a view. The need for that is still there. The clause translates that acknowledgement of need into some mechanism for doing something about it.

The Bill, hugely important though it is, is only the beginning of a process which will strengthen and extend human rights in Britain. It needs some supporting machinery so that its potential can be fulfilled; the clause enables the Government to ensure that that happens.

5.45 pm

Mr. James Clappison (Hertsmere): I am sure that the House will agree that we have just listened to a thoughtful speech by the hon. Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright). He has clearly given much thought to the consequences of the incorporation of the European convention and the way in which the Government have chosen to achieve that. The House will have listened carefully to the hon. Gentleman, who takes a great interest in these matters. In many ways, he proceeds from the worthiest of motives. He seeks to uphold the human rights culture, as he puts it, and to give the Government advice on the best way to implement the Bill.

The hon. Gentleman gave a long and considered list of possible ways in which the human rights convention could give rise to legal action and, while all are in favour of upholding human rights, it is to be hoped that that will not be at the expense of a descent into sheer litigiousness, which did seem possible from what the hon. Gentleman was saying. We do not want to see the European convention cropping up in every nook and cranny of our relationships with others, but after listening to the hon. Gentleman's speech that seemed a possible outcome.

The hon. Gentleman proceeds from the worthiest of motives. He seeks to improve and underpin the Bill but, in doing so, he has exposed for all to see one of the glaring weaknesses in the Bill's structural foundation. There is much to be said for what the hon. Gentleman is seeking to require the Secretary of State to do—to consult about the Bill's implementation and to give long-term advice and assistance to public authorities—but what he proposes has one glaring problem which we have come up against time and again in our consideration of the Bill.

New clause 3 requires the Secretary of State to consult public authorities and to give them advice and assistance, but at this point no one can say who or what a public authority is. There is no list in the Bill. The Under-Secretary smiles. He is aware of the problems that this has caused, and he knows the point. It is there for all to see in the Bill. A public authority is a court or tribunal and any person some of whose functions are functions of a public nature.

As the hon. Member for Cannock Chase said, that will include a wide range of organisations, persons and bodies who at this moment may not necessarily feel that they are public authorities. But any of those organisations, which may be private organisations for many purposes, when they carry out a function of a public nature may become a public authority, subject to the provisions of the European convention and therefore at risk of litigation for alleged breach of the convention. That will catch a wide range of organisations. The hon. Member for Cannock Chase gave some examples, and even mentioned charities such as Barnardos. A wide range of people could be brought within the ambit of the Bill.

It is difficult at this stage to say what a public authority is. That is the problem that the Government have come up against in the past. We can go back to a much earlier stage of the Bill and look at the view of an esteemed lawyer, someone who is much wiser than I am in these matters: none other than the Lord Chancellor. In another place he gave the considered opinion, when asked, that the Press Complaints Commission was not a public authority. He then received even more learned and distinguished legal advice—it came from one of my constituents who happens to be a lawyer, so I have to call it learned. That person told the Lord Chancellor that it was possible for the Press Complaints Commission to be a public authority. The Lord Chancellor then had to go back and say that he was wrong.

I am a great admirer of the Lord Chancellor. We are fortunate in having a Lord Chancellor who is so wise that it is good when he is right and even better when he is wrong. He said that it was marvellous for the Press Complaints Commission to be a public authority, because, as such, it would have all the protections available to it under the European convention.

That is an example of the problems that can arise. It is not only an esteemed legal authority such as the Lord Chancellor who has had some difficulty in saying what a public authority is. In another place, Lord Donaldson highlighted this as one of the problems of the Bill. He gave a long list of examples, rather like that given by the hon. Member for Cannock Chase, as to what may or may not constitute a public authority. He referred to a public authority as anything that is an emanation of the state, any arm of local government or central Government, and courts and tribunals—they are in the Bill. But his list went on. He said that he believed that it could include the BBC, ITV and the press. He asked:

"is Safeways conducting a business of a public nature?—[Official Report, House of Lords, 13 November 1997; Vol. 582, c. 1293.]

He came to the conclusion that it probably was not, but he could not say why. A wide range of organisations and persons will be brought within the definition of a public authority.

We cannot support the hon. Member for Cannock Chase, because we cannot ask the Secretary of State to consult public authorities when it is difficult, if not impossible, to say what a public authority is. The words of the hon. Member for Cannock Chase contain a clear warning that many people should heed. There are many organisations and bodies which may think that they are perfectly private in what they do, but which may brought within the ambit of the Bill as a result of the way the Government have chosen to incorporate the European convention in our law. In the future, they may face all the problems and difficulties that come with litigation.

The hon. Member for Cannock Chase is right to the extent that people need to be aware of the problem that will emerge as a result of the Government's whole approach to this matter.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross): The hon. Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright) was right to draw attention to the wide consequences of the Bill and its broad impact on many aspects of public administration. He was right to draw attention to the need for advice to be made available. Before the election, the Government recognised that quite clearly, and put their hand to an agreement with the Liberal Democrats indicating that they would favour the establishment of a human rights commissioner or commission or a similar public body to discharge that responsibility. It is a matter of some disappointment that the Home Secretary has not felt able to continue the undertakings he gave before entering his high office.

The intellectual basis of the Home Secretary's objection to introducing a human rights commissioner or commission at this stage appears to rest upon the difficulty of reaching agreement about the form it might take, particularly as there are already a number of bodies in existence, to which the hon. Member for Cannock Chase referred in passing, in the context of race relations and equal opportunities, whose roles have not been defined.

Since the introduction of the Northern Ireland legislation and the provisions for setting up a commission in Northern Ireland to deal with exactly the functions in respect of Great Britain with which a human rights commission would be dealing, the basis for objection has disappeared. It seems to be boiling down to nothing more than a penny-pinching unwillingness to foot the bill of establishing a human rights commission. That may prove to be not only penny-pinching but pound foolish, since it is quite possible to envisage—the hon. Member for Cannock Chase did envisage this—that many people might embark upon litigation who might otherwise not do so. That could result in substantial public expenditure in answering cases that might, advisedly, not have been brought.

I have predicted that there will not be a landslide of litigation arising out of this Bill. I do not believe that there is so much action by public authorities or legislation on the statute book that runs foul of the human rights convention that we could anticipate the need for such a lot of litigation. However, people will try their hand, and they are more likely to do so if they are not given the sort of advice that would be available from bodies cognate to the European Commission of Human Rights and the Equal Opportunities Commission in the wider field of human rights.

It is clear that the House should view with sympathy the new clause tabled by the hon. Member for Cannock Chase. I fear that he will not persuade the Government of the basic case for establishing a human rights commission at this stage, so his new clause does not seek to go down that route. It seeks to impose a duty on the Secretary of State to act in substitution for the role of a human rights commissioner.

I suggest that that might have some dangers for the legislation. I agree that the provision of advice and the provision of guidance to public authorities is necessary, but I do not think that that advice should be a prescription of law prior to the enactment of the legislation. There is some doubt at this stage as to the Government's intentions with respect to giving effect to the legislation. What is to be the operative date? When will the order be made under clause 22(3)? Will it be long delayed? I profoundly hope not.

The Government have put in train some work and have found some money to carry out a programme of judicial education on the consequences of the Bill becoming law. However, there can be no public policy merit in a long delay in giving effect to the will of Parliament that, as the Government's White Paper says, rights should be brought home.

I fear that, if we were to accept new clause 3, it could mean the Government embarking upon extensive consultations with public authorities before giving the date for implementation. If one is to follow the argument of the hon. Member for Cannock Chase, that process would be extensive, with many bodies involved. It could lead to a great deal of uncertainty if the Government cannot provide legal advice about the effect of their legislation in this or any other area, in an authoritative and binding way. Governments are reluctant to do that, for example in taxation. We would not normally argue that a tax bill should not be implemented until its provisions have been fully understood by those to whom it may apply. The same must be said about this legislation: we cannot wait for the Government to provide advice before giving effect to the Bill.

Although I have considerable sympathy with the arguments outlined by the hon. Member for Cannock Chase, and share his broad view about the necessity, if we are to avoid confusion and unnecessary public expenditure, of establishing a public body to fulfil the functions that he described, I cannot bring myself to suggest that the House would be wise to vote for new clause 3. He has, however, performed a valuable service in highlighting the potential problems and the need for the Government to address them. None the less, the manner in which he suggests they should be addressed is inappropriate.

I reaffirm my view and that of my right hon. and hon. Friends that the Government should commit themselves to the modest expenditure of establishing a human rights commission at an early date.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Mike O'Brien): I think that this is the first intervention that my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright) has made in the parliamentary proceedings on this Bill. I welcome his speech, which he delivered with his customary eloquence, and, most importantly, his "non-lawyerly" eloquence. We must all pay heed to his theme of consultation and guidance if we are to ensure that the Bill is a success.

Clause 22(3) provides for most of the Bill's provisions to be brought into force on such day as the Secretary of State may by order appoint. New clause 3 would require the Secretary of State to carry out certain actions before making such an order. One is to provide guidance to public authorities on what they need to do to avoid breaching people's convention rights under the Bill. In general, our laws and procedures comply with the convention. When in the past they have been found by the European Court of Human Rights not to do so, successive Administrations have had a good record of taking action to bring them into line. However, the Bill will render alleged breaches of the convention rights liable to challenge much more easily and quickly in our domestic courts.

We agree that Government Departments and other public authorities should review their legislation and procedures for compatibility with the convention, and consider what amendments are feasible. We are considering ways of providing guidance to help that process along. We shall issue a guidance booklet on the Bill, and provide an overview of the Bill and the convention rights. It will provide advice to help Government Departments and other public authorities comply with their obligations under the Bill. Drafting is at an early stage, but we hope to issue the guidance early in the new year.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will say a little more about our implementation plans when he moves Third Reading shortly. Those will include the establishment of a task force of non-governmental organisations and Government representatives, which will help the Government to prepare for implementation. It is unnecessary to insert in the Bill a provision that expressly requires the Government to provide guidance. No one doubts that guidance is needed before the legislation can begin to operate.

We have reservations about another of my hon. Friend's proposals—to consult on the most effective long-term arrangements, including the options for establishing a human rights commission, to provide advice and assistance to public authorities and those whose convention rights might be breached by their actions.

We do not object to consultation on the human rights convention. Indeed, we would want to encourage discussion on the issue, because there is a lack of consensus, as the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan) said. That is evidenced in recent documents, such as the book published only last week by the Institute for Public Policy Research, which presents markedly different proposals from those that will operate in Northern Ireland. Thus there is a wide debate yet to be had.

[Mr. Mike O'Brien]

The important point is that the Secretary of State would be prevented from enacting the Bill until he had consulted on the options for a human rights commission. As the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross said, that could be a prolonged process, particularly if a parliamentary committee on human rights wished to consider the matter. We could not guarantee when it would publish the results of its consideration. It might wish to take evidence, or want the matter to be the subject of a much wider public debate. Implementation of the legislation would therefore have to hang on the completion of that.

As we made clear in the White Paper "Rights Brought Home", which we published last year, our priority is our manifesto commitment to give effect to the convention rights in our domestic law. Establishing a human rights commission in Great Britain is not central to that objective, which is why it does not form part of the Bill.

Before taking the matter further, we want to see how the Bill operates in practice, and to give the proposed parliamentary committee on human rights an opportunity to examine the detailed issues surrounding the establishment of a commission in Great Britain. We do not have a closed mind on the issue of a human rights commission; on the contrary, we want to encourage a healthy debate on it. However, tying the Bill's implementation to some form of statutory consultation would not be helpful, but would merely tie the Secretary of State's hands.

We already know that there is far from being a consensus on this matter. The Equal Opportunities Commission has its own views on its future and how it might tie into a human rights commission. The Commission for Racial Equality has somewhat ambivalent views and has shifted one way and another on the matter. It now seems to suggest that it is in favour, but it is a somewhat lukewarm view. The IPPR's proposals envisage a federal structure involving the CRE and the EOC being part of a human rights commission while operating independently on equal opportunities issues. The way in which any structure would work is still vague, and we do not know whether it would bring benefits. Much more discussion is needed.

The passing of the Bill will do much that my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase seeks. He seeks access to human rights; the Bill will provide that access for ordinary individuals in our courts. He seeks to develop a human rights culture; the Bill will provide the basis for developing that culture in our country.

The hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) rehearsed some of the arguments on definitions of public authorities. If he will forgive me, I shall not pursue him down that route, because the House has already discussed the issue at length. However, I wish to touch on a couple of points made by the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross. He said—I have some sympathy with his view—that he did not share the fears of the hon. Member for Hertsmere or the view of my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase that there will be a landslide of litigation. There will be a settling-in period in which the courts will have to resolve a number of issues, but I, too, do not anticipate a massive landslide which will overwhelm the courts, or anything like that. The fears on that account are, as we shall see in due course, likely to be unfounded.

We must start to develop a discussion on these issues. I cannot agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase that, somehow, the Bill will fail or be less of a success without a human rights commission. There has been criticism that the Bill will fail to achieve the Government's objectives unless it has what my hon. Friend described as the "underpinning" of a human rights commission. We do not accept that. The purpose of the Bill is to give access to convention rights in our courts, rather than people having to incur the cost and delay of going to Strasbourg.

Remedies will be nearer home, and I believe that people will seek them. They will not lack advice. There is tremendous interest in the Bill among non-governmental organisations, the legal profession and academics. I have not the slightest doubt that learned books on how the Bill will affect everyone will be published shortly after it is passed. The result will be the beginning of the strong development of a human rights culture in this country.

A commission is not essential to ensure compliance with convention rights by the Government or public authorities, or to ensure that Parliament can properly carry out its functions of scrutinising legislation. The Bill provides for Ministers to make statements about the compatibility of Government Bills with convention rights, which we believe will enhance the scrutiny of such Bills within the Government. We have also said that we would support the creation of a parliamentary human rights committee with a range of functions relating to human rights.

There are a number of sources of advice, and the fears expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock Chase about lack of advice will not come to pass. The Bill will deliver what the Government intend. The issue of the human rights commission can be resolved later; there needs to be greater consensus before we move on that. I hope that my hon. Friend will not seek to tie the hands of the Government by pressing the new clause. In view of what I have said, I ask him to withdraw it.

Dr. Tony Wright: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for those remarks. He said at the outset that this is my first intervention during the passage of the Bill. Indeed it is. Until this point, I had believed, perhaps mistakenly, that I was constrained, as parliamentary private secretary to a Minister closely associated with the Bill, from taking part. If that is not the case, it is good news. As is well known, parliamentary private secretaries are the castrati of political life. I am enjoying having my vital organs returned to me, which explains the nature of my remarks.

Mr. O'Brien: If my hon. Friend had been constrained, or thought that he had been constrained, in any way, the House would have missed his contribution, which I very much welcome. We are all the better for it.

Dr. Wright: That is enough mutual flattery, but I agree with my hon. Friend about one thing: lots of learned books will be published. There is no question that the Bill is good news for academics and terribly good news for lawyers—there will be lots of trade. The point of the new clause is to show that citizens are involved, too, and that public bodies will be affected by the Bill. We need to provide assistance for them, and they need to get part of the action, too.

I am slightly puzzled by what the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan) said, because there was an agreement between my party and his that we were committed to a human rights commission. Whatever else the new clause does, it keeps the door open on the idea of such a commission, which his remarks would close. I am puzzled, not for the first time, by what Liberal Democrats say. Although I am one of those who are always in favour of co-operative politics, I sometimes find theory easier than practice.

What my hon. Friend the Minister said about setting up a task force is interesting. We know that we like task forces—we have a great proclivity for them, and they are useful institutions—but they are not the same as the mechanism that I propose, and should not be confused with it, because they do not provide those support mechanisms.

My new clause does not propose the establishment of a human rights commission. It simply states that there should be consultation about the most appropriate arrangements with which to underpin the Bill, one of which might be a commission. It could not be a more helpful and open-ended new clause, and I am disappointed that the Government cannot support it.

This is one of those occasions on which the House—if it did what it wanted to do or did what it would do if it knew what it was doing—would probably bless a new clause of this kind. Indeed, early-day motions have expressed wide support for it, and we have all kinds of evidence that the outside community, which knows about these things, is in favour, but the House will not support it, even though it would like to, because that is how we operate.

I shall endeavour to keep myself cheerful by hanging on to the words about doors not being closed. I hope that they are true, and that the Government will return to the matter, which is extremely important. Those of us who wish the Bill well and have campaigned for it for a long time think that a commission should be an essential support for it.

I know that this will bring good cheer all round: in trying to cheer myself up, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion and clause, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 2

INTERPRETATION OF CONVENTION RIGHTS

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I beg to move amendment No. 5, in page 2, line 1, leave out 'under this Act'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: Government amendments Nos. 6 to 22, 24 to 30, 36 and 37.

Mr. O'Brien: This is an array of minor and technical amendments concerned mainly with the operation of the devolution legislation. In particular, the Bill and the Northern Ireland Bill need to be made consistent with each other, and hon. Members may remember that we undertook a similar exercise in Committee in respect of Scotland and Wales. I am happy to answer questions on the detail of the amendments, but I anticipate that the substance of the debate will relate to the Opposition's remedial orders proposals. Unless hon. Members want me to go through the detail, it may be convenient to move on. No one is suggesting that I should go through all the amendments, so I propose to move on to some of the points that may be raised by the Opposition.

Amendments Nos. 40 and 41 would add to clause 10—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are not dealing with that group of amendments. We are dealing with a group of Government amendments. The Minister cannot speak to amendments which have not yet been moved.

Mr. O'Brien: I am grateful for that guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I commend Government amendment No. 5 to the House.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 6, in page 2, line 17, at end insert—

'(aa) by the Lord Chancellor or the Secretary of State, in relation to any proceedings outside Scotland;'.

No. 7, in page 2, line 19, leave out lines 19 and 20 and insert—

'(b) by a Northern Ireland department, in relation to proceedings before a tribunal in Northern Ireland—

(i) which deals with transferred matters; and

(ii) for which no rules made under paragraph (aa) are in force.'.—[Mr. Mike O'Brien.]

Clause 5

RIGHT OF CROWN TO INTERVENE

Amendment made: No. 8, in page 3, line 21, at end insert—

'( ) a Northern Ireland Minister,

( ) a Northern Ireland department,'.—[Mr. Mike O'Brien.]

Clause 7

PROCEEDINGS

Amendments made: No. 9, in page 5, line 2, at end insert—

'(aa) in relation to proceedings before a court or tribunal outside Scotland, rules made by the Lord Chancellor or the Secretary of State for the purposes of this section or rules of court,'.

No. 10, in page 5, line 4, leave out and insert 'those purposes'.

'the purposes of this section'

No. 11, in page 5, line 5, leave out from 'before' to end of line 7 and insert

'a tribunal in Northern Ireland—

(i) which deals with transferred matters; and

(ii) for which no rules made under paragraph (aa) are in force, rules made by a Northern Ireland department for those purposes,'.

No. 12, in page 5, line 20, at end insert—

'( ) "The Minister" includes the Northern Ireland department concerned.'.—[Mr. Mike O'Brien.]

Clause 10

POWER TO TAKE REMEDIAL ACTION

Mr. Garnier: I beg to move amendment No. 38, in page 6, line 34, leave out Clause 10.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 40, in page 7, line 17, at end insert—

'(3A) For the purposes of this section, "compelling reasons" shall be taken to exist where, and only where, a failure to proceed under this section would be likely to jeopardise national security, public health, or the liberty of an individual.'.

No. 41, in page 7, line 17, at end insert—

'(3B) Where the Secretary of State considers that there are compelling reasons for proceeding under this section, he shall, before or at the same time as laying before Parliament a remedial order or draft remedial order, lay before Parliament a written statement of those reasons.'.

No. 39, in schedule 2, page 18, line 36, leave out Schedule 2.

Mr. Garnier: We had an interesting discussion about clause 10 in Committee last June. It is appropriate to revisit some of the arguments that were deployed on that occasion while discussing these amendments. We are returning to this debate on clause 10, which gives the Government the power to amend the law by using a fast-track procedure, because we remain convinced that it is wrong in principle. We have stated that in Committee and my noble Friends have made the point in the other place. On both occasions, the Government have not provided us with any compelling answers.

Bluntly, the clause is designed to increase the power of Ministers, to diminish the role of Parliament, and to weaken our democracy. At this point, I imagine that the Home Secretary wishes to leap to his feet to say that I am being unfair, that this is merely a fallback procedure, and that clause 10(2) makes it clear that it can be used only if a Minister of the Crown considers that there are compelling reasons for doing so.

I shall explore that proviso in a minute, but first I must emphasise that this basic provision, designed to bypass our normal parliamentary procedures, is just one more facet of the Government's attack on our constitution, aimed at increasing the power of the Executive and diminishing the power of the people, through their elected representatives in Parliament, to hold the Government to account.

We are witnessing this centralising grip in every aspect of the Government's so-called modernisation—that grossly over-used word—of our constitution. We see it in their insistence on list systems for elections to the European Parliament: power is taken from the people and given to the party. We see it in the Prime Minister's proposals for proportional representation, as evidenced by the Jenkins commission, which is rigged in its composition and rigged in its terms of reference. We see it in the Prime Minister's half-baked proposals for the so-called reform of the other place, which abolish the rights of hereditary peers because they are undemocratic and based on the patronage of the past, only to substitute them with a system of patronage and nepotism in which all the power is placed in the hands of—surprise, surprise—the present and much-revered Prime Minister.

Those systems are wrong, and—to give him his due—the Home Secretary knows that they are wrong. It is precisely because he knows that they are wrong in relation to the Bill that he has introduced what is now clause 10(2), which provides that the fast-track system may be used only if Ministers consider that there are compelling reasons to do so. It is further fair to the Home Secretary to say that it is reported that he has strong objections to abolishing our tried and tested system for electing Members of Parliament and replacing it with a system of proportional representation. He, at least, is said to understand that that is wrong for a host of reasons, but particularly because it diminishes the power of the people to choose not only their elected representatives but the complexion of their Government.

We start from the position where even the Government recognise that their proposals for the fast-track procedure—for the diminution of Parliament—are wrong in principle, yet they persist with them. I question whether they understand why they are wrong in principle. I am not sure that they do.

The European convention on human rights is not a system for making laws: it is not a substitute for Parliament. It is a broad framework within which all our laws should be framed and with which our laws must comply. The courts will tell us, after due argument, whether some aspect of our law is incompatible, but it is not for the courts to redesign those laws. They are not equipped to do so. It would be wholly undemocratic if they were to attempt to do so. That is the role of Parliament. What possible justification is there for the Government to diminish the role of Parliament? What are the compelling reasons which are to entitle Ministers to override the rights of the people and of our electorates to be represented in these matters by their chosen representatives? We are not told.

The Government have proposed no definition. I can find nothing in the previous pronouncements of the Home Secretary, the Lord Chancellor or of any Ministers, here or in the other place, to pin down the circumstances in which these compelling reasons will be considered by Ministers to exist. It is not that there will be too many of these changes and that it would clutter up Parliament. We are told repeatedly by the Lord Chancellor and the Home Secretary that we expect changes to primary legislation to be rare. I said in Committee in June that there have been only 13 such changes in the 32 years since 1966, when we first granted the right of individual petition to citizens to take their cases to Strasbourg.

Even if there were to be a significant increase in the number of these cases, does that not make it all the more important that there should be full and proper parliamentary scrutiny of any changes to the law? As the Home Secretary knows, I am a lawyer and I have a high respect for lawyers and judges, as does my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), who is sitting beside me. However, we are not to be ruled by judges, and the courts are not the right place for making laws. The people are not represented in the courts. The judge has to decide the issues brought to him by individual litigants. The duty of the lawyers representing their clients is not to the public at large, and it is not even to the programme of a party tested before the electorate, but to the aim of winning that particular case to protect the immediate interests of that individual litigant.

The cases to be expected are not all that many, but the issues are seldom trivial. Perhaps the Minister or the Home Secretary will tell us whether triviality is one of the grounds for deciding that the reasons are compelling. Most of the cases involve great issues of real difficulty. Let me illustrate that by reference to the three cases that we all know to be outstanding and requiring legislative change at the present time. I correct myself, because only two cases are now outstanding, as Chahal no longer applies following the immigration legislation that was passed just before the recess.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North–East Bedfordshire has tabled a parliamentary question to the Home Secretary to ask him how many cases he knows of at the moment, but we know of two: Bowman and the recent case about the rights of parents to chastise or not to chastise their children. Both those cases involve complex issues about the liberty of the subject and the security of the state. Are they to be regarded as compelling reasons? I ask that question forensically, as our probing amendment suggests that national security and public health may be compelling reasons for a fast-track procedure, but I emphasise that this is merely a probing amendment. When we have debated it, I intend, with the leave of the House, to withdraw it, for the very consideration of those issues shows how inappropriate it would be in many cases.

Is Parliament not to have a full opportunity to discuss the nature of the necessary court procedures? Is it not to have a full opportunity to discuss, amend and test the Government's proposals in relation to national security, or is the whole thing to be rammed through in a simple three-hour debate and one vote at the behest of the Government of the day? I have observed the number of people in the Chamber this evening, and in the Committee during our debates in June. I do not expect all Members of Parliament to be present for every debate, but it is instructive that all parties are pretty thinly represented this evening. Matters on which we are deciding now and which will be dealt with by remedial orders at the behest of Ministers deserve greater attention, and I fear that they will not get the House's attention in the three-hour debates that clause 10 foreshadows.

The case raised by Bowman is illustrative. We were disappointed, frankly, that the present Attorney-General, for whatever reason, did not go to Strasbourg to argue the case himself. He is an elected Member of Parliament and understands, as probably nobody else in that court building does, the care with which our electoral law has been framed. Now, if we are not careful, a coach and horses is to be driven through that system.

My right hon. and learned Friend touched earlier on the case involving the Society for the Protection of Unborn Children and Mrs. Phylis Bowman. They oppose, as is their democratic right, our present abortion laws, and delivered 25,000 leaflets to every household in the constituency of the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) personally attacking her for her pro-abortion views on the subject, which differed strongly from their own.

It was the personal attack on the hon. Lady that fell foul of our election law. The society was perfectly entitled to deliver leaflets expressing its views on the issue, and inviting each voter to take that issue heavily into account in deciding how to vote. What happened, however—and what will happen if others are permitted to do likewise—was that our system of a balance of arms, or equality of spending, which governs most people's view of what is a fair system, was deeply undercut. As I have said, we do not know the Government's view. Perhaps they propose to consult—but will they say that, whatever their own conclusion, this is a suitable case to ram through via the fast-track procedure and a debate lasting a mere three hours?

6.30 pm

Then there is the question of the extent to which parents may or may not punish their children. Our present law permits what is described as reasonable chastisement. In one case, a British jury held that the caning administered was not unreasonable. It must be said—with respect to the court—that that may have been a surprising decision. In any event, in recent years the court has on the whole been careful to give a proper margin of appreciation, as the phrase goes—to give proper discretion—to individual member states on domestic matters such as this.

Now the British Government must decide what to do about a delicate and difficult issue, which should be subject to full debate, with a proper opportunity for amendment and reflection on the part of both Houses. It is not suitable for such a measure to be pushed through by means of an unamendable order after a three-hour debate. I am sure that the Minister will accept that, even if he accepts nothing else that is said by the Opposition. Our first request to the Government, and to the Home Secretary, is simply for them to drop clause 10 and to accept our amendment, which would remove it and schedule 2.

The Home Secretary does not need these powers. He has shown us no "compelling reasons" why he should have them, either in terms of business management or in terms of advantage to the citizen—although I suspect that business management may underlie the Government's proposals.

Schedule 2 also demonstrates the Government's growing disregard of Parliament. First, there is its Henry VIII quality. Paragraph 1(1) states:

"A remedial order may . . . contain such incidental, supplemental, consequential or transitional provision as the person making it considers appropriate".

Paragraph 1(2) states that those powers include

"power to amend or repeal primary legislation"— including both primary and subordinate legislation—

"other than that which contains the incompatible provision".

Consequential or transitional provisions might be reasonable, but how do the Government propose to justify incidental and supplemental provisions?

What is more, the whole procedure becomes increasingly unparliamentary. To allow for the normal and proper requirements of primary legislation, the schedule provides for draft orders to be laid and for representations to be summarised. As I said in Committee, the power to edit is a power that editors are loth to give up. The power to summarise is a power that sub-editors are loth to give up. I am afraid that, when the power to summarise representations is given to the relevant Minister, my alarm bells start ringing in clarion.

Changes as a result of representations are to be explained, but what is the excuse for going outside normal parliamentary procedures? Not only do our normal procedures hold the Government to account; they are faster and more flexible than the procedures that are being proposed. The aim is plainly to bypass Parliament and enhance the power of the Executive—and all this is in the name of modernisation.

During our last debate, I crudely commented that clause 10 constituted not so much a Henry VIII clause as a Henry XVI clause. Despite the crudity of my analogy, I do not resile from it. Our request is this: we ask the Government to drop both clause 10 and schedule 2. They will be perfectly able to proceed with primary legislation when faced with a declaration of incompatibility.

We all await with interest the Government's answers to our questions. What are these "compelling reasons" for overriding the rights of the people in Parliament? Where and how will the fast-track procedure benefit the citizen? Is the truth that behind this unjustified measure lies not the good sense of the Home Secretary, but the requirements of his Whips—the business managers—the jackboot of the new Government enforcer and the disregard of Parliament for which the Prime Minister's reputation is increasing daily?

The clause, and the schedule, will return to haunt this Government and this Prime Minister. They will —I trust— be one of the factors that will wipe the smile from the Prime Minister's face in the coming weeks and months. Clause 10 is a dangerous clause, and schedule 2 is a dangerous schedule. I invite the House to agree with us that the Government ought to consider the issue rather more maturely.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I suspect that the Prime Minister's smile will be reinforced when the Bill is passed, and we ensure that human rights are enhanced and ordinary citizens are given access to their rights. That is what the Bill is really about.

The hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) commented on the number of hon. Members present. I, too, regret the lack of attenders, but I noted earlier that the number of those present was roughly proportionate to party membership in the House, although it occurred to me that our proposals did not seem to have caused a large number of Opposition Members to rush into the Chamber and express their outrage. Perhaps that is because we cantered through many of the arguments in Committee—although I noted then that not many hon. Members were expressing such outrage.

Mr. Garnier: I am not going to express outrage. I simply wish to remind the Minister gently that mine was not a party political point but a parliamentary point—a House of Commons point. The fact that I was able to make it, although my party is largely unrepresented this evening, reinforces my good will.

Mr. O'Brien: In a sense, I accept that good will. I agree that it would have been better for far more hon. Members to attend our debates, given the importance of the subject. Mine is a different point, however. My point is that, if Opposition Members had been enormously concerned—if they had felt that our proposals matched the hyperbole that the hon. and learned Gentleman employed at the beginning of his speech—I suspect that far more of them would have been present, complaining about what the Government are doing. That has not happened, because the Government have proceeded thoughtfully and constructively throughout consideration of the Bill, in an attempt to ensure that we take on board the points made by Opposition Members—as well as our hon. Friends—and construct a lasting provision that will genuinely enhance human rights in this country.

Let me deal with the details. Amendments Nos. 40 and 41 would add two new subsections to clause 10. At present, clause 10(2) provides that, if a Minister of the Crown considers that there are compelling reasons for proceeding under clause 10, he may by order make such amendments to the legislation as he considers necessary to remove the incompatibility. Amendment No. 40 would limit "compelling reasons" to cases in which a failure to proceed would be likely to jeopardise national security, public health or the liberty of the individual. Amendment No. 41 would require the Secretary of State—before or at the same time as laying before Parliament a remedial order or draft remedial order—to lay before Parliament a written statement of those reasons.

The requirement for compelling reasons in clause 10(2) is itself a response to concern expressed here and in another place about the remedial order provisions. It is there to make it absolutely clear that a remedial order is not a routine response in preference to fresh primary legislation. We would not want to go further, as in amendment No. 40, and limit "compelling reasons" to the three categories mentioned. There may be other circumstances that constitute compelling reasons sufficient to justify a remedial order: for example, a decision of the higher courts in relation to basic provisions of criminal procedure affecting the way in which, perhaps, all criminal cases must be handled.

An example is a provision that might invalidate a crucial part of the codes of practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, or provisions relating to the detention of suspects. Therefore, there are a number of issues where we would want to proceed with care. We also might need to respond very quickly simply to avoid the criminal justice system in such cases either collapsing or not being able to deliver justice and proper convictions.

"Compelling" is a strong word. We see no need to define it by reference to particular categories. In both the outstanding cases that the hon. and learned Member for Harborough has put to me, our view is likely to be that those would not create the compelling reasons that would justify a remedial order. In any event, on those issues—electoral law and chastising children—everyone would expect primary legislation rather than a remedial order. I hope that that gives some reassurance.

I noted that the hon. and learned Member for Harborough said that this is, in a sense, a probing amendment. He has asked me some clear questions about how we would perceive those two cases and I hope that those are clear answers. We do not expect that those will be the sort of issues in which remedial orders would be likely.

On amendment No. 41, if Conservative Members look at schedule 2, they will find that a document must be laid before Parliament containing certain information. It must explain the incompatibility that the remedial order or draft remedial order seeks to remove, and it must state the reasons for proceeding under clause 10 and for making an order in the terms in which it is made.

Therefore, the document is bound to explain why the Government believe that there are compelling reasons for making a remedial order and what those are. The document must be laid before Parliament and will be available for the debate in each House on the motion for affirmative resolution, which will be necessary before a draft remedial order can be made, or in order for an urgent remedial order to continue in existence, so amendment No. 41 is unnecessary.

The approach in amendments Nos. 38 and 39 is more extreme. They would simply remove clause 10 and schedule 2, so that there would be no procedure at all for amending legislation by order to remove an incompatibility with the convention rights. That raises the principle whether it is right, even in tightly drawn circumstances, to amend primary legislation by order.

It would be open to the Government to take no action in response to a declaration of incompatibility—that issue has already been rehearsed during this afternoon's debates—but, where a declaration is made, a Government who are committed to promoting human rights, as we are, will want to do something about the law in question. It is possible for primary legislation to be introduced and passed quickly, but the pressures on the timetable can make it very difficult to find a slot.

The power to make a remedial order is there for cases where there is a very good reason to amend the law following a declaration of incompatibility or a finding by the Strasbourg court, but no suitable legislative vehicle is available. Where a remedial order is made or proposed, we accepted that the procedures for parliamentary scrutiny needed to be strengthened. That is why the requirement to provide a document containing all the relevant information and a statement providing a summary of any representations on an order or draft order was added to schedule 2 in Committee.

We think that we have the balance right here. Clause 10 and schedule 2 enable Parliament to fulfil its responsibilities and ensure that onerous powers are not given to the Government. Our proposals safeguard parliamentary procedures and sovereignty, ensure proper supervision of our laws and ensure that we can begin to get the ability both to enforce human rights law and to create a human rights culture. They also ensure that we can do it in the context of not having to worry that, if something is decided by the Strasbourg court or by our courts that creates an incompatibility, we do not have a mechanism to deal with it in the quick and efficient way that may be necessary.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I am grateful to the Minister for what he has said, and, to some extent, I think that he has sought to meet the criticisms that we have made. The only pity is that the logical outcome of his argument is that he should accept our demand that clause 10 and schedule 2 be dropped from the Bill.

I have done my best to listen very carefully—I notice the Minister frowning at those strong words—but I want to focus on the portion of his speech where he sought to describe the sort of case where normal parliamentary procedure would be ridden over and where we would go to the remedial order procedure.

The thing about the remedial order procedure—this is the frightening thing and why it is worrying that the Chamber is not fuller—is that it creates a parallel system to Parliament that does not fully engage Parliament. Schedule 2 sets up a system whereby the Government put out their ideas, consult for 60 days, come to Parliament, say what they are going to do as a result of their consultation, and then ram their provisions straight through Parliament.

If we are going to have that extra parliamentary procedure, which to some extent mirrors our normal parliamentary procedures, why do we not stick with the parliamentary procedures themselves? That has not been properly explained by the Minister or the Home Secretary. This is simply put forward as some sort of reason for hastening things on. It is not good enough.

If the Government are going to wait for 60 days while they consult, the immediate urgency is removed. If in rare cases—I think that it is generally agreed that these cases would be rare—they have to use this fast-track procedure, they need to get on quickly. They are not going to be able to get on much more quickly than if they come to the House.

I have been in the House for nearly 20 years. Time and again, the Opposition have accepted sensible remedial legislation fairly rapidly by consensus. It is rare that sensible and uncontroversial amendments to the law—as a result, for example, of a respected ruling by an international body such as the European Court of Justice in Strasbourg—are made the opportunity for parliamentary hay-making and obstruction. Therefore, to create a new and parallel system that is far less effective than the proper systems of Parliament is wrong in principle.

The Minister sought to find an example where this rapid procedure is needed. I may have missed something that he said, and I hope that he will remind me if I have, but the only example that I thought I heard him mention was the need to amend codes of practice under PACE. Did the Minister mention another example?

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The other example was some basis on which suspects may be held.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: Both those examples fall by the wayside, for this reason. As I understand it, and I do not have the legislation at my fingertips, the amendment of codes of practice under PACE can be done by statutory instrument in any event, so that is not a good example to bring forward in answer to the criticism and our suggestions that clause 10 and schedule 2 be removed from the Bill. It is not an answer.

I can see that, if there were some serious criticism of our procedures in relation to the liberty of an individual, there is a need to move with speed, but the answer that the Minister has given in this debate sits ill with the answers that the Home Secretary was giving in our earlier debate about the need for Government, or a public authority, to have an appeal to Strasbourg.

There, I was seeking to set a tight timetable of about 60 days for Government, in which Government, having been criticised and condemned on the ground that our law is incompatible by our own courts—by the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords—should say whether they accepted the criticism and what they proposed to do about it. I suggested that, if the Government did not accept the ruling of incompatibility, they should say so, so that the citizen concerned could take the case to Strasbourg, which would, in any event, undoubtedly take at least another year to achieve. Nevertheless, the need for speed is offered as a reason for justifying an alleged fast-track procedure.

I think that Ministers now accept in principle the Opposition's criticisms of the proposed procedure, although they did not accept them before. The Under-Secretary has rightly said—I was grateful to hear it—that there has to be a very good and compelling reason indeed for the Government, or any future Government, to attempt to use the fast-track procedure. Such occasions will therefore be rare and deal only with exceptional circumstances. The procedure will not be used regularly or apply to codes of practice—which, regardless, can be amended by statutory instrument. If there is a very good and powerful reason, affecting the liberty of the subject, I do not foresee Conservative Members, other Opposition Members or the Labour Members, as and when they come to be in opposition, standing in the way of such rapid amendment.

I do not believe that the Government have made their case for the fast-track procedure. However, I give them credit for backtracking about as far as they reasonably can, having already set out on this course. None the less, the course is wrong. The Opposition must criticise it as wrong, and make it perfectly clear that such a provision should not be enacted.

I am sorry to have to pitch in that criticism with our other criticisms of the Government trying to ride roughshod over Parliament. I hope that, by so doing, I will not be accused of hyperbole—although I may get the occasional rise of an eyebrow from a Labour Member. However, the Government are attempting to ride roughshod over Parliament. That is being demonstrated by the Jenkins commission, which is rigged in both its composition and its terms of reference. [Interruption.] Yes, it is.

I see the Secretary of State for Scotland spitting and saying "rigged?" The fact is that the Jenkins commission was given terms of reference to examine only one side of a very important picture. The three people on the commission, highly distinguished though they are, were all picked and chosen because of their known views on the subject. The Secretary of State for Scotland may wriggle and wave his hand and seek to rise to the occasion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. We are not debating the Jenkins commission.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: You are quite right, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was making the point—I am entitled to make this point—that the fast-track procedure is an attempt to ride over the rights of the citizen to be represented in the proper making of legislation by their representatives in Parliament. The fast-track procedure is of a piece with other constitutional changes proposed by the Government—I have mentioned Jenkins, and I mention proposals to abolish the rights of hereditary peers in the House of Lords and to replace them simply by nominated Members.

There is inadequate respect for Parliament, which, sadly, is shown also in this Bill. I put it down to the good sense of the Home Secretary—I am certainly prepared to concede this—that the proposal has now been heavily watered down, as we recommend. However, even something that is watered down can still be wrong in principle. We must therefore oppose the proposal. If Ministers will not accept this group of amendments, we must ask the House to divide on it.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

Tellers for the Noes:

Amendment made: No. 13, in page 7, line 25, leave out lines 25 and 26.—[Mr. Mike O'Brien.]

Clause 13

FREEDOM OF THOUGHT, CONSCIENCE AND RELIGION

Mr. Clappison: I beg to move amendment No. 4, in page 8, line 24, leave out from 'it' to end of line and insert

'shall not make any determination which infringes, or which could lead to the infringement of, that right.'.

We deal once again with the important subject of freedom of thought, conscience and religion. We make no apology for returning to it. It must be dealt with satisfactorily, and we do not believe that matters can be left as they stand. Having said that, we recognise that the Home Secretary has made sincere attempts to overcome the problems created for the Churches and other religious organisations by the incorporation of the European convention. We understand that he has listened to the views of Church leaders and to those of the leaders of other faiths.

Amendment No. 4 would strengthen the protection that the Bill currently offers. It would extend protection of the freedoms to which I adverted, especially the freedom of religion. It was the widely held concern about religious freedom which led to the Lords amending the Bill when it began its progress through the other place. The Lords were anxious to afford a defence to Churches and other religious organisations.

I refer to "Churches and religious organisations", as concerns about religious freedom cut across the boundaries of religious faith. Not only Christian Churches, but other great faiths and religious organisations are deeply interested in these matters. Churches, religious organisations and faiths all come within the ambit of the Bill, because, for some purposes, they may be considered to be public authorities.

Turning once again to the definition of public authorities which is very much at the heart of our concern, it is not correct to assert—as has been asserted in some quarters—that Churches and religious organisations will come within the ambit of the Bill only when they are standing in the place of the state—for example, when they are providing education in Church schools. Although they will be deemed to be public authorities when they are standing in the place of the state, there may be other circumstances in which they will be public authorities for the purpose of the Bill.

Like any other person or body, Churches, religious organisations and faiths and the charities associated with them will be public authorities within the terms of the Bill when they carry out functions of a public nature. Ultimately, the courts will determine when they are or are not carrying out functions of a public nature. It follows that, when Churches and religious organisations are deemed to be public authorities, they will risk legal challenge from any person who asserts that they have breached a convention right.

It has come about in a strange way that a Bill which has been put forward as upholding human rights and promoting a human rights culture contains the seeds of a threat to the freedom of religious organisations and Churches to follow their own beliefs and order their own affairs—something that they cherish. It applies across the board.

The Secretary of State for Scotland is on the Government Front Bench. He will be concerned about the position of the Church of Scotland, and he may well wish to say more about that this evening.

The Secretary of State for Scotland (Mr. Donald Dewar) indicated assent.

Mr. Clappison: I certainly bow in deference to the Secretary of State for Scotland in his knowledge of the Church of Scotland. I enjoyed the resumé of its history that he imparted to the House when we last discussed the Bill, particularly when he referred to the time during the late 19th century when one third of the ministers departed their livings and took their elders out into the wilderness—a feeling that we understand. I also enjoyed the next part of his speech when he said that that was followed by a period in which there was a great upsurge of enthusiasm among the congregations, and a great growth in the membership of the Church of Scotland.

Like all the other Churches in the United Kingdom, the Church of Scotland comes within the ambit of the European convention and is under threat in the way in which I have described. How great is that threat? We simply do not know. To be fair, in the past, the European Court of Human Rights has often been conservative in that respect, but there is no guarantee for the future and for what will follow incorporation of the European convention.

People who are well placed to know, such as Lord Alton and the Bishop of Ripon, are afraid of groups who, they believe, will be only too happy to take religious organisations to court to prove a point. Even if, ultimately, they are not successful, vexatious litigants can be a drain on those against whom they bring litigation. They could be a drain on the Churches in terms of cost and effort. The Home Secretary conceded that members of the congregations and Churches do not want to see their resources going into defending legal actions.

Mr. Straw: I did concede that point when the matter was debated in the House in May, and it was partly for that reason, although it was a subsidiary reason, that I thought it extremely important to introduce amendments to the Bill which sought to address the substantive concerns of the Churches and to block their being at risk from vexatious litigants.

Mr. Clappison: I am grateful to the Home Secretary for that intervention. As I said earlier, I accept that he has been entirely sincere and done his best in difficult circumstances to give the Churches protection. I now turn to why the amendments that replace those made in another place are inadequate and do not fulfil the objective that the Home Secretary has just described of giving the Churches protection.

The problem is that the protection in the Bill is simply not strong enough; it is probably the weakest protection that the Government could have chosen. The Home Secretary's amendments simply require a court to pay particular regard to the importance of rights under article 9—freedom of thought, conscience and religion. A court may well consider that it has paid particular regard to the importance of those freedoms under article 9 and then find that, none the less, certain religious organisations are in breach of the convention. The Home Secretary may say that the provision affords religious organisations a defence, but it will not stop any of the challenges that they fear. He cannot reasonably assert that it amounts to a defence. It is merely a request or a requirement that a court pay particular regard to those freedoms. In itself, it does not amount to a defence.

Amendment No. 4 would be an improvement, as it would afford such a defence. Under the terms of the amendment, a court cannot make any determination that infringes the freedom of religion or any other article 9 rights. It is a stronger and altogether more appropriate form of protection than that which is presently in the Bill. Even at this late stage, we invite the Home Secretary to give it serious consideration and to look carefully at what we believe is the stronger protection that it offers our Churches, faiths and religious organisations.

If the Home Secretary is not prepared to accept the amendment, will he give us a careful explanation of his reasons, as we think that it is appropriate and we cannot see any reason why the Government should not give Churches and religious organisations stronger protection? There are precedents elsewhere in Europe for the freedom of religion to be given such protection, so we see no reason why similar circumstances could not prevail here. Religious freedom is one of our most cherished causes and it needs and deserves stronger protection from the possible threat that may arise under the incorporation of the European convention than is presently provided in the Bill.

Mr. Straw: I am grateful to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) for the manner in which he made his speech. I shall seek to reply in a like manner and to explain as carefully as I can why, with the best will in the world, we cannot accept the amendment.

The matter was debated at considerable length on 20 May, when I spoke for almost 40 minutes. Let me reassure the Whips that I do not intend to do so this evening. However, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will take as read some of the arguments that I made on that occasion.

We never had the least intention of bringing forward a Bill that threatened religious freedom. I entirely subscribe to the sentiments that the hon. Member for Hertsmere expressed a moment ago. We did not believe that the Bill as originally drafted would have threatened religious freedom. However, concerns were expressed in the other place and here on the subject.

Contrary to the admonition of the right hon. and learned Member for North–East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) that the Government are showing contempt for Parliament, I hope that hon. Members will acknowledge that none of us on the Treasury Bench has come to the debates with a "not invented here" attitude towards amendments from the Opposition or from the other place. I live in hope that there may be a broad consensus behind the Bill, so I thought it very important not to insist that the Bill as originally drafted represented the last word and the best judgment, but to take action on any serious concerns raised about the drafting. We did that for the Churches.

For reasons that I explained at considerable length, we were not able to accept the amendments passed in the other place earlier in the year. We came forward with a new clause, which now stands as clause 13 on page 8. It says:

> "If a court's determination of any question arising under this Act might affect the exercise by a religious organisation (itself or its members collectively) of the Convention right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, it must have particular regard to the importance of that right."

The hon. Member for Hertsmere made a point about the relative strength of the clause. Similarly worded clauses often say that a court "may" have regard to a particular factor. We have gone as far as we can to make the provision as strong as possible, saying not that the court may have regard, but that > "it must have particular regard to the importance of that right."

We believe that that is a strong provision.

The amendment would replace those words with an alternative provision that would mean that, when such an issue arose, the court would not be able to make a determination that might infringe the article 9 right. As the hon. Gentleman has explained, the intention of the amendment is to protect the article 9 rights of religious organisations, even if other parties to the proceedings are asserting different and competing convention rights, such as the right to respect for private and family life under article 8 or the right to freedom of expression under article 10.

The hon. Gentleman has asked me to explain why we are not willing to accept the amendment. If it had the effect that I have described—we believe that it would, because of how the words are used—it would be contrary to the convention.

Mr. Clappison: Before the Home Secretary comes to the next stage of his argument, does he accept that, under the Bill, it will be possible for a Church or religious organisation to be found in breach of the convention, but that the amendment would prevent that by giving them a guaranteed defence?

Mr. Straw: The answer is yes. The hon. Gentleman is seeking to place the Churches beyond the convention, so that, even if they were exercising the functions of a public authority and were plainly in breach of the convention, they could not be found to be in breach. If we accepted the amendment, the Act would be in breach of the convention. Instead of matters being resolved here, they would go off to Strasbourg, and the Court would eventually declare that part of the Act in breach of the convention. I understand the purpose behind the amendment, but it would be self-defeating.

The right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion guaranteed by article 9.1 is not absolute. It is important to make that clear. Under article 9.2, it may be subject to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society, in the interests of various factors, including the protection of rights and freedoms of others. In that respect, article 9 is similar to articles 8, 10 and 11. The court must weigh the competing interests and come to a decision. It is not open to a court to give automatic priority in all cases to one convention right over another.

Having said that, I want to reassure the Opposition on two points. The hon. Gentleman said that a Church will act as a public authority not just when standing in place of the state, but when it carries out functions of a public nature. That is not correct. To the extent that the second part of what he said was accurate, he was simply tautologically making the same point as the first. Churches will be subject to the Act only when standing in the stead of the state and exercising functions of a public nature. I explained that at considerable length at column 1015 of the Official Report of 20 May. I should also like to reassure the hon. Gentleman on Strasbourg jurisprudence.

Mr. Clappison: I am grateful to the Home Secretary for generously giving way for a second time. I appreciate that he is trying to give reassurance, but there is nothing in the Bill to say that Churches are public authorities only when they are standing in the place of the state. They are subject to the same definition in clause 6 as everybody else. They are public authorities when they are carrying out functions of a public nature. The Bill says nothing about Churches being public authorities only when they are standing in the place of the state. Whenever they carry out functions of a public nature, they will be public authorities.

Mr. Straw: The convention exists to protect individuals from abuse by the state or by people standing in the stead of the state. That is the point of the convention. It is not there to deal with the abuse of rights by bodies acting in a private capacity. That is spelt out in the relevant clause. For the avoidance of doubt, I shall repeat what I said on 20 May about how we think that the Bill will operate in relation to Churches:

"Much of what the Churches do is, in the legal context and in the context of the European convention on human rights, essentially private in nature . . . For example, the regulation of divine worship, the administration of the sacrament, admission to Church membership or to the priesthood and decisions of parochial church councils about the running of the parish church are, in our judgment, all private matters.

In such matters, Churches will not be public authorities; the requirement to comply with convention rights will not bite on them. We do not believe that, for example, the Church of England, the Church of Scotland or the Roman Catholic Church, as bodies, would be public authorities under the Bill. I was asked to clarify that by many people, not least the Cardinal Archbishop.

On the occasions when Churches stand in place of the state, convention rights are relevant to what they do. The two most obvious examples relate to marriages and to the provision of education in Church schools."—[Official Report, 20 May 1998; Vol. 312, c. 1015.]

Having dealt with that, I should like to reassure the hon. Gentleman on his second point. There is good Strasbourg case law to suggest that, in practice, article 9 rights are afforded considerable protection from attack. I should like to quote from page 359 of the text book "Law of the European Convention on Human Rights" by Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick:

"Where there is a conflict between protected rights, the judgment of the Court in Otto-Preminger-Institut v. Austria speaks in favour of the strong regard to be had for religious beliefs (and therefore, Article 9 rights) in deciding priority between the competing rights. In that case, the state had interfered with the applicants' Article 10 right to freedom of expression by seizing and ordering forfeit a film found likely to offend the religious feelings of the Catholics who constituted the large majority of people in the region where the applicant proposed to show it. The Court upheld the interferences with the applicant's right as being necessary for the protection of 'the [religious] rights and freedoms of others.' In confirming that the interference had a legitimate aim, the Court said: '. . . the manner in which religious beliefs and doctrines are opposed or denied is a matter which may engage the responsibility of the state, notably its responsibility to ensure the peaceful enjoyment of the right guaranteed under Article 9 to the holders of those beliefs and doctrines'".

The passage went on:

"—in the context of religious opinions and beliefs—may legitimately be included an obligation [on individuals] to avoid as far as possible expressions which are gratuitously offensive to others".

The authors conclude:

"This is a strong affirmation of the power and even the duty of states to protect manifestations of religious belief."

7.30 pm

The hon. Member for Hertsmere invited us to speculate on what might happen if the Court in Strasbourg or the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords had a rush of blood to the head and, say, became evangelical atheists. I do not think that that is going to happen. Who knows what would happen if courts of the land or the European Courts went mad? All sorts of things could happen.

On the whole, the best guide to the future—indeed, in many ways the only guide—is the past. The Court's record provides substantial reassurance. So should the history of Europe, which was written in blood until 1945. Much of that blood was spilt in the alleged cause of religious belief and religious conflict. Many of the states of Europe which now form the core of the European Union and the Council of Europe have had peacefully to accommodate conflict between Churches—between the Lutheran Church and the Catholic Church in Germany and the Catholic and other Protestant Churches in other states—just as we have in this country, and just as we at long last are seeking to do in the north of Ireland. Against that background, our courts and the European Court in Strasbourg have been and will continue to be alive to the need to respect the exercise of religious freedom. They have clearly done so in the jurisprudence that has been laid down in Strasbourg.

The provisions of clause 13, which we introduced in May, require the Court to have particular regard to the importance of the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. That is as far—honestly—as we think that we can go consistent with the convention. We believe that that has also been recognised by the Churches.

I do not argue with the hon. Member for Hertsmere for seeking to revisit the issue, although the debate on the subject in Committee on 20 May followed the most intense period of discussion that I have had with representatives of the Churches. I was not able to meet their every request, but I can give a flavour of their response by quoting, as I did in Committee, from a letter that I received from Cardinal Archbishop Basil Hume, which said:

"I have sought the best legal advice and my initial assessment is that the amendment in the form tabled by the Government"— which now appears in the Bill as clause 13—

"may be the best that can be reasonably be achieved to reinforce the protection given by the Convention to the churches and other faiths under Article 9."

I was very grateful to the cardinal archbishop for saying that. I happen to believe that the legal advice that he received is accurate.

Since that debate—this should provide a further reassurance for the hon. Member for Hertsmere—we have received hardly any representations from religious organisations about the potential impact of the Bill on them. We received many beforehand. I understood them, took them on board and went as far as we could with them. It is interesting that, although they have since had five months fully to consider the matter, we have not received representations from them. If they thought that clause 13 was insufficient or capable of improvement, I am sure that they would have told us so.

In the light of that explanation, I hope that the House will accept the reasons why we cannot agree to the amendment and that Opposition Members will not press it to a vote.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Anyone who listened to the Home Secretary would accept that he has obviously given the matter considerable thought and has gone a long way to meet the many concerns expressed in Committee. He made the very telling point that there is a danger of going too far, thereby threatening the entire protection that is sought.

I shall briefly comment on matters regarding the Church of Scotland, to which the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) alluded when he moved the amendment. I welcome the fact that the Secretary of State for Scotland is present. He will know from the representations that he has seen that the matter has been the subject of considerable discussion between the Government and the Church of Scotland over recent months. Although I am not sure whether it is relevant, I declare an interest as an elder of the Church of Scotland.

As the Secretary of State for Scotland suggested in the history of the subject that he described in Committee, the Church of Scotland Act 1921 is constitutionally important. The Act was a settlement, agreed between Parliament and the Church of Scotland, that guaranteed the Church separate and independent jurisdiction in matters spiritual and paved the way for the union of the Church of Scotland and the Free Church in 1929. I would not want to detain the House, but it would be helpful if the Secretary of State confirmed that, when he wrote to the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland on 13 May, he said:

"I hope it goes without saying that I, and the government, would not wish the Bill to be a vehicle for undermining the position of the churches. That is certainly not the government's intention. Nor do we believe that it will be the effect of the Bill".

Although I am sure that that sums up the Government's position, it would be helpful if the Secretary of State confirmed it in the context of the Church of Scotland. It is a matter of considerable importance and concern to the Church, which would certainly wish to be reassured that the Government are satisfied that the Bill is consistent with provisions of the 1921 Act and does not conflict with the Church's independent spiritual government and jurisdiction as recognised by that Act since 1921.

Mr. Dewar: I was touched that the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) remembered what I said on the previous occasion on which we debated this matter. Having a suspicious mind, however, I thought that he had read my remarks recently in order to pad out his own. Being a man of not infinite but occasional charity, I am prepared to take the more generous view of my own efforts on that occasion.

There is no doubt that this is a matter of importance. If I remember rightly, I said on 20 May that I was in a slightly awkward situation because I was being asked to deal with a wide range of points that were put to me on matters furth of the affairs of the Church of Scotland and felt at something of a disadvantage. I remember rather vaguely, for instance, some interesting exchanges about the employment policy of the Dutch Salvation Army occupying the attention of the Committee for some time.

On this occasion, I am not in the same difficulty, because the only contribution from outwith the respective Front Benches has been that of the hon. and learned Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), who has taken a very close interest in these matters and who I know has—I do not know whether this is the right way of putting it—a long connection with the Church of Scotland, which he declared a few minutes ago.

The issue requires close attention; it has been an anxious matter. As there have been for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, so there have been many discussions on the topic between myself, my Department and legal representatives in the form of the Lord Advocate and the procurator to the General Assembly. I pay tribute to the care with which the Church of Scotland has advanced its case. I do so in the knowledge that the clerk to the General Assembly is present. The discussion has been civilised, but the fact that it has a civilised face does not undermine or hide the fact that it was taken seriously by those on both sides of the argument.

I do not know whether many of my colleagues in the House have taken the trouble to look at the Church of Scotland Act 1921; perhaps it is unfair to expect them to have done so. As I have said before, that Act must be almost unique in terms of House of Commons draftsmanship, certainly in this century. It is a splendid piece of prose, full of resounding cadences. Beneath those cadences, however, it is an attempt to define and offer protection to some significant and important principles. My first message is that we take those principles seriously.

I am conscious of the fact that we are dealing with a United Kingdom Bill, and that the amendment is of general application. None the less, it is important that I take the opportunity to make a statement about the position of the Church of Scotland under the Bill, and especially about the relationship between the provisions of the Bill and the Church of Scotland Act.

As I have already explained, concerns have been expressed during the passage of the Bill, both in the other place and in our Committee debate in May, that it may intrude unacceptably on the Church of Scotland's independent jurisdiction in spiritual matters. That was recognised in the 1921 Act, and relates to all matters of doctrine, worship, government and discipline in the Church.

My colleagues and I discussed those concerns fully with the then moderator and his colleagues within the Church. What I say today is not new, and I shall not pretend that it is, but I hope that it will be a clear statement of the Government's policy and intentions.

I set out in Committee the historical background to the position of the Church of Scotland in our national life, and the events that led to the Church of Scotland Act 1921, which recognised the independent jurisdiction of the Church of Scotland in spiritual matters. We do not want to do anything to disturb that important settlement.

Of course, that separation does not exempt the Church institutions from the operation of the law in general. In my experience, that fact has been accepted in all the conversations about the legislation. The Church has always recognised that, if by mischance it did something that constituted a criminal offence, it would not be immune from prosecution simply because it asserted that it was operating in a purely spiritual matter.

In addition, as we all know, the Church operates in non-spiritual areas—when it provides much-valued social work services, for example, and when it acts as an employer. In such matters, it is subject to the law, as is any other body in the field; there is no dispute about that.

The civil courts in Scotland have held that they have jurisdiction to inquire whether a question before them falls within the definition of spiritual matters, but not to determine the spiritual matter itself. The Government do not intend to disturb that position.

The general effect of the Bill is to bring rights home, and to make existing convention rights enforceable against public authorities directly in the courts of this country. We are making it unlawful for public authorities to act in a way incompatible with the convention rights. We have no intention of interfering with the religious freedom of any Church, and I emphasise strongly the fact that the Bill does not do so. We are not introducing any new civil rights beyond those in the European convention on human rights, which individuals can already found upon in Strasbourg; indeed, they have been able to do so for many years.

In our view, the courts of the Church of Scotland are not courts for the purposes of the Bill. That is in line with the separation of Church and state embodied in the 1921 Act. The Church has suggested that the Church or its courts might, in some circumstances, be held to be public authorities in the terms of the Bill when acting in spiritual matters. However, in all our discussions with the Church, neither party has been able to come up with a specific example of how that possibility might arise. There has been no challenge in Strasbourg to the actions of the Church in the more than 40 years since we ratified the European convention. In addition, jurisprudence to date, both domestically and at Strasbourg, suggests that the civil courts are reluctant to become involved in the spiritual affairs of any Church. The Home Secretary advanced some important evidence to that effect a few minutes ago.

Only last month, the 1921 Act was successfully invoked by the Church of Scotland in proceedings before an industrial tribunal. The role of the civil courts will be to determine whether the Church was acting as a public authority, and if so whether any convention right had been breached, and what is the minimum intervention necessary to redress that breach. That simply reflects what the court in Strasbourg has always done in relation to cases brought against the United Kingdom.

In implementing our policy of bringing rights home, we would expect no less; equally, we would expect no more. Requiring the Church to carry out its functions in a way that respects convention rights, and providing a remedy in the civil courts if that is not done, does not affect the Church's independent jurisdiction in spiritual matters under the 1921 Act.

We have already explained both here and in the other place why we have been unable to accept the various amendments proposed that would have exempted the Church of Scotland, when acting in spiritual matters, from the provisions of the Bill. Briefly, we have not been willing to concede a specific exemption for one Church; nor do we think that an exemption for Churches in general would be justified.

The Church of Scotland is the only religious body in the United Kingdom that benefits from a statute guaranteeing its independence in spiritual matters, but there are many different religious groups in our society, all of which feel passionately about the preservation of their independence.

It is not the intention of the Bill to force any religious group to do things that might be inconsistent with its principles and conscience. The amendment that we tabled in Committee applies to all Churches and faiths, and reassures them that the domestic courts will have particular regard to their rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion under article IX. We could not treat the spiritual independence of the Church of Scotland any differently.

I hope that I have been able to make it clear that the Government do not think that the Bill will undermine the position of the Church of Scotland under the 1921 Act. It is certainly not our intention that that Act should be undermined. We do not therefore think it necessary to make an explicit reference in the Bill, beyond the amendment that we have already made to recognise the position of Churches generally.

I hope that I have also explained why it is neither necessary nor desirable to make the point explicit in the Bill. The Church sought reassurances from us following both its own extensive internal debate, and a motion passed at the general assembly in May. I emphasise the fact that, throughout all our discussions with the Church, it has unfailingly welcomed the Government's intentions behind the Bill and reaffirmed its commitment to convention rights.

I have said to the Church that, if in practice the provisions of the Bill produce any real difficulties in connection with the 1921 Act, we shall be prepared to consider the matter, but that we shall not alter the Bill as it stands to deal with a possibility that we believe to be no more than hypothetical.

I hope that those words are of some help in clarifying our intention and our position. As for the specific points made by the hon. and learned Member for Orkney and Shetland, I hope that what I have said reinforces, and states at rather greater length, what I wrote in the letter that he quoted.

Mr. Wallace: I thank the Secretary of State for that statement and the clarification that he has given, which I think will be widely held to be helpful.

Mr. Dewar: I am grateful to the hon. and learned Gentleman. I am looking now at the schedule to the 1921 Act, which says:

"This Church is in historical continuity with the Church of Scotland which was reformed in 1560, whose liberties were ratified in 1592, and for whose security provision was made in the Treaty of Union of 1707."

It would be somewhat brazen and presumptuous, even by my standards, if I were to put at risk such a fine pedigree so well established by custom and long usage. On those good intentions, I rest my case.

Mr. Clappison: This has been a worthwhile debate, in the sense that it has given us an opportunity to raise our concerns about religious freedom. Despite the words of the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland, we remain unconvinced that the Bill as it stands sufficiently affords protection for religious freedom.

I appreciate that the Home Secretary was choosing his words with care and that he has made considerable effort in that regard. I am not so sure about the reference to evangelical atheists. I shall have to think about that later—possibly with the aid of a dictionary. We think that the amendment would have afforded stronger protection.

We accept that the Churches want to promote human rights, but I am sure that they share our anxieties that the Bill, as it stands, would have the unintended consequence of creating challenges and threats to religious freedom that do not exist at present. We are seeking not to take the Churches outside the Bill or the ambit of the human rights framework, but merely to provide Churches, religious organisations and faiths with a defence. We could have tried to take the Churches out of the Bill by tabling an amendment proposing that they were not to be public authorities for the purpose of the Bill. There are those in some Churches and faiths who would have preferred that course.

Churches and religious groups will be within the framework of the Bill. They could be public authorities, and they could rely upon the provisions of the Bill themselves to bring an action against another public authority which was in breach in some circumstances. The Churches, if regarded as public authorities, could have an action brought against them by another person or body, alleging that they were in breach. If the amendment were passed, the Churches—by relying on their freedom of thought, conscience or religion—would be afforded a defence. In the Bill as it stands, there is no such defence.

I heard what the Home Secretary said about Strasbourg, but it is interesting that, if the Churches were found to be in breach as public authorities in this country, they would have no right of appeal to Strasbourg as public authorities. I think that I made it clear in my opening remarks that Strasbourg's jurisprudence had been conservative in the past, but that is no guarantee for the future. The Secretary of State for Scotland's reference to the Dutch Salvation Army reminded me of the case brought against that organisation by a group under the auspices of human rights. The case was ultimately defended by the Dutch Salvation Army, but it was an expensive exercise.

Mr. Straw: The hon. Gentleman says that what I said was no guarantee for the future. Since we are talking about matters spiritual, I should say that there are no guarantees about the future that any of us can give, except that there will come a moment when we are no longer here. According to our point of view, we then may or may not be somewhere else. That is the only certainty there is about life—in the absolute sense. In the relative sense in which we must deal day by day, week by week and year by year, a considerable guarantee about the future conduct of the courts can be found in clause 2, which imports into English and Scots law the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights, which gives a high emphasis to the protection of article 9 rights.

Mr. Clappison: That is so, but there may be cases that are not covered by that jurisprudence. Even so, in applying that jurisprudence, it may still be the case in some circumstances that the Churches or religious organisations could be found to be in breach. The Home Secretary cannot gainsay that, under the amendment, Churches relying upon an article 9 right could not be found to be in breach. No matter how we foresee the future, that is certainly a much more secure defence than the defence being provided by the Government—if, indeed, it is a defence at all.

We join the Home Secretary in expressing the hope that there will not be unintended consequences from the Bill in the shape of challenges to our Churches and great faiths, and we hope that they will not find themselves brought before the courts by litigants—perhaps the vexatious litigants which some have foreseen—at great expense to themselves. We hope that that will not occur.

We cannot express that hope with as much confidence as we would like. We cherish our religious freedoms, and we would have preferred to give them the superior defence afforded by the amendment—an altogether stronger defence. However, this has not been a contentious or partisan debate, and it is in the spirit of expressing that hope—although without much confidence—that I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 19

STATEMENTS OF COMPATIBILITY

Mr. Clappison: I beg to move amendment No. 1, in page 11, line 33, after 'compatibility)', insert

'which statement must be accompanied by a report setting out any issues which the Minister considers to be relevant to the question of the compatibility of the Bill with the Convention's rights and giving the Minister's reasons for stating that the Bill is compatible'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 2, in page 11, line 36, after 'Bill', insert

'which statement must be accompanied by a report setting out

(i) any issues which the Minister considers to be relevant to the question of the compatibility of the Bill with the Convention's rights;

(ii) the reasons why the Minister is unable to make a statement of compatibility; and

(iii) the reasons why the Government nevertheless wishes the House to proceed with the Bill notwithstanding the Minister's inability to make a statement of compatibility.'.

No. 3, in page 11, leave out lines 37 and 38 and insert—

'(2) A statement and report made under subsection (1)(a) must be in writing and be published in such manner as the Minister making it considers appropriate.

(3) A statement under subsection (1)(b) must be an oral statement given to both Houses of Parliament, and a report under subsection (1)(b) must be in writing and be published in such manner as the Minister making it considers appropriate.'.

Mr. Clappison: We now come to the question of statements of compatibility. As matters stand, a Minister must, before Second Reading of any Bill, make a statement to the effect that the provisions of the Bill are compatible with the European convention, or state that, although the Minister is unable to make that statement, the Government wish the House to proceed with the Bill. We will be interested to hear from the Government examples of when they think the latter might apply.

We believe that the proposal puts more emphasis on presentation than substance—something with which we are not unfamiliar under this Government. If Ministers are to pronounce in this way and make statements of compatibility, it would surely be more meaningful for them to give their reasons. We wonder just how many Ministers will state that they are unable to make a statement of compatibility before Second Reading. How many will come to the House and say, "This is a bit dodgy, but we want you to go ahead anyway"?

We suspect that Ministers will use the measure as a rubber stamp to present their Bills as complying with the European convention, irrespective of the reasons for doing so and without an informed debate on the subject. We think that it would say rather more if Ministers were prepared to give their reasons. We are not heartened by the attitude taken by the Government so far when they have had considered opinions given to them about some of their legislation.

The Minister will be aware that certain provisions in the Crime and Disorder Bill were subject to critical questioning by a group of distinguished academics as to whether those provisions would comply with the European convention on human rights. Since then, there has been a steady stream of legal and academic opinion about some of the measures that the Government have proposed and whether they comply with the Government's own incorporation of the European convention.

A few days ago, the chairman of the Bar, Heather Hallett QC, said that reforms in the pipeline from the Government could be challenged under the new Human Rights Bill, soon to reach the statute book. She said:

"It would be a dreadful irony if the very first challenge in the courts was to legislation passed in the same session by the same Parliament . . . If the reports of some of the proposals emanating from the Home Office are accurate, that is exactly what will happen."

The Government will legislate with one hand, but will be challenged under that very legislation on the other. That is not a desirable state of affairs, and a rubber-stamp statement of compatibility—as appears in the Bill—is not much of a guarantee against it. We cannot see why Ministers should not be prepared to give their reasons so as to make this measure more than a rubber stamp, and we look forward with interest to the Minister's explanation of why the Government are not prepared to be open and give their reasons.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The three amendments relate to statements of compatibility, or incompatibility, made under clause 19. The clause is a demonstration of the Government's commitment to human rights. It is one which we need not have included in the Bill, but we have chosen to include it because of the importance we attach to these rights. The added responsibilities placed on a Minister are justified on that basis.

By requiring a Minister in charge of a Bill to give a statement on its compatibility, we are underlining our commitment to pre-legislative scrutiny of all new policy measures. Also, where the Minister states that he is unable to make a positive statement about the Bill's compatibility, that will be an early signal to Parliament that the possible human rights implications of the Bill will need to be given careful consideration by the House—especially, no doubt, in Committee.

The amendments add to the requirements placed on Ministers by clause 19. Amendments Nos. 1 and 2 would require a statement on the compatibility or otherwise of a Bill to be accompanied by a report setting out issues relevant to the Bill's compatibility with the convention rights and, where the Government wanted Parliament to proceed with a Bill for which a Minister could not make a statement of compatibility, reasons why they nevertheless wished the House to consider it.

Amendment No. 3 would provide that an oral rather than a written statement, as the Bill currently provides for, be made in respect of a Bill for which a statement of compatibility could not be given.

I can understand why the amendments have been tabled, but in many ways it is a matter of judgment as to how the House will proceed. Our view is that the amendments are unnecessary, because the House provides for the examination of such issues in its procedures in any event. The amendments would almost create an artificial mechanism to do what the House already does. A statement as provided for by the Bill as it stands will be sufficient to achieve the important aims that both we and, in many ways, Opposition Members want clause 19 to deliver. That would flag up the issue to the House, which in the normal course of events would be able to look into the reasoning behind the statement of compatibility. Inevitably, that will be an issue during the passage of a Bill.

A debate would provide the best forum in which the Government's thinking could be fully explained. I cannot imagine how the mere giving of such a statement could enhance the debate that would normally take place on Second Reading or in Committee, which would usually elicit the required answers.

In such circumstances, a written report would not provide much added value. In some cases, a requirement to provide such a full report might also be odd—for example when the terms of a Bill meant that there was no connection with the convention and no convention rights were affected. Then it would merely be a pointless exercise.

Similarly, the requirement for a Minister to make an oral statement when he or she cannot make a statement of compatibility, as imposed by amendment No. 3, is not necessary or appropriate. Acts of Parliament do not usually regulate what a Minister will or will not say in the Chamber. A written statement would be readily available to whoever wanted to read it. As I said, anything in that statement and any other aspect of the human rights implications of a Bill could be debated under the normal proceedings of the House.

What might be of assistance would be any report made on the Bill, for example, by a human rights Committee of the House, if it decided to set one up. In due course, that might certainly be a way of informing the debate, whether in Committee or elsewhere, and looking into the detail of why such a statement was made by the Government. Obviously, such a Committee of the House could discuss the detail.

The hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) has tabled the amendments for legitimate and proper reasons, in the sense that he wants to be sure that the House has the opportunity to discuss the issues fully, but his concerns are covered by the procedures of the House.

The hon. Gentleman asked for some examples of when the Government might want to proceed with a Bill that was not compatible with the convention. One example would be if we were legislating on the length of time for which the Secretary of State might authorise the detention of terrorist suspects under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts. The Strasbourg Court found our court in breach of article 5 of the convention some years ago, but we have maintained the arrangements because of the situation in Northern Ireland through a derogation as set out in schedule 3 of the Bill.

We already know that we may want to proceed with certain Bills even though there is some incompatibility. It is difficult to predict all the situations that might arise, as they are exceptional, like the example I gave.

The hon. Gentleman will realise, I think, that it is right that the Government should flag up an issue to the House, which can go into the detail and the reasoning behind the statement of incompatibility through its normal procedures. He will see from my example that we may properly want to proceed with a Bill that is incompatible with the convention, although that will be rare and exceptional. I hope that, in view of my comments, the Opposition will withdraw their amendment.

Mr. Clappison: Although I listened carefully to the Minister's arguments, I remain afraid that this will be little more than a rubber stamp and a presentational device. The hon. Gentleman and the Government would do well to be aware of the stream of legal and other academic opinion about the consequences for possible future legal action of some of the legislation that they have put before the House. The Opposition certainly do not want such a situation to arise, but we fear that it might.

I am not convinced by what the Minister has said. This is more a matter of presentation than of substance. However, in view of the lateness of the hour, I will not press the matter to a vote. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 20

ORDERS UNDER THIS ACT

Amendments made: No. 14, in page 11, line 40, after 'power' insert

(ii) made under section 38(1)(a) of the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973 or the corresponding provision of the Northern Ireland Act 1998; or

(iii) amending an Act of a kind mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c);'.

No. 21, in page 12, line 28, leave out from 'made' to 'under' in line 30.

No. 22, in page 12, line 30, after 'legislation' insert

'(otherwise than by the National Assembly for Wales, a member of the Scottish Executive, a Northern Ireland Minister or a Northern Ireland department)'.—[Mr. Mike O'Brien.]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I beg to move amendment No. 23, in page 12, line 34, at end insert—

'"the Sixth Protocol" means the Protocol to the Convention agreed at Strasbourg on 28th April 1983;'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss Government amendments Nos. 31, 32, 34 and 35.

Mr. O'Brien: The amendments all concern the death penalty and arise as a result of decisions in Committee and an announcement made earlier in the year. In Committee, amendments tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) were accepted on a free vote. They inserted references to articles 1 and 2 of the sixth protocol into clause 1 of the Bill and inserted some of their text into schedule 1. The sixth protocol provides for the abolition of the death penalty.

However, my hon. Friend's amendments did not define the sixth protocol for the purposes of the Bill, and we are now doing so in amendment No. 23 to clause 21. My hon. Friend also left out a sentence from article 1 of the protocol—inadvertently, I am sure—which is inserted at the correct place in the sentence in schedule 1.

The other three amendments arise from a decision announced by the Minister for the Armed Forces in a statement to the House on 24 July, in columns 1372 to 1386 of Hansard. He announced that the Government intended to abolish the death penalty for military offences in all circumstances, whether in peace or wartime.

Accordingly, amendment No. 31 inserts a new subsection into clause 21, which provides that any liability to the death penalty under the Armed Forces Acts is to be treated as a liability to life imprisonment or some lesser penalty instead. That general statement will be supplemented by detailed amendments to the Armed Forces Acts when the next legislation to consolidate them is introduced. The services were fully involved in the review and consultation took place at all levels, up to and including the chiefs of staff, who believe that the time is right to abolish the death penalty.

Amendment No. 32 provides that the new subsection inserted by amendment No. 31 comes into force when the Bill receives Royal Assent. That is consistent with our intention to honour the decision of the House by proceeding without delay to sign and ratify the sixth protocol.

Amendment No. 34 provides that the new subsection inserted by amendment No. 31 has effect in any place in which the Armed Forces Acts have effect, which is necessary because, unlike the Human Rights Bill, those Acts are not limited in their territorial extent to the United Kingdom. That is consistent with our intention to extend the ratification of the sixth protocol to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, subject to their agreement. Jersey and the Isle of Man have already agreed and Guernsey will next week debate a recommendation from the Advisory and Finance Committee to do so.

The practical effects of the amendments are such that Parliament will not be able to reintroduce the death penalty, other than for acts committed in time of war or imminent threat of war, unless the United Kingdom denounces the European convention on human rights.

The inclusion of article 2 of the sixth protocol in the Bill shows that we recognise that, in ratifying the protocol, we must ratify the whole protocol rather than any part of it. Leaving article 2 in the Bill does not signify any intention to reintroduce the death penalty for acts in time of war. Parliament could do that whether or not article 2 were in the Bill, but that would be inconsistent with the Government's position as set out in the statement that my right hon. Friend the former Minister for the Armed Forces made in July. The amendments give effect to that new policy.

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): The death penalty is always a matter for a free vote in the House—as, indeed, it was in Committee—but as there is unlikely to be a vote tonight, I want to ensure that my views appear on the record.

I have always believed that capital punishment is not a party political issue—it transcends the partisan quarrels that we have in this place. I have opposed judicial murder all my life, however hideous the crime and however great the desire for punishment, even in times of war. In my 11 years in the House, I have supported every attempt to abolish the death penalty in the armed forces. I want simply to say that I support this attempt tonight.

Mr. John Maples (Stratford-on-Avon): I shall not oppose the amendments, but I shall ask the Minister some questions. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), I have always voted against the reimposition of the death penalty; I cannot envisage any circumstances in which I would not do so except in the narrow area of military discipline in time of war.

We are talking about very serious offences in wartime, such as assisting the enemy in battlefield conditions; we are not talking about peacetime, when the disciplinary aspects of the matter are not relevant. However, I want to know why we are dealing with the death penalty in the Bill. I know that the matter was discussed in Committee, but it is extraneous—it is not necessary for the incorporation of the convention or for the accession to protocol 6.

I am aware of the statement made by the former Minister for the Armed Forces, but, like my hon. Friends, I thought that the matter would be dealt with in the new military discipline Bill, which we expect to be brought before the House in the parliamentary Session after next. That would have given us the opportunity for an extensive debate about this radical and fundamental step. I do not think that there is any prospect of the death penalty being enforced in peacetime between now and then, so I believe that it would have been better to wait.

The Minister said that the matter had been discussed at all levels up to and including chiefs of staff. I forget his exact words, but I think that he said that they thought that the time had come to implement the measure. I would appreciate his assurance that they are confident that the ultimate penalty will not be needed in wartime conditions and that they are happy for it to be abolished. If they are happy, I have no further argument except to say that circumstances could change. Are we—the Minister may have answered this—committed for all time to the measure, short of resiling from the treaty under the general provisions of public international law?

I am slightly concerned about the interpretation of article 2 of protocol 6 and whether it applies only to laws that are notified at the time of accession to the protocol. Is the Minister confident that a state that did not have the death penalty in wartime at the time of accession could subsequently give notification that it had enacted it, so registering such a derogation? Article 2 seems to imply that, when a state accedes to the protocol, it can retain the death penalty for wartime military offences. Is the Minister saying, as I think he is, that that applies equally to a subsequent derogation?

8.15 pm

Can we withdraw from protocol 6 under article 5 without resiling from the whole convention? If I understand what the Minister is saying about article 2, that question is redundant, but if my interpretation is not right, I believe that we could withdraw from the protocol under paragraph 3 of article 5, which states:

"Any declaration made under the two preceding paragraphs may . . . be withdrawn by a notification addressed to the Secretary General."

My concern is that that applies only to those territories that are nominated under paragraph 1 of article 5, not to a withdrawal from the protocol. If so, is it the case that to withdraw from the protocol one would have to withdraw from the whole convention, which, of course, any state has the right to do under public international law?

I should be grateful if the Minister were to give his interpretation, on the advice that he has been given, of article 2 of protocol 6. If the House were, under wartime conditions, to reintroduce the death penalty in military discipline legislation, could such a derogation from the convention be registered with the Secretary General?

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) set out his views on the death penalty, which many of us share. The hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) asked trenchantly why we were introducing the measure now, in this Bill. He obviously was not present when we discussed the death penalty; the House, not the Government, decided that protocol 6 should be introduced into the Bill. When my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) tabled an amendment on the death penalty, I suggested that the Bill was not the right vehicle for the matter. However, the House in its wisdom took an alternative view, so the Government had to table these amendments.

As I understand it, the Ministry of Defence was consulting on the use of the death penalty in military circumstances; my ministerial colleagues moved to examine the matter as quickly as possible in view of the wish of the House. That is how we arrived at where we are today—the House took the view that the matter was best dealt with in the Bill rather than in military legislation, and it is right and proper that the Government should listen to the views of the House.

The hon. Gentleman asked whether the chiefs of staff were satisfied with the way in which we were proceeding. My information is that they are.

The hon. Gentleman also asked about article 2 of protocol 6. The question of derogation does not really arise here, because article 2 does no more than permit a state to have the death penalty in wartime. It is not so much that we are derogating; we would merely inform the powers that be, or make the necessary statement, that we intended to reintroduce it. Obviously, the House would have to make a decision then on its reintroduction into our law. Therefore, in time of war, should we wish to make that decision—I think that we would all hope that it would not be necessary—we would not be handicapped in a way which we would find unsatisfactory.

Given those reassurances, I hope that the House will agree to the amendments.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendments made: No. 24, in page 12, line 41, leave out 'or' and insert—

'(ii) made'.

No. 25, in page 12, line 42, at end insert

'or the corresponding provision of the Northern Ireland Act 1998; or

(iii) amending an Act of a kind mentioned in the definition of primary legislation;'.

No. 26, in page 12, line 45, leave out 'Northern Ireland Assembly' and insert

'Assembly established under section 1 of the Northern Ireland Assembly Act 1973;

(da) Act of the Northern Ireland Assembly;'.

No. 27, in page 13, line 7, leave out 'or (d)' and insert ', (d) or (da)'.

No. 28, in page 13, line 8, at end insert—

'( ) order, rules, regulations, scheme, warrant, byelaw or other instrument made by a member of the Scottish Executive, a Northern Ireland Minister or a Northern Ireland department in exercise of prerogative or other executive functions of Her Majesty which are exercisable by such a person on behalf of Her Majesty;'.

No. 29, in page 13, line 8, at end insert—

' "transferred matters" has the same meaning as in the Northern Ireland Act 1998;'.

No. 30, in page 13, line 21, leave out subsection (5).

No. 31, in page 13, line 23, at end insert—

'(6) Any liability under the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 or the Naval Discipline Act 1957 to suffer death for an offence is replaced by a liability to imprisonment for life or any less punishment authorised by those Acts; and those Acts shall accordingly have effect with the necessary modifications.'.—[Mr. Clelland.]

Clause 22

SHORT TITLE, COMMENCEMENT, APPLICATION AND EXTENT

Amendment made: No. 32, in page 13, line 25, leave out 'and 20' and insert ', 20 and 21(6)'.—[Mr. Clelland.]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I beg to move amendment No. 33, in page 13, line 33, leave out 'committed' and insert 'taking place'.

This is a drafting amendment to clause 22(4). At present it provides that clause 7(1)(b) applies to proceedings brought by or at the instigation of a public authority whenever the act in question took place, but that otherwise clause 7(1)(b) does not apply to an act committed before clause 7 comes into force. Amendment No. 33 replaces "committed" by "taking place" so as to be consistent with the earlier reference.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendment made: No. 34, in page 13, line 35, at end insert—

Order for Third Reading read.

8.21 pm

Mr. Straw: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

The House has made a number of changes to the Bill since it was introduced eight months ago. Some of those, such as amendment No. 33, have been detailed but necessary technical improvements. Some of the amendments have raised important issues of public policy, where we have sought to respond to the concern expressed both in this House and previously in the other place.

I thank right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House for the way in which they have contributed to the debates. I hope that it will be acknowledged that we have sought to respond in a like way and, whenever we could, to accept the spirit and, in some cases, the detail, of amendments and, where we could not accept the precise wording, to come forward with alternative wording to meet as much of the mischief identified in those amendments as possible.

Three sets of changes have been made as a result of concerns expressed here and in the other place. The first concerns remedial orders. We continue to believe that it should be possible to amend Acts of Parliament by a remedial order so as to bring them into line with the convention rights, but we have, after listening carefully to the debates, considerably restricted the circumstances in which they can be made, and we have significantly enhanced the parliamentary opportunities for scrutiny of those orders.

We have explained that any response to a declaration of incompatibility by the courts, whether by fresh primary legislation or by a remedial order, is a matter on which the Government will propose, but it is for Parliament to dispose. One of the Bill's many strengths is that it promotes human rights while maintaining the sovereignty of Parliament and the separation of powers which underpins our constitutional arrangements.

Secondly, there is the issue of the Churches, on which we had an interesting debate some minutes ago, including an entertaining excursion into the history of the Church of Scotland. We were, for reasons that I explained, unable to accept the amendments made by the other place which would have exempted Churches from the Bill's public authority provisions in the few circumstances where they would otherwise have been regarded as public authorities. At the same time, we recognised their concern about what they saw as the Bill's potential impact on such matters as faith and doctrine. In that regard, I tabled an amendment in Committee requiring the courts to have particular regard to the rights of religious organisations to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, and in so doing I believe that the Government and the House were able to go a long way towards meeting their concerns.

The third issue is that of the press. We never believed that the Bill would undermine the freedom of the press. The Strasbourg institutions attach a high value to freedom of expression, as is clear from a series of cases, including the "Spycatcher" case. Our courts will take that case law into account. But as with the Churches, we sought to meet the concerns of the press in a way which is consistent with the principles on which the Bill is based.

We did so with an amendment in Committee requiring the courts, among other things, to have particular regard to freedom of expression when they are considering granting any relief which might affect it. The amendment followed detailed discussions with the chairman of the Press Complaints Commission, Lord Wakeham, and with media representatives. I think that the amendment was well received in the House and outside.

I have commented on three particular issues that have arisen from the Bill. More generally, it is clear to everyone that the Bill has significant ramifications. Its provisions will have profound implications for the conduct of all public authorities, for the interpretation of legislation and for the operation of the court system at all levels. It will be much easier for individuals to rely on their convention rights against public authorities, and I believe that they will take that opportunity.

Over time, the Bill will bring about the creation of a human rights culture in Britain. In future years, historians may regard the Bill as one of the most important measures of this Parliament. I talk about a human rights culture. One of the problems which has arisen in Britain in recent years is that people have failed to understand from where rights come. The philosopher David Selbourne has commented on the generation of an idea of dutiless rights, where people see rights as consumer products which they can take, but for nothing. The truth is that rights have to be offset by responsibilities and obligations. There can and should be no rights without responsibilities, and our responsibilities should precede our rights.

In developing that human rights culture, I want to see developed a much clearer understanding among Britain's people and institutions that rights and responsibilities have properly to be balanced—freedoms by obligations and duties.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I am grateful to the Home Secretary, who is always courteous in giving way. It does not follow exactly from what he has just said, but when do the Government expect to implement the Bill? When will the measure be brought into force?

Mr. Straw: May I deal with that in a few moments after my next remarks?

As the Bill nears the end of its parliamentary passage, it is right to look ahead to its implementation. Precisely because the Bill will have such a fundamental effect, we need to prepare for it thoroughly. We are providing training through the Judicial Studies Board for all courts and tribunals to enable them to deal adequately with the convention points that will come before them in case after case. We have allocated just under £5 million in addition to the normal budget of the Judicial Studies Board and associated bodies for this judicial training.

We are also ensuring that Government Departments and other public authorities are properly prepared for the obligations that the Bill places on them. They will need not only to review their legislation and practices for compatibility with the convention but to ensure that their staff are trained in an awareness of the convention rights so that those rights permeate all the decisions that they make. We need to work out how the criminal justice system can best accommodate the additional pressures that are likely to follow from the Bill.

To answer directly the point made by the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell), that means that there is a great deal of work to do before the Bill can be implemented. We need to carry that out in a fair, systematic, balanced and positive way. The right hon. and learned Gentleman asked me to give a precise date for implementation. It cannot happen in the near future, and I hope that he will forgive me for being unable to give a precise date. We want to implement the Bill as soon as is feasible, but we must all recognise that we cannot do so straight away.

One exception is clause 19, which requires ministerial statements of compatibility. The clause, which is important for the presentation of Bills before the House, does not form part of the main scheme of the Bill, and could be brought into force well in advance of the main provisions. I am considering the options for implementing clause 19 with my right hon. Friend the President of the Council and others, and I hope to make an announcement as soon as possible.

Mr. Maclennan: Before the Home Secretary leaves the matter of the date of the Bill's effective operation, will he tell us more about the criteria that he will apply in determining the practicality of proceeding? I understand that there is a need for judicial training, and the Home Secretary has spoken of the Government's efforts on that, but are there any other hidden obstacles to proceeding with implementation that he might want to disclose?

Mr. Straw: I do not think that there are any other hidden obstacles—I was trying to search my brain for secrets, but there are none. We are bringing into Scots law and English law—by which, for the avoidance of doubt, I mean also the law that applies in Wales and Northern Ireland—not only the convention, which is easily stated, as it is in the Bill, but its jurisprudence. It is crucial that we properly prepare our judicial system, including senior judges who have in many ways been living with the convention for a long time.

Often when the law is ambiguous, the courts use the convention and its jurisprudence as an aid to interpretation. However, the convention has not reached many Crown courts or county courts, and it has certainly not reached magistrates courts—it is outwith their experience. If we are not prepared and if we do not prepare those who serve in a judicial capacity, including 30,000 lay magistrates, we will find that sharp lawyers will seek to make disruptive points. We must be aware of that—we have always acknowledged it—and we must be prepared for it.

The Bill not only concerns the rights of individuals in a narrow sense, but will change our society's culture. For example, those who are charged with criminal offences have rights, and we must recognise and protect those rights, but others in society also have rights. It would be wrong to set sharp lawyers who have examined the jurisprudence against lay magistrates, justices' clerks, busy county court and Crown court judges who have not had the opportunity to do so. That would bring the Bill's implementation into disrepute. I want the process to succeed, so we need time to prepare for it.

I do not want to implicate the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan) in the process, but he has been closely associated with the project, both in opposition and in government. I thank him for that contribution. He knows that the Bill is an important priority for the Government, and that there was considerable discussion about it in the joint consultative committee—of which he was a joint chairman—of the Liberal Democrat party and the Labour party. He will recognise that we must get on with the project—I know that he is on the case—but we must balance that against the need for preparation.

My next point may further reassure the right hon. Gentleman and, with a bit of luck, the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire. The work of preparing for the Bill's implementation is not for the Government alone. We recognise that many outside the Government have a keen interest in how the Bill is implemented and want to contribute to its success. We draw on their expertise, as we did in opposition, and we take account of their concerns.

As the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), said earlier, I have decided to establish a task force to assist the Government in the preparations for implementation.

The task force will be chaired by my noble Friend the Lord Williams of Mostyn and will include my hon. Friends the Solicitor-General and the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department. The membership will also include those non-governmental organisations which have made extremely valuable contributions to the project and have continued to offer their advice as the Bill has proceeded through Parliament. They will include Francesca Klug, from the Human Rights Incorporation

[Mr. Straw]

Project; Anne Owers, from Justice; Andrew Puddephatt, from Charter 88; Sarah Spencer, from the Institute for Public Policy Research; Veena Vasista, from the 1990 Trust; and John Wadham from Liberty.

The task force will help us to create the human rights culture to which I referred. Its tasks will include maintaining a dialogue between the Government and non-governmental organisations on the readiness of Departments, other public authorities and the legal profession for implementation and on its timing; working together to heighten public awareness of the Bill relating to responsibilities as well as rights; providing training opportunities for public authorities outside Government, and co-operating with other organisations in disseminating awareness, particularly among young people, of the rights and responsibilities inherent in the convention.

We are preparing guidance on the Bill which is designed to assist Government Departments and others, and I expect the task force to take a keen interest in that.

Mrs. Maria Fyfe (Glasgow, Maryhill): Will the abolition of the death penalty take place soon, or does it depend on the deliberations of the task force?

Mr. Straw: That will take place on Royal Assent. It is a simple, straightforward and important matter. We do not have to wait a relatively long time before it comes into force.

I hope that the task force will be able to have its first meeting in the near future and will continue to meet regularly, at least until the Bill is fully implemented. It will be of great practical use. I am grateful to those who have accepted the invitation to serve on the task force, and I look forward to it starting its work.

I have looked to the future of the Bill because, with this Bill more than any other, the word is not the deed. We have started the business of introducing a formal statement of human rights into our law. That will not be completed until the European convention on human rights is embedded in our jurisprudence. Our immediate task is to complete our consideration of the Bill before it finally returns to another place.

8.38 pm

Sir Nicholas Lyell: I welcome the Home Secretary's explanation of the Bill. My right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) has to be abroad today, but he has been following and taking a close interest in the Bill and its development.

The Home Secretary is right to emphasise that rights also involve responsibilities. The short speech by the hon. Member for Cannock Chase (Dr. Wright) brought home to those who were in the Chamber the extraordinary reach that the Bill is likely to have. A great many lawyers will look at every aspect of it and seek to stretch it as far as possible.

In respect of a human rights culture, it is important to stress that a human right given to one individual may adversely affect the rights of other individuals. It is important that the Bill be implemented in a way that balances the rights of all citizens fairly, or there will be some strange results.

The Home Secretary was also right to say—I may not quote him quite correctly—that we do not know exactly where this legislation will lead us. When we acceded to the European convention in 1951, few people would have expected some of its far-reaching effects over the past 47 years. The decisions by the Strasbourg Court have not necessarily been radical, but their effects have often been more radical than the decisions themselves. For example, it was decided that parents could choose the type of discipline to be imposed on their children in school, which had the radical effect of removing what many people regard as old-fashioned systems of discipline. Nobody would have expected that to happen at the outset.

We must be careful that cases brought before our courts do not lead to changes in our society that would not have the support of this House and of the country through its elected representatives. That is why it is extremely important that, when remedial orders are made, the House should have the fullest opportunity to consider them.

The Home Secretary said that Governments propose and Parliaments dispose. It is important that that phrase should be profound as well as elegant, because if we were to use too much of the fast-track procedure, the Government would be proposing and Parliament would have little option but to dispose. The history of this Bill has shown that real improvements have been made during its proceedings.

Although we may not have achieved all that we sought to achieve through remedial orders, we are grateful for the clear explanation by the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), that "compelling reasons" means compelling reasons, and that the Government will consider it necessary or proper to use the fast-track procedure only in a narrow band of cases.

I am also grateful that the Home Secretary made it clear that the Bill is not meant to create a substitute written constitution for this country. It is simply to ensure that our law is kept in line with Strasbourg law so that cases are dealt with more swiftly, easily and effectively. I continue to hope that, while there will be no formal right of appeal—there could not be—for Government and public bodies to Strasbourg, ways will be found to enable the public to know when the Government or a public body are deeply concerned that a decision of our courts at the highest level is wrong. They should know that an effective method is available to drive the matter on to the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg and that the ultimate determination will be in accordance with the decision of our highest judiciary. That judgment will therefore be binding not only on the citizens of this country, but on those of every other member state of the Council of Europe.

I believe profoundly in the European convention on human rights, but it is a backstop. It must always be remembered that the convention was created after the war to prevent some dreadful things from ever happening again, and it should not start to reach into the nooks and crannies of the private lives of the citizens of these 30 or 40 countries. I hope that the courts will bear that in mind, and that reading the debates will encourage people to do that.

Although we have opposed aspects of the Bill, we now wish it well and hope that it will be implemented effectively, to the benefit of the citizenry as a whole.

8.45 pm

Mr. Maclennan: I also express my gratitude to the Home Secretary for the way in which he has handled the Bill—his openness to suggestions, and his diligence in pursuing arguments and proffering explanations. I believe that the Bill has benefited from the deliberations of Parliament, and that cannot be said of all our legislative activity.

For me, the Bill is something of a landmark in personal terms. Fifteen years ago, in December 1983, I introduced a Bill that enjoyed a great deal of support—not, alas, from any of the current members of the Labour Cabinet. Indeed, their absence was noted when the matter was brought before the House again in 1987, by Sir Edward Gardner, from the Conservative Benches. Only 15 Labour Members supported the proposal.

It has been a long haul to get to this point, and it is therefore a matter of great satisfaction that there has been such a clear movement of opinion—a movement that is, I believe, reflected in the judiciary. When one thinks of the arguments that were made 10 years ago about how such a measure might politicise the judges, and how that was considered to be a baffling obstacle to the reforms that are here encompassed, one can take great satisfaction from what has happened.

I pay particular tribute to my noble and learned Friend Lord Lester of Herne Hill, who has campaigned for even longer, and whose individual contribution to the debates is probably without parallel.

Mr. Straw: I should like to be associated with the right hon. Gentleman's remarks about Lord Lester.

Mr. Maclennan: My noble and learned Friend will be most grateful, as will my personal friend, David Selbourne, the philosopher, from whose home I returned on Saturday to read the Home Secretary's remarks about dutiless rights. They were most appositely chosen, for it is true not only that obligations balance rights, but that rights cannot be secured without duties being observed. Too often, that has been lost sight of.

A couple of questions remain, which are not entirely clear to me and which may not become clear for some time, about the impact of the Government's decision on implementation. I am grateful for what the Home Secretary has said about the task force on implementation. Some of the work that he proposes to assign to it might have been undertaken by a human rights commission, and he is clearly seeking voluntary help to fulfil some of the necessary groundwork. I hope that there will be urgency in implementation.

I am not entirely satisfied that these matters can be handled effectively by our courts until the matter has come before them. It is prudent not to rush into instant implementation, and thereby run the risk of discrediting the process. However, that is not a reason for long delay. It is clear from what the Home Secretary said in reply to my intervention that he shares that view.

Subordinate legislatures, to which power is being decentralised, could be in some difficulty if the Bill is not implemented. The Home Secretary will be aware that provisions in the Northern Ireland Bill, the Scotland Bill and the Government of Wales Act 1998 require legislative proposals to be compatible with convention rights as set out in this Bill. It would be unfortunate if legislative issues arose and there were some question as to whether the proposals of the three bodies concerned were incompatible with the Bill, and that could not be resolved because the Government had not given effect to this Bill.

Mr. Straw: As I explained earlier, it is my intention to bring clause 19 into force as soon as possible, and well before the rest of the Bill. Clause 19 requires Ministers, when they present a Bill, to give a clear statement on whether they believe, on the basis of good advice, that the Bill is compatible with the convention. That provision, as it affects the United Kingdom Parliament, will come into force earlier than the provisions of the Scotland Bill, the Government of Wales Act and the Northern Ireland Bill, and should have an impact on those bodies.

The second point is that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. An intervention should be brief. The right hon. Gentleman's second point should be dealt with in the winding-up speech.

Mr. Maclennan: I am grateful to the Home Secretary for his intervention. He has gone some way to removing my concern, which flowed from clause 28 of the Scotland Bill. That provides that the Scottish Parliament should have legislative competence only in respect of matters for which there is no incompatibility with convention rights. I am greatly relieved if the declaration of a Minister is sufficient to remove that condition, and if that will be triggered by the earlier implementation of clause 19.

I do not want to conclude my contribution to the debate on a minor, perhaps querulous, note. The issues that are covered by the Bill are of historic importance. Although the Minister has said that the Government do not intend to take a step towards establishing a written constitution, I do not doubt that that is, in fact, what is happening.

In drafting the Bill, the Government have been extremely careful to avoid the possibility of judges striking down the legislation of Parliament, on the ground that it would fall foul of fundamental law. That is understandable in the light of the current attitude of judges, who would not altogether welcome such a power. There can be no doubt, however, that judges have changed their minds to the extent that they broadly support this measure. I anticipate that, as they have inspired confidence that they would use the power judiciously, they will feel less reluctant to take the greater responsibility of deciding that Parliament has gone beyond the accepted view of people, as expressed in a written constitution. I do not consider that an embarrassing prospect; indeed, I think that many would regard it as highly desirable.

I also think that—as the Minister emphasised—the Government have sought to secure what they describe as the sovereignty of Parliament. Earlier, I expressed doubt about whether that was necessary or even desirable: I felt that the people were sovereign, and that their views could be expressed outside the House.

Mr. Straw: That is a Scottish point.

Mr. Maclennan: Indeed. It has always been understood by the Scottish courts that that is the position. However, such a philosophical argument, or discussion, is not appropriate in this context. In this Third Reading debate, we are discussing what is in the Bill, and what is in the Bill is highly satisfactory. I believe that it will reinforce protection of the fundamental rights and freedoms of our people, that it will not lead to a landslide of litigation, and that it will provide valuable support to ensure that those fundamental rights and freedoms are sustained, as all who have spoken today wish them to be.

8.57 pm

Fiona Mactaggart (Slough): The right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan) referred to what is in the Bill. It may seem odd, on Third Reading, to deal with what is not in a Bill, especially given that, during today's debate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady should not talk about what is not in the Bill, because the purpose of Third Reading is to talk about what is in the Bill.

Fiona Mactaggart: Indeed, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The Home Secretary has shown a willingness to take on the issues that have been raised, and to amend the Bill. It has therefore become more comprehensive, and deals more effectively with Labour's manifesto promise to bring rights home. It may not be able to fulfil that promise completely, owing to what the Home Secretary, on Second Reading, described as a fine balance. It has not incorporated article 13 of the convention.

It is said that the existence of the Bill creates an article 13 right. Interestingly, subsequent case law may suggest that article 13 constitutes a separate right, which can be considered separately. Someone whose human rights are not delivered by the institutions of government may have the right to have that properly investigated. In the Aydin case, the inability of the Turkish authorities effectively to use their power to visit the scene of the incident—this was following a rape—to summon witnesses and to call forensic evidence was queried. For example, no officers had been questioned in the critical initial stages of the investigation. I expect that that criticism of the lack of a domestic remedy might sound familiar to the parents of Stephen Lawrence.

I believe that we can deliver a domestic remedy within the framework of the Bill as it is. I hope that the Home Secretary, in his usual approach of finding solutions—the task force that he has incorporated to work with him on this will do that effectively—will ensure that, in practice, that domestic remedy is delivered.

We have done some radical things during this Bill. To the Government's surprise, we have incorporated protocol 6. That was an important step. In the White Paper that preceded the Bill, the Government announced their intention to introduce legislation that would mean that our laws were compatible with protocol 7, so that we could incorporate it. I urge a similar approach to be taken on the fourth protocol.

We have already made announcements—there was a series of announcements during the summer—about the rights of British dependent territory citizens. If we extended their right to reside in the UK, some of the difficulties in ratifying the fourth protocol would be avoided, but what we have done in the Bill so far has consequences.

The committee that—even though we have not approved the present setting up of a commission to establish the work of the Bill—has been envisaged in Ministers' statements should start work early on. It could assist Ministers in the business of making clause 19 statements; it would be good if that happened early on. I would be interested if the Home Secretary could respond to that point. However, I hope that the committee will also be able to look at the issues of ratifying the protocols that remain unratified because that is part of the unfinished business. If we do that, we shall do a better job of bringing rights home.

Mr. Straw: With the leave of the House, I shall respond briefly to the points that have been made in the debate.

First, I thank the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Sir N. Lyell) for the trust of his remarks. I had hoped that, during the passage of the Bill, it might be possible to deal with matters in a way that did ensure that there was some consensus behind it. I am pleased that it looks as though that may be the case.

Of course I understand that the official Opposition—it is not their right, but their duty, to express different views—have reservations about aspects of the Bill. Its implementation needs to be not only prepared carefully, but monitored with great care.

Earlier in the debates, my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary referred to our intention, which we had flagged up in the White Paper, to establish, or to propose the establishment of, a parliamentary Committee on human rights—it is a matter for Parliament, not for us, to determine—to monitor progress in implementing the Act and the way in which it develops and, where appropriate, to make recommendations to Parliament for changes that may be needed.

I should like also to thank the right hon. Member for Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross (Mr. Maclennan) for his particularly generous remarks about me. I am grateful to him for those. As I said before, I am grateful not only for the co-operation but for the inspiration that he and his colleagues have provided. He was right to say that some of us have been later converts to the cause than he was. I should have taken more notice of the views of my former head of chambers, Sir Edward Gardner, when he was promoting his Human Rights Bill in 1987. He was a distinguished man, and I should have listened to him. Nevertheless, we have got there in the end.

Those of us who know Lord Lester know him to be indefatigable in pursuit of incorporation of the European convention on human rights. Although he is sometimes indefatigable to the point of exhausting his friends and colleagues, that only adds to our admiration of him. He has worked extremely hard on the issue and the Bill's passage, and he deserves our collective thanks.

I should deal with the points made on Scottish and Welsh incorporation of the convention. The Government's intention is that implementation will occur on the same date for all constituent parts of the United Kingdom. On the obligation of the Scottish Parliament, the Welsh Assembly and the Northern Ireland Assembly to ensure either that their legislation is compatible with the convention or that, if it is not, they state that it is not, as I said earlier—in an over-long intervention—the Government's intention is that the obligation will not apply to those institutions before it applies to the House and to the other place. I should add that, in practice, both this Government and the previous Government have observed an obligation to attempt to ensure that Government legislation is compatible with the convention, albeit currently such compatibility can be tested only at Strasbourg and not in United Kingdom courts.

My hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) asked a question about article 13. Article 13 states:

"Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity."

Although article 13 mentions a national authority, the truth is that it is there to provide a remedy for the international Court at Strasbourg. For that reason, the Government thought that it would be inappropriate to include article 13 in the Bill to incorporate the principal operational parts of the convention that provide substantive rights.

English law and Scots law have been imaginative and innovative in developing new remedies. As proof of that, one has only to consider development of the idea of judicial review, which—from an almost standing start—has developed into a rather large industry.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: The Home Office knows all about that.

Mr. Straw: That is true. However, we end up being judicially reviewed more regularly than some other Departments because of the nature of our business. It is right that we should be reviewed more regularly, as we are daily dealing with crucial issues of the liberty of the subject. I personally have no difficulty about the fact that the quasi-judicial decisions that I have to make—like the decisions that the former Attorney-General had to make—have to be made with very clear application of the law and judicial review.

Judicial review and many other remedies have been developed, and the Government believe that the courts will be imaginative in developing other remedies if they are needed. If—as I do not think will happen—there turns out to be some gap in the remedies, the safeguard is that it will be possible for litigants to go to Strasbourg, where article 13 will arise.

I do not want to go into too much detail about the Turkish case, except to say that it involved the most extraordinary allegations of failure against the Turkish police, failure on a scale that no one could conceive would apply in this country. The case involved the killing of civilian by a Turkish police officer and the almost total and wilful failure of the Turkish authorities to investigate. It is impossible to conceive of such a circumstance arising in this country. We considered the matter carefully but do not believe that we lose anything by the omission of article 13. Indeed, we think that there could be problems if we included it.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough): I apologise to the Home Secretary for intervening at the last gasp, but I do so on a narrow point that the Plymouth Brethren have asked me to put to him. The Plymouth Brethren occasionally have to exclude members, and they want a reassurance that, under clause 6, they will not be considered "a public authority". The Home Secretary kindly gave that reassurance in a letter to me on 25 June, but the Brethren would be grateful if he could confirm it on the Floor of the House.

Mr. Straw: Yes, I can. I am smiling because I have very good relations with the Exclusive Brethren in my constituency

Mr. Bob Russell (Colchester): That is the old brethren.

Mr. Straw: The old Labour Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) said that from a sedentary position.

In the debate on 20 May this year, I stated:

"the regulation of divine worship"— and I mean regulation—

"the administration of the sacrament, admission to Church membership or to the priesthood"— obviously, the term "admission" covers non-admission and exclusion—

"are, in our judgment, all private matters."—[Official Report, 20 May 1998; Vol. 312, c. 1015.]

It could not conceivably be asserted that, when it comes to questions of discipline, the Plymouth Brethren or the Exclusive Brethren are standing in the place of the state. I am therefore happy to give the hon. Gentleman the reassurance that he seeks.

We have had a very interesting debate. I am grateful to all hon. Members who have contributed, and I look forward to the Bill receiving its Third Reading.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read the Third time, and passed, with amendments.

St. Helena

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Betts.]

9.12 pm

Mr. Bob Russell (Colchester): The people—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. An hon. Member is addressing the House. Other hon. Members should leave the Chamber quietly.

Mr. Russell: The people of the island of St. Helena are not asking for anything new; they simply want restored to them the status which they enjoyed until it was shamefully removed by the previous Government under the British Nationality Act 1981. With citizens of other British dependent territories, they had the door slammed in their faces. They had their full British citizenship taken away, and found that they were no longer welcome as full members of the British family. Loyalty to the Crown and to Britain counted for nothing. There were rejected in a cynical move which embraced them and others from a handful of small British communities in various parts of the world in order to justify the introduction of legislation to stop people from Hong Kong coming to Britain.

St. Helenians have always and only been British. They have British nationality but not full citizenship, which makes them second-class citizens. The islanders seek full British citizenship status, a restoration of their ancient rights granted by the British Crown. I look to the present Government to put right the wrong of a previous Government and end the years of rejection and dejection experienced by the Saints, as residents of St. Helena are generally known.

The British dependent territories have a combined population of around 160,000, but tonight I shall confine my comments to the plight of those who reside on St. Helena. The island's entire population of some 5,500 could be accommodated in Colchester United's football stadium, with room to spare.

Not all the 13 populated territories seek what St. Helena is asking. I understand that some are content with their current status. I hope that tonight the Minister will give a commitment that, sooner rather than later, and certainly in time for the new millennium, the Saints will be able to rejoice in the restoration of their previous status of full British citizenship.

The door is currently locked. Recent speculation that perhaps the present Government are to open it is welcome, but is it true? It is not enough simply to say that the key has been found. The door needs to be unlocked and swung wide for the Saints to be invited back to where they rightly belong, to the status they had until 17 years ago—not so much marching in, but rather as members being welcomed back into the British family home whenever they are this way.

Is it seriously suggested, regardless of the previous Government's motives, that the restoration of full British citizenship to 5,500 residents of the island of St. Helena will somehow create difficulties for Britain? It is an insult and nonsense even to contemplate a single practical difficulty or justification to maintain the outrage that has existed since 1981.

I hope that the Minister will find her previous duty as Prisons Minister to be of help in considering releasing the Saints from the sentence of exile imposed on them by the Thatcher Government. She will, of course, be aware that Napoleon's exile is St. Helena's most historic claim to fame: while Napoleon would dearly have loved to leave the island for good, the vast majority of today's island residents do not wish permanently to leave their home in the south Atlantic, but seek simply the right to regain their status as full British citizens so that they can freely travel to Britain and return.

The St. Helena Government representative in London, Mrs. Catherine Hopkins, told the Foreign Affairs Committee on 18 November last year:

> "From St. Helena's point of view, I doubt very much whether very many Saints would want to come to take up permanent residence in the United Kingdom. We regard St. Helena as home and the young people of the island have made it quite clear that they wish to see the island develop rather than coming to England. They would like access, they would like the ability to move freely."

She added:

> "The idea that 5,500 St. Helenians are going to uproot themselves and come to Britain, where they would be very easily absorbed into the community is just ludicrous. There is no way it would happen."

The vessel RMS St. Helena is currently moored at Cardiff, and tomorrow evening it makes its somewhat infrequent sailing from the UK to the island. It would be nice if the captain could take a message of hope with him from tonight's debate.

To continue with the maritime theme, by one of those happy coincidences, today is Trafalgar day. Admiral Nelson was renowned for turning his blind eye. For 17 years, the British Government have been guilty of a double Nelson—closing their eyes and ears to the people of St. Helena. The time has come for Britain to stop wrestling with its conscience, and I look to the present Government to give St. Helena a fair break.

Napoleon would no doubt be amused that today a citizen of France has easier access to Britain than do residents of the British dependent territory of St. Helena. St. Helena is not the only island in the south Atlantic with British roots. Indeed, had it been invaded by Argentina as the Falkland Islands were in 1982, presumably it too would have had the British Nationality Act 1981 amended to release its residents from their current second-class status. They would also have benefited from massive sums of British Government aid, as the Falkland islanders have for almost two decades. St. Helena's only ship, the RMS St. Helena, was called in to support Britain in the Falklands conflict, with Saints volunteering to be part of the crew.

Britain has a moral duty to the island of St. Helena. In fairness, aid is given, but the amount is nothing like that given to the Falklands, which has a population less than half that of St. Helena—but then, St. Helena does not have oil.

I first took a deep interest in St. Helena—a small island with an area of just 47 square miles, 4,400 miles from Britain and situated midway between Africa and South America—when a constituent wrote to me. His grandfather was born on the island. Perhaps a more fitting reason for the strong links being established between Colchester and the island is that the patron saint of Colchester is St. Helena—same spelling, but different pronunciation. One of the town's secondary schools, which I and my family attended, is called St. Helena, as is the town's hospice. There is a statue of St. Helena on top of the town hall tower—the highest building on the skyline. St. Helena is a saint from Roman times, and Britain's first Roman capital was Colchester.

In June this year, a delegation of legislative councillors from St. Helena was welcomed to Colchester by the mayor. The official visit included a tour of St. Helena school and local craft workshops, which the Saints see as the type of business activity they need to help the island's economy. From January last year until July this year, a Colchester-based company, International Management Consultants Ltd., assisted the Government of St. Helena with its accounting systems and related matters. The current bishop of St. Helena has a sister who lives in a north Essex village not far from Colchester. I am aware of contacts between individual residents of Colchester and islanders. There are high hopes of establishing links between the island and St. Helena school.

The island of St. Helena was discovered by the Portuguese on 21 May 1502—St. Helena day. The English followed in 1588, but not until 1658 was it colonised, becoming a Crown colony in 1834. Britain settled St. Helena with British people, and brought in other ethnic groups who were integrated into the British community. The local population has no nationality other than British. Rights to full British citizenship were confirmed by royal charter in 1673. Islanders enjoyed those rights for more than three centuries, but the British Nationality Act 1981 removed them, making the islanders second-class citizens, and virtual prisoners on their own island.

I call on the Minister to give a pledge that steps to restore full British citizenship will begin without further delay, putting right a wrong that has caused so much unhappiness to the islanders for the best part of two decades. In the past year or so, the Foreign Affairs Committee has considered the plight of St. Helena as part of its dependent territories review interim report. A private Member's Bill to restore citizenship rights was presented by the Earl of Iveagh in the House of Lords. In this House, the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) proposed a British Nationality (St. Helena) Bill, but it was dropped in April for reasons that perhaps the Minister can explain.

We have been promised a White Paper for months on the policy towards British overseas territories. That will cover more than just St. Helena, whose unique case demands an urgent and unique response. For England's lost county, the status quo is not an option. Something must be done. St. Helenians have always been British. They are still British, and they only want the British Government to acknowledge that fact by restoring their birthright of full British citizenship.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Ms Joyce Quin): I congratulate the hon. Member for Colchester (Mr. Russell) on securing this Adjournment debate, and on his choice of subject. He referred to my previous ministerial portfolio. Somewhat to my surprise, I find that, for my first debate as a Minister in the Foreign Office with responsibility for Europe, I am responding to a debate on St. Helena. I should convey to the House the apologies of the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), who is abroad at the moment but to whom I shall report and with whom I shall discuss this debate.

Probably all of us who are present will have appreciated the comments of the hon. Member for Colchester about the connections that he, his family, his constituency and his town have with St. Helena. I wish him success in establishing further links between his area and the island.

In some ways, this debate is timely, because the comments of the hon. Member for Colchester can be very much taken into account in the overseas territories review. In another sense, however, it is perhaps not as timely. As he will realise, I am not in a position to give absolute answers to his questions, simply because the decision was taken to conduct a review of overseas territories, produce a White Paper, and come up with proposals, which we seek to do as soon as possible.

The hon. Member will be aware, too, that we are discussing the constitution of St. Helena with its legislative council. We must await the outcome of those discussions and other studies, such as the transport access study concerning St. Helena. Taken together, we hope that they will put us in a position to give the people of St. Helena a future to look forward to.

As the hon. Member for Colchester pointed out, St. Helena is a tiny island of 47 square miles lying in the south Atlantic, about 1,200 miles from Africa. It is one of the oldest and most remote of our overseas territories. It has certainly been described as a beautiful island. I am sorry not to have had the opportunity to visit it, but in the past, and in preparation for the debate, I have spoken to people who have been there and who follow events there very closely. From what I have been told, there can be no doubt about St. Helena's special place in the family of our overseas territories, each of which has a unique character.

One hardship that St. Helena has had to face is the fact that it has few natural resources. Agriculture, fishing and a growing tourism-related industry are the main activities in the private sector. The role of the public sector—largely Government—is still considerable. The economy of St. Helena continues to rely on British aid for the bulk of new investment and to help balance the Government's revenue budget. That background will be well known not only to the hon. Member for Colchester but to other hon. Members who I know follow the affairs of St. Helena. It certainly affects all decisions about the island and, indeed, the status of its people.

Towards the end of last year, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced that he would set up a review of British dependent territories in order to take a fresh look at our relations with them. In his speech to the Dependent Territories Association on 4 February, he announced some broad interim findings. Above all, he offered the dependent territories a new, modern, secure and lasting partnership with Britain. He emphasised the importance of the territories to us, and the fact that we take pride in the strong historic links—to which the hon. Member for Colchester referred—that have led to a unique family bond which matters to both sides.

Britain remains committed to those sovereign territories that wish to retain their link with us, but the relationship needs to be brought up to date to reflect the idea of partnership in the modern world. One measure that my right hon. Friend took to reflect that change was to alter the way in which the territories were to be referred to. They are now to be known by the more appropriate title of UK overseas territories.

My right hon. Friend also announced that, as part of the new framework for partnership, my noble Friend Baroness Symons would become the first Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister with responsibility for the UK overseas territories. Furthermore, to improve dialogue and understanding between Britain and the overseas territories, an annual UK overseas territories council will be established to provide a forum for Chief Ministers and councillors to raise their concerns directly with the Minister. I know that they feel strongly about such access.

Those and other aspects of the review will be reflected in the White Paper that we shall lay before Parliament. It will cover a range of issues relevant to the overseas territories, and will give details of the partnership that we wish to promote. It will set out ideas for promoting the good governance of the territories, and address constitutional and human rights issues. It will also consider ways of accelerating sustainable development in economic terms and ensuring a sustainable environment, and how to promote the economic prosperity of the UK overseas territories within internationally accepted standards of financial regulation.

The House may wish to know that the elected members of the St. Helena legislative council wrote to the Secretary of State in February congratulating him on his speech to the Dependent Territories Association conference. They welcomed the new partnership and the appointment of Baroness Symons as the Minister with special responsibility. I hope that they will find the White Paper, describing in full the modernised partnership that we want to create and the action needed to take to create it, acceptable, and that they will be content with the blueprint for the future that it sets out.

Mr. Peter Bradley (The Wrekin): I do not seek to anticipate the proposals that the White Paper will make, but does the Minister at least accept that the deprivation of the right to citizenship by the previous Government in 1981 was a callous and insensitive act, which not only slighted the people of St. Helena but critically disadvantaged them?

Ms Quin: I understand that the citizens of St. Helena expressed their great disappointment, but it is important to find a way forward that both recognises their unique position and considers the position of overseas territories in general, to find something that works for the future, with which they will feel happy.

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): I welcome the hon. Lady to the Dispatch Box in her new role. Does she accept that there is a difference between the position of St. Helena and its dependencies in terms of citizenship, and that of the other overseas territories, which involves issues of reciprocity that do not apply to St. Helena? Secondly, will she tell us when the White Paper will be produced, as it is already overdue?

Ms Quin: There are other territories to which, as in the case of St. Helena, issues of reciprocity do not apply. I do not think that the island is unique in that respect. As for the timing of the White Paper, we hope to be able to publish it by the end of the year, but I cannot give the hon. Gentleman a guarantee from the Dispatch Box tonight. Given that we are talking about a number of overseas territories, I hope that he will appreciate that we want to ensure that we produce a White Paper that addresses all the issues concerning all the territories, and provides a basis on which we can build for the future.

I know that hon. Members have raised such issues in past debates, and some of those debates were rightly mentioned by the hon. Member for Colchester. I certainly accept that the reception of the White Paper in St. Helena will depend largely on how it tackles the issue of the St. Helenians' claim to British citizenship. However, the issue of British citizenship is a complex one for the UK overseas territories. We are reviewing the appropriateness of the status to see whether changes are needed.

A number of Government Departments are involved—it is not simply a Foreign and Commonwealth Office matter. Alteration of the status has implications which Departments need to consider. The Government are sympathetic to the concerns of St. Helena on the issue, and we have told the House so several times in the past. We have not changed our attitude in that respect.

I would like to take this occasion to say a few words about how we are trying to address the economic status of St. Helena—an issue every bit as important to the inhabitants. In 1996, the St. Helena Government conducted widespread consultations, which led to the compilation and publication of a strategic review. This set out a range of policies and goals to deliver the St. Helena vision of a prosperous, peaceful and democratic society for all, achieved through sustainable economic, environmental and social development, leading to a healthy, and eventually financially independent, island.

Incidentally, I accept the point that the hon. Member for Colchester made—that, in general, people are not seeking to leave their home territories. People want to feel secure and at ease in their home land, and I accept that the citizenship argument is not motivated by those concerns. I also accept that, in terms of their ability to travel, the inhabitants of St. Helena welcome the argument.

The strategic review formed the basis of the St. Helena Government aid submission, on which negotiations took place between the St. Helena and UK Governments in 1996. These negotiations led to agreement on a country policy plan. This was a major step forward in the relationship between the British and St. Helena Governments, and underlined the importance of a partnership in which the members of the legislative council have a major role and responsibility.

The UK Government agreed to make available more than £26 million for the three years from April 1997 to March 2000. The country policy plan is monitored regularly to see that it is on track, and to make any adjustments needed. A review of the country policy plan took place in January this year, and concluded that considerable progress had been made. Aid funds for the second year were therefore authorised.

Another review is expected to take place in December. It will look at the extent to which the structural adjustment programme agreed between the two Governments is being followed. Decisions on aid support for the public sector investment programme, which assists the St. Helena Government with infrastructure development and renewal, will be taken in the light of the evaluation. The country policy plan has met the essential need to have a viable development strategy for the island's future.

The plan recognised that there was an immediate need to improve the efficiency of the public sector. It acknowledged that private sector development was necessary to stimulate St Helena's economy and to help resolve the unemployment problem. Much progress has been made. Attempts are being made to find overseas markets for products such as honey and beauty products, and to develop coffee production on the island. However, more needs to be done.

One area in which I hope we shall see progress is in complying with the aid agreement, whereby consumers of the enhanced infrastructure facilities—for example, water—contribute to the full cost recovery of that capital expenditure. The money thus generated can then be used under social services provision to target the most needy in the community and enable them to pay their bills.

In July 1998, the St. Helena Government signed an agreement with Argos Ltd., a British-Falkland Islands fisheries company. From the beginning of next year, the company will invest in a range of shore-based facilities, including a freezing and processing plant which will offer employment opportunities for a number of St. Helenians. It will process the catch of St. Helena fishermen as well as that of the company's vessels.

Other projects that will help the people of St. Helena include a management scheme to enable farmers to grow fruit commercially once again, road improvements, and the improvement of water quality.

Technical co-operation funds from the Department for International Development are paying for 24 key technical and administrative staff on the island. Those funds also pay for a number of St. Helenians per year to come to the United Kingdom to study at colleges and universities.

The St. Helena Development Agency was established to promote the private sector. It provides financial services, business advice and training. More than 100 jobs have been created or sustained by the agency in the past year.

As I said, St. Helena has few resources except its people. We and the St. Helena Government have taken steps to ensure that as many as possible of them can develop their talents and lead productive lives. Some 60 St. Helenians are in the UK under the training and work experience scheme. Others have been recruited into the British armed forces. Not only do those schemes teach valuable skills: they also give schoolchildren on the island aims to work for, which is important.

The Cheltenham and Gloucester college of higher education has a contract with the Department for International Development to provide educational services to St. Helena and to arrange training in the UK for its teachers and students. With the help of the college, schools on the island are preparing to implement the UK national curriculum in English, maths and science. A scheme was also agreed to improve vocational training on St. Helena. All those measures are valuable ways in which the status of St. Helena's work force can be improved.

We have also taken some direct measures to minimise unemployment and increase incomes. New work permit arrangements announced by the Minister of State in December 1997 allow 30 people per year to come to the United Kingdom to work for up to three years accompanied by their dependants. A further 700 St. Helenians work on Ascension island, and about 300 have found work in the Falkland islands.

Offshore employment has helped to achieve a reduction in unemployment, as have measures taken by the St. Helena Government, for which I pay them credit. Offshore employment has also produced a significant flow of remittance income, which in turn has helped to improve and expand the private sector housing sector. However, offshore employment is not always a one-way benefit, and it can create problems by exacerbating serious shortages of skilled labour in St. Helena, particularly in teaching, nursing and the police force. A task force has been formed by the St. Helena Government to find solutions to that problem.

A major problem affecting St. Helena is the difficulty of communications with the rest of the world. I remember reading the debate in another place about St. Helena, in which a former Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs talked of having dispatched one of his Ministers there, and of not seeing him for several weeks thereafter. He was surprised, but when he looked into the distances involved and how one gets there, he could well understand why that was the case.

There is no airport on St. Helena. Regular access is provided by RMS St. Helena—a cargo and passenger vessel, owned by the St. Helena Government and operated by Curnow Shipping Ltd., based in Falmouth. That ship offers a scheduled service between St. Helena, Ascension, the United Kingdom and Cape Town, and it is subsidised by the Department for International Development by about £1.3 million each year.

As I said in my initial response to the hon. Gentleman, an access study to review ways of tackling the problem was announced by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for International Development in December 1997. That study started on St. Helena, and will be followed up in the United Kingdom. Its terms of reference will include all forms of transport and the feasibility of an airport.

The tourist infrastructure on St. Helena is still underdeveloped. A director of tourism was appointed last year, and she has developed good contacts, particularly in South Africa. Yachts travelling across the Atlantic have been encouraged to stop in St. Helena, and a yacht race—the Governor's cup—is organised every other year with the Cape Town sailing club. The next race is in December, when I understand that a yacht will, for the first time, be crewed by St. Helenians. We wish them and the other participants well.

I conclude with the words used by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to the Dependent Territories Association in February. We will enter into a partnership with the overseas territories based on mutual trust and respect. We already have a firm basis from the past, founded on centuries of shared history. Together we face a new millennium, and together we will carry forward the relationship on a more modern basis.

Question put and agreed to.

Oral Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

The Secretary of State was asked—

Subsidised Employment (New Deal)

1. Mr. John Healey (Wentworth): If he will make a statement on the progress of the subsidised employment option of the new deal. [55090]

The Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities (Mr. Andrew Smith): Like the rest of the new deal, that option has got off to an encouraging start. By the end of August, 7,000 young people were in jobs found through that option, in addition to the 16,000 in unsubsidised jobs.

Mr. Healey: I welcome that response. What assessment has my right hon. Friend made of the use of the new deal job option in Wales to create 70 new classroom assistants, and in the NHS in Scotland to create 270 new health service jobs, and what plans does he have to encourage similar initiatives in England?

Mr. Smith: Both those opportunities got off the ground only recently, and we are following them closely. The important thing, whether the job opportunities are in the public or the private sector, is that the processes work in terms of matching the young person with the right potential to the vacancy that meets the needs of the right employer. Whether people are in the classroom, or working in a hospital or a nursery, the important thing is that each one is the right person for the job.

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire): Is the Minister aware that, in the Cambridge travel-to-work area, by the end of September, only eight of the 667 persons eligible for the new deal had been placed through the subsidised employment option? Does he recognise the fact that, in some areas such as mine, it would be more relevant for resources to be directed towards, for example, those who are disabled, rather than being spent on promoting an option that is not being taken up or well used?

Mr. Smith: It would not be surprising to find that a relatively small number of people in the hon. Gentleman's area had moved through into employment at this stage of the programme. As the programme did not start throughout the country until April, we would expect the bulk of the intake still to be in the gateway. The hon. Gentleman is right to refer to the importance of provision for disabled people. I remind him that the new deal for young people provides for disabled people too, and, so far, the statistics that we have released showing the progress made by disabled people have been encouraging.

Mr. Tom Levitt (High Peak): Over the summer, I took the opportunity to visit all three of the jobcentres in my constituency to see for myself how the new deal was progressing. I was impressed by what I saw. Will my right hon. Friend take the opportunity to congratulate the staff of the Employment Service on the care, diligence and purpose that they are showing in responding to the challenge that the new deal presents?

Mr. Smith: Indeed, I take pleasure in joining my hon. Friend in congratulating the staff of the Employment Service and the other partners who are working with us to make the new deal a success because, in order to succeed, it has to be a national crusade involving everybody in helping young and long-term unemployed people into jobs. There is no doubt that the commitment of Employment Service staff, the way in which quite a radical culture change is being driven through the service, and especially the dedication of the personal advisers, are greatly appreciated, both by young and long-term unemployed people, and by employers.

Mr. Damian Green (Ashford): The degree of complacency that the Minister displays about the new deal is genuinely alarming. He now quotes figures showing that there are 7,000 subsidised jobs that would not have been there without the new deal, but, on 24 September, he was boasting that more than 25,000 employers had signed up to the new deal. Does he agree that, according to his own figures, there must be at least 18,000 firms that have not yet found a single placement for a new deal trainee? I think that there have been more press releases about the new deal than jobs created by it. Will the Minister tell us exactly how many firms that signed up to the new deal have failed to find even one suitable trainee? That would be one important measure of the failure of the scheme.

Mr. Smith: If there is any complacency around, it is among those on the Opposition Front Bench. Let us not forget—the Conservative party was so complacent about youth and long-term unemployment that there would have been no deal if it had had its way. That is the utmost in complacency. As to the progress of young people into jobs, 23,000 moving into jobs and 16,000 into unsubsidised jobs is a creditable achievement for a programme that only rolled out nationally in April. That is 23,000 more than would have been achieved under the hon. Gentleman's policies.

Education Action Zones

2. Mr. Ivor Caplin (Hove): If he will make a statement on the first 25 education action zones and on his plans for the next round of bids. [55091]

The Minister for School Standards (Ms Estelle Morris): The first 12 education action zones started on 1 September and 13 more begin on 1 January. I expect to invite applications for more zones in the new year.

Mr. Caplin: I thank my hon. Friend for her reply. Is she aware that, during the recess, the Conservative party said that it had left us a golden education legacy? If that were the case, presumably the private sector would have been involved in partnerships in education for some years before we came to power. Clearly, that is not the case. Is not the partnership between the private and public sectors crucial to the long-term stability and economy of this country and to its education, which is why education action zones are an important way forward for education authorities?

Ms Morris: My hon. Friend is right. There was no golden legacy in education—try telling the four out of 10 eleven-year-olds who were not even taught to read and write and use numbers effectively, and their parents, that there was. We shall change that. I agree with my hon. Friend about the importance of partnerships. One positive aspect of education action zones is the willingness with which industry, commerce and other partners have joined with schools, pupils and governors to raise standards for children. That is not just in the interests of schools—every person in this country has a vested interest in getting education right. The partnership being built in education action zones is one symbol of that.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York): Does the Minister agree that, if the Government adopted a less ambivalent attitude to the participation of private companies in education action zones, companies would be more positive about joining in and less scared of participating?

Ms Morris: The hon. Lady refers to an ambivalent attitude—perhaps that is better than no attitude, which is what we had from the previous Government. I do not know what information the hon. Lady has read. BT, American Express and KPMG are partners in the action zone to which my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Caplin) referred. Kelloggs, American Express and Arthur Andersen are all top-rate companies which are joining with local companies to work with education action zones. People from industry are chairing education action zones and industry is represented on every single action zone forum. We are getting the partnership right, because it is not just words—there is action out there, and that partnership in action will raise standards. There is much to do because of the mess that the previous Government left us.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): I thank my hon. Friend for establishing an education action zone in Halifax and for recognising the problems that we faced. Will she join me in congratulating Anna White, her teachers, the governors, the local education authority and, most of all, the children for—in the words of Ofsted—having transformed the Ridings? I also pay tribute to the Secretary of State, who has shown such special interest in this school.

Ms Morris: I am delighted that my hon. Friend has given me the opportunity to welcome the education action zone in Halifax, which will build on what has gone on at the Ridings. Yesterday was a good news day for education and for the Ridings school, and not only because of what has happened there and because the life chances of a generation of children in Halifax will be better as a result of the work that has been done in the past few years. Perhaps even more important than that, it was a good day because of the lesson it teaches us—that any school can be turned round with good leadership, good teaching, and strong partnership involving Government and local authorities.

I wish to add my thanks, and the thanks of Ministers, to Anna White for the work that she has done. She deserves to be congratulated, and she will teach others to lead schools in equally good ways. I join my hon. Friend in her thanks to others, but I should also like to thank my hon. Friend, who has been assiduous in arguing on behalf of the schools in Halifax. She has driven the matter forward, and I am sure that she took some pleasure in yesterday's announcement.

Mr. David Willetts (Havant): I begin by congratulating the Minister on her promotion. I believe that this is her first appearance in the House since she became Minister of State and I shall mention it even if her Back-Bench colleagues do not. Will she clarify what the waffle about partnership with the private sector means? Does she agree that, both in education action zones and councils such as Surrey or Hackney, it is acceptable for private firms to make a profit from contracts to run state schools if it is in the interests of pupils? If she gives a clear yes, she can be assured of Opposition support, but we need a clear answer to a simple question. Can private companies make money from running state schools, yes or no?

Ms Morris: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his kind words, but he somewhat spoilt it after that. He may call it waffle, but when some of the nation's top companies go into schools, mentor children, offer learning opportunities and put in business expertise and resources, I would call it not waffle but giving our children better opportunities to achieve at a higher level. We are in favour of partnership. Schools and local authorities have always bought services from the private sector and some of those have included management consultancy. That is happening in one school in Hackney and it is being considered in Guildford—the authorities there will come to us when they have worked out their plans. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that buying services in the private sector does not amount to schools going private; it is not a change in the status of the schools. I very much regret that his present attitude to industry seems to be to question constantly and to undermine its efforts to enter partnerships with schools. He should put first not political point scoring but the interests of schools and children

Yvette Cooper (Pontefract and Castleford): Will my hon. Friend consider broadening the focus of future education action zones? In Castleford, the number of children getting five or more A to C GCSEs is 14 per cent. below the national average and the number staying on beyond 16 is a massive 40 per cent. below. Will she consider bids from places such as Castleford which concentrate on staying-on rates as well as raising standards?

Ms Morris: I apologise profusely to my hon. Friend for that. She is right and we shall certainly consider education action zones that decide on that as one of their targets. Continuing in education has never been as important for any generation as it is for this one, whether it be for academic or vocational courses. If children do not continue in education, they will miss out on the opportunities at the end of this century and the start of the next. I would very much welcome it if the area to which she referred and others made that one of their targets.

University for Industry

3. Mr. Phil Willis (Harrogate and Knaresborough): When he expects the university for industry to be launched; what its projected budget is for each of the next three years; from where those funds will be provided; and if he will make a statement. [55092]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. George Mudie): The university for industry will be launched in 2000. The Government have committed £15 million for start-up costs and £40 million for the financial year 1999–2000. Future years funding will be announced in due course. Other moneys are being expended through pilot schemes under the European social fund Adapt programme.

Mr. Willis: I welcome the hon. Gentleman to his new position. Our paths have been crossing for the past 20 years and it is perhaps appropriate that his first question this Question Time should be from the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough, who educated both his sons. May I say how pleased we are that we at last have some information about the university for industry and a launch date? Will the money that the Minister has announced—about £40 million plus £6.25 million, which is for Learning Direct—come out of the higher education budget? If that is so, does it not mean that, by 2000, it will represent a 16.5 per cent. cut in the money announced in the comprehensive spending review?

Mr. Mudie: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his kind remarks. My first question could not have come from a nicer person, although I might change my mind when I see who is to ask the second.

The university for industry prospectus was issued in March and should be available in the Library—if hon. Members want a copy, I shall certainly provide them with one. The money for the university is not from the higher education budget, but from a separate budget, which was negotiated under the comprehensive spending review. The £6.5 million for the direct line is additional to the £40 million.

Mr. Derek Wyatt (Sittingbourne and Sheppey): Did my hon. Friend read in the Financial Times this week that "UK banks and building societies are on the verge of forming a national network of cash machines for the first time"? Will he open negotiations with the banks and the lottery, which is also a national grid of sorts, as the downtime between midnight and 6 am when bank cash desks and the lottery are not used provides an opportunity to deliver the university for industry on a different system?

Mr. Mudie: Although I am not directly responsible for the national grid for learning, I am aware that my hon. Friend is alive to technological complexities and interchangeability. His point will be taken on board.

Mr. Ian Bruce (South Dorset): The Opposition would welcome the establishment as quickly as possible of the university for industry, which I hope will be a university for life and continuing learning, but would not it be more sensible to put into the scheme a large lump of the money that is being wasted on the new deal? Is the Minister aware that the number of people who came out of long-term unemployment in the most recent quarter is lower than the number of people who did so a year ago? He could pay for continuing learning by cutting some of the waste.

Mr. Mudie: The House will be pleased to see the conversion of Conservative Members to the new deal—for a year or so, we have been wondering why they were opposed to it. The university for industry has to date received £55 million, and further moneys are—depending on the corporate plan—to come, including £76 million from ESF Adapt programme for development, which is a considerable amount. The new deal has brought care, sympathy and action to our poorer communities—

Mr. Bruce: It is not working.

Mr. Mudie: It may not be working as well as Conservative Members want, but they did nothing in government—at least we have introduced the new deal.

School Transport

4. Dr. George Turner (North-West Norfolk): What representations he has received on arrangements governing travel from home to school following publication of the Government's White Paper on the future of transport. [55093]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. Charles Clarke): We have received more than 100 letters from members of the public as a result of the White Paper, and we welcome people's views on how its aims can be put into practice. On 13 October, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport, my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health and I hosted the first meeting of the school travel advisory group, which was attended by a wide variety of interested organisations. The group will be making recommendations.

Dr. Turner: As a fellow Norfolk Member of Parliament, I am particularly pleased to give my hon. Friend a warm welcome to his new role at the Dispatch Box. Will he acknowledge the many problems, especially in rural counties such as Norfolk, that arise from school transport? As a new member of the ministerial team, will he take a fresh look at some old issues?

Mr. Clarke rose—

Dr. Turner: In doing so, will he consider the clear need for integration between the variety of methods of transport? For example, safe walking and safe cycling need to be examined with bussing to school. Moreover, will he use the Government initiative on raising standards—action zones—as a way forward in experimentation and innovation, so that new partnerships can produce better solutions for the next millennium?

Mr. Clarke: I thank my hon. Friend. I am always a little too quick out of the traps. I congratulate my hon. Friend on his campaigning on this issue. He is right to say that, in Norfolk and rural counties throughout the country, this is a major issue. A total of £380 million a year is spent by local education authorities on school transport. We are prepared to look afresh at those issues. That is why we had the meeting on 13 October to which I referred. It was a joint meeting between the Departments of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, of Health and for Education and Employment. We believe that the publication of the Government's White Paper on integrated transport strategy gives us a basis for addressing those issues in a proper way. In that context, we are prepared to look at experimental schemes to investigate ways in which we might approach the issue in particular localities.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): From Her Majesty's Opposition Benches, I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his appointment as a junior Minister. I have seen him around Parliament for many years, although only latterly as a Member. Does the hon. Gentleman believe that it is unjust that, although free school transport is available, not all pupils in secondary education are entitled to it as of right? I am referring particularly to the decision of some local education authorities—I am thinking about one that is Labour controlled—not to allow sixth-formers in secondary schools in my constituency and throughout the county of Cheshire to take advantage of free school transport. Will the Minister look at that? Does he not think that the situation is unfair?

Mr. Clarke: I thank the hon. Gentleman for those words of congratulation. I do not think that the situation is unfair, but I acknowledge that the current legislative framework, which was established in 1944 and which has not been amended substantially since then, is very much out of time. That is why we need to look at all the issues across the whole range in the context of an integrated transport strategy. The group I mentioned earlier is looking at each of the issues carefully and will take account of the points raised by the hon. Gentleman. It is extremely important to emphasise that the way to solve this problem is through integrated transport strategies of the type that the Government are pioneering and that we hope will deliver results in the future.

LEAs (Capital Projects)

5. Mr. Peter L. Pike (Burnley): What additional funding in constant value terms is now available to local education authorities for capital projects in 1998–99. [55094]

The Minister for School Standards (Ms Estelle Morris): In 1998–99, an additional £347 million has been made available to local education authorities for capital projects. That is over and above previous plans. Some £257 million has been made available through the new deal for schools programme; the remaining £90 million was announced by the Chancellor in his November 1997 Budget to reduce infant class sizes, eliminate the need for outside toilets and improve energy efficiency in schools.

Mr. Pike: Will my hon. Friend confirm that the Government are committed to achieving good school premises and to spending on them the money that is necessary after 18 years of neglect and financial starvation for local education authorities and schools? Will she confirm that the Government recognise in the comprehensive spending review and the doubling of money available over the next five years that the condition of school premises plays a vital part in the education of our children?

Ms Morris: I am delighted to do that. My hon. Friend has been assiduous in campaigning for capital resources for schools in his constituency. He will be delighted that his local authority has received £4 million in new deal for schools money—£2 million more than in the last full year of the Tory Government. Our children have a right to be educated in schools that are decent and fit for learning and our teachers have a right to work in that sort of environment. We started from an incredibly low base given the disastrous approach of the previous Government to the quality of our school buildings. However, we have begun to turn that around and we shall continue to do so in the rest of this Parliament.

Mr. Nick St. Aubyn (Guildford): A school in my constituency may benefit from private capital being invested to improve its facilities if the Minister's previous answer were to be clarified. Does the Minister welcome the involvement of private sector firms, which may make a profit, in managing schools that need to be turned around? Does she agree that it would be discriminatory and unfounded to disallow such profit-making organisations from playing a part in improving standards in our schools? Does she agree that to deny them the right to play such a part would mean denying the schools the opportunity to make use of a range of talents and resources that they may need to help them?

Ms Morris: I thought that the hon. Gentleman was going to thank me for the extra £2 million NDS funding that his local authority has received. Like the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts), he preferred to try to score political points instead of considering the needs of children. If Surrey proposes plans to the Department, we shall consider them, as we have said that we shall, and as we have an obligation to do. I must say that, if the hon. Gentleman and his political colleagues in Surrey had paid half as much attention and given half as much passion to stopping their schools failing, we should not be in this position.

Common Funding Methodology

6. Mr. David Chaytor (Bury, North): What plans he has to establish a common funding methodology for 16 to 19-year-old students. [55095]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. George Mudie): None, but we are alive to the concerns of the issue and will watch closely the effects of three factors: first, the use that local education authorities make of the greater freedoms provided by the fair funding regulations; secondly, the effect of the extra money—£100 million this year and £255 million next year—that we have put into the further education sector; and, thirdly, how well and quickly the collaborative protocol agreed between the further education sector, the LEAs and the TEC National Council has an effect.

Mr. Chaytor: I thank my hon. Friend for that reply and add my congratulations on his appointment to the Front Bench. Will he meet representatives of the college sector to discuss the issue further? When will the latest version of the funding costs comparison report be published?

Mr. Mudie: I congratulate my hon. Friend on the ten-minute Bill that he introduced yesterday on the subject. The document will be published as soon as possible and certainly this year. I am happy to meet him and any of his colleagues on any occasion to discuss the matter.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): Will the Minister with responsibility for lifelong learning accept congratulations from the Opposition on his appointment to an important position? Does he accept that the funding problem is by no means new and that successive Ministers, including myself, have wrestled with it and tried to mitigate the consequences? In the real world, the problems are caused not so much by the different funding streams or the fact that further education has traditionally been funded at the margin and schools have been funded on an average cost basis, but by the danger of destabilising sixth-form provision. Will the Minister neverless accept that we welcome the attempts to bring the various parties together? Anything that he can do to reduce the problems will be welcome.

Mr. Mudie: I thank the hon. Gentleman for those remarks. The funding problem is difficult and we all wrestle with it. I do not wish to be political, but the problem was made worse by the era of competition between the sectors that was introduced by the previous Government and by the cuts that the further education sector experienced. Now that we have increased the money for further education, we might have a better atmosphere in which to work towards a solution.

Literacy Summer Schools

7. Helen Jones (Warrington, North): What assessment he has made of the value of the 1998 literacy summer schools; and if he will make a statement. [55096]

12. Mr. Bill Rammell (Harlow): If he will make a statement on the initial results of the literacy summer schools. [55102]

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. David Blunkett): This year's summer schools are being evaluated by the National Foundation for Educational Research. The report will be received in November and I will place copies in the Library. A sample evaluation of 200 of this year's summer schools has shown substantial results. The summer schools were over-subscribed and many children could not get places. Half those evaluated showed an improvement in their reading of six months or more and that is a tremendous achievement for those summer schools and a tremendous fillip for the education of those children.

Helen Jones: I thank my right hon. Friend for that reply. As he knows, I had three summer schools in my constituency and I was impressed by the work that was done in them. Does he agree that they would not have been so successful but for the dedication and enthusiasm of the staff, both teaching and non-teaching? Will he take this opportunity to congratulate them on the time and effort that they put in, which has raised reading standards substantially for many children?

Mr. Blunkett: I am delighted to commend the teaching and non-teaching staff and the parents who committed time to the summer schools. I can confirm that following the success of 557 literacy schools and 51 numeracy schools this year, we intend to double the number of summer schools next year. At least 1,200 will provide a link between primary and secondary schooling and an opportunity to show to anyone who doubts it the commitment of staff, parents and the community to raising standards in education.

Mr. Rammell: May I tell the Secretary of State about my experience of visiting the summer literacy schools in my constituency? The commitment and enthusiasm of the young people were heart warming. May I tell him too about my discussions with teachers about the Government's overall approach—

Madam Speaker: Order. This is Question Time.

Mr. Rammell: I am getting to it, Madam Speaker. We are setting targets and using the literacy hour and summer schools to improve standards. Is not that the fundamental difference between what we are doing and the attitude of the previous Government, who, far too often, simply accepted educational under-performance as a fact of life?

Mr. Blunkett: I agree entirely. It is a credit to the schools of Harlow that five of the eight summer schools in Essex were held in that town. I commend to the House what my hon. Friend has said. It is important to keep reiterating that there were no summer schools when we took office. The Government are making a difference by action rather than words and by investing where the Conservative Government merely wrung their hands. Take the example of the Ridings school, and the way in which it has been led by Anna White. I saw that school's improvement, and I was able to announce to parents and teachers that there would be a summer school when I was the first Minister ever to visit the school. The Ridings proves that if a commitment is made and resources are available, we can succeed.

Mrs. Theresa May (Maidenhead): We are talking about the Government's targets for improving literacy skills. Is not the reality that the Government have been blown off course in meeting their targets for literacy and numeracy? The Secretary of State talks of action, not words, but this summer's results failed to meet up to the Government's words. Figures for key stage 2 results published earlier this month show that the Government have been blown off course on literacy because progress is not good enough to hit their targets. Furthermore, numeracy results show a fall rather than an improvement. The Government simply are not going to hit their targets. The Secretary of State is reported as saying that if the Government did not hit their targets, he would resign. Will he confirm that?

Mr. Blunkett: I shall give myself a chance to do the job before I consider resigning. It may have escaped the hon. Lady's notice that the policies carried through in the first year of the Labour Government reflected the total failure of the previous Government to tackle literacy and numeracy. They failed even to put in place a basic curriculum for teacher training in literacy and numeracy. They failed to put in place a literacy and numeracy strategy. We put a framework in place, which started in September. When our numeracy strategy is in place next year, we shall transform the abysmal results that are the miserable legacy that we inherited from the Conservatives into a triumph. Instead of six out of 10 children being able to read and write, eight out of 10—and eventually 10 out of 10—will be able to do so when they leave primary school.

Mr. Bob Blizzard (Waveney): Literacy summer schools must be seen in conjunction with the literacy hour in primary schools. Primaries in my constituency are very positive about that, and the kids enjoy it. The teachers are keen to feed back ideas about the literacy hour to strengthen the project in the light of their experiences. Will my right hon. Friend ensure that a clear and manageable mechanism exists to allow schools to feed their experience to his Department?

Mr. Blunkett: Yes, we are keen to do that. That is why the immediate survey of 200 has taken place and why the evaluation of the national foundation is taking place. We must learn what works best and, obviously, set aside those things that are not working. I should like to take this opportunity to say that when I visited one of the earlier numeracy schools in August, I found imaginative work, inspiring children to want to learn. I should like to see that transferred into the main curriculum programmes, so that children rejoice in learning, not just in the summer but throughout the whole of their school life.

EU Awareness

8. Mr. Howard Flight (Arundel and South Downs): What steps are being taken to promote awareness of the EU in schools. [55097]

The Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities (Mr. Andrew Smith): Awareness of the European Union in schools is promoted mainly through the study requirements for geography, history and modern languages laid down in the national curriculum.

Mr. Flight: The Minister will be aware that at the end of last year and the beginning of this year the Minister of State in the other place circulated a large pack to heads of all schools about the EU. I had letters from more than one head in my constituency complaining about this because, on looking through it, in fairness it was propaganda in favour of the euro and of the concept of a European state. In the light of the Neill report comments in particular, will the Minister undertake that the Government are careful that information only, not propaganda, is circulated?

Mr. Smith: We certainly need information and not propaganda, but I am not sure about the hon. Gentleman's definition of which is which. Surely it is sensible that young people whose future and economic prosperity turn to a large extent on our links with European partners should know something about the EU and be properly equipped critically to discuss it. Of course we want balanced teaching on this as on other issues. I am confident that this can and should be left to the good sense of head teachers and classroom teachers acting under their statutory requirements.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): Is my right hon. Friend aware that many schools have improved their knowledge of the EU by establishing a connection with schools in Europe through using the world wide web and electronic mail? Does he consider that that is a useful way of acquiring information? Will he think about incorporating such collaborations within the national grid for learning?

Mr. Smith: I am sure that contact, whether through the internet or school exchanges, which are such a well-established feature of school life, has an enormous amount to contribute. I shall, indeed, pursue my hon. Friend's suggestion. Our young people deserve the opportunity to have accurate balanced information, as I was saying earlier, and to meet and exchange ideas with other young people, whether elsewhere in the European Union or in the world, and the internet provides that great opportunity.

Mr. Christopher Gill (Ludlow): Can the Minister confirm that the glossy children's comic produced by the European Commission and ludicrously entitled "The Raspberry Ice Cream War" has been pulped? In his reply, will he tell the House exactly what his consideration was in taking the decision to pulp that comic and how much it has cost the public purse to produce it?

Mr. Smith: As far as I am aware the comic has not been pulped, but is piled up in a warehouse somewhere in Oxfordshire. It undoubtedly was an ill-judged and, in part, factually inaccurate publication. The EU Commission representative here, Mr. Geoffrey Martin, sensibly decided that it was inappropriate to distribute it. What happens to it is for the Commission to decide. The Commission might want to donate it to Oxfordshire's recycling effort or simply send it back to Brussels.

Truancy

9. Mr. Chris Pond (Gravesham): What evidence he has evaluated on links between truancy and unregulated term–time employment by children of school age. [55098]

The Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities (Mr. Andrew Smith): My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has lead responsibility on employment of schoolchildren. A review of child employment law is currently being undertaken by officials from his Department, the Department for Education and Employment, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Cabinet Office and the Health and Safety Executive. Children may not, of course, be employed to work during school hours.

Mr. Pond: I thank my right hon. Friend for that answer. Is he aware that Gravesham secondary school heads have written to local supermarkets asking why students preparing for GCSEs and A-levels have been required to work 20 hours a week, and no less, or have no job at all, and that other students work overnight in residential care homes? Given that 4 per cent. of children of school age admit to truanting on some occasions in order to undertake paid employment, does my right hon. Friend agree that dealing with truancy and excessive hours of employment for children of school age should be at the heart of our crusade to improve standards in education?

Mr. Smith: The circumstances that my hon. Friend reports concern me. I will draw them immediately to the attention of local education authorities, so that education welfare officers can look into them. I shall also draw them to the attention of the review to which I referred earlier. The causes of truancy and the things that people do when they are truanting cover much more than employment. There is limited evidence that employment is a major factor in truancy, but where young people are working excessive hours or in dangerous or unsuitable conditions, that has to be stopped. We will ensure that action is taken.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): While I acknowledge that the employment of schoolchildren must be strictly regulated by law, I hope that the Minister agrees that such regulation should not prevent them from undertaking safe work that boosts their finances and those of their families. When the Government decided to prohibit the use of children on milk rounds at the request of the National Child Employment Network, did civil servants or the network bother to ask any children or their parents what benefit they gained and how they might suffer in the absence of those rounds?

Mr. Smith: The important thing here is that some common sense is brought to bear. We recognise the benefits that young people derive from a proper amount of suitable work experience. There is not the evidence to show that sensible and appropriate work damages their educational accomplishment. I will certainly ensure that the issue that the hon. Gentleman raises is considered. Let us not lose sight of the fact that the Government are doing far more than our predecessors did to ensure that suitable preparation for work and sensible work experience forms part of the school experience for young people who can benefit from the opportunity to work.

New Deal

10. Dr. Desmond Turner (Brighton, Kemptown): If he will make a statement on the progress of the new deal in (a) pathfinder areas and (b) the rest of the country. [55100]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Ms Margaret Hodge): I am pleased with the early progress of the new deal. Already we have seen more than 145,000 young people invited to start on new deal; 32,000 of them are in the pathfinder areas; 23,000 have moved into jobs and 9,000 have moved into other options.

Dr. Turner: I congratulate my hon. Friend on her appointment to the Front Bench. I am sure that she is already aware that in my constituency and in the rest of Brighton we have a considerable problem of homelessness. Many of the homeless are young people who have been failed by the education system and have a bleak future in employment because, from a position of homelessness, access to employment is doubly difficult. Will my hon. Friend tell the House the ways in which the new deal will help such people?

Ms Hodge: I thank my hon. Friend for his kind words. I am aware of the problems that are faced by some young people in linking homelessness to joblessness. In Brighton it is a particular problem. We have funded a mediation project under the new deal as part of the gateway scheme so that we can provide counselling to young people who are homeless and put them into a secure environment. There are a number of projects around the country that link homelessness to joblessness. That is an integral part of a unique scheme under the new deal. The scheme is not about managing unemployment figures but about creating real and lasting opportunities for the young people of Britain today.

Mr. Graham Brady (Altrincham and Sale, West): Having had the pleasure of working with the hon. Lady on the Select Committee on Education, I, too, congratulate her on her appointment to the Front Bench. From that Committee's deliberations, she, like me, will be familiar with the provenance of the new deal, its having been introduced at a time when unemployment was falling sharply under the previous Government's policies. Now that the economic circumstances are somewhat different and growth forecasts have been revised sharply downwards, what plans do she and her colleagues have to revise the implementation of the new deal, in particular to take account of job losses in manufacturing in the north and the midlands?

Ms Hodge: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his kind words. Despite his remarks, nearly 400,000 new jobs have been created since the current Government took office. Furthermore, since the general election, youth unemployment has fallen by 15 per cent. and is about 13 per cent. less than it was in early 1979, when the Conservative Government first took office. The new deal's record of success speaks for itself.

Caroline Flint (Don Valley): I congratulate my hon. Friend on her appointment to the Front Bench. From my experience of working with her on the Select Committee and, previously, on the numerous child care projects with which she has been involved, I know that those working in the world of child care will welcome her appointment as much as I do.

May I bring to my hon. Friend's attention, and ask her to congratulate with me, Angela Ashman, who is 24 and is the 100th young person to go to Doncaster college under the Government's new deal? Five years ago, Angela began her training in hairdressing and, having stopped to begin her family, she is now taking a national vocational qualification in hairdressing. I quote her comments, printed in the Doncaster Star:

"Without New Deal there's no way I could have got back into training as I just couldn't afford the child care, but now that's been paid for it's great to be back at college."

Does my hon. Friend the Minister share my view that child care combined with education is the best way in which we can help young mothers, rather than telling them,

"Get thee to a nunnery"?

Ms Hodge: I thank my hon. Friend for her kind words. As she spoke, I was reminded of the occasion on which we visited a further education college together and looked in on a course in hairdressing. There were seven lone parents present, all of whom were returning to work through education and the facilities for child care that had been created. It is a vital part of the new deal, both generally and for lone parents, that we make affordable, accessible and high-quality child care available to those women who need it if they are to gain access to the labour market.

Mr. David Willetts (Havant): I, too, welcome the hon. Lady to her new position. I thought that we were not going to hear from her this afternoon, but she has been allowed out on the new deal.

The Minister's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale, West (Mr. Brady) was remarkably complacent—as complacent as the answer we heard yesterday from the Prime Minister to my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition. The fact is that, throughout the summer, we have heard worrying announcements of factory closures and job losses; meanwhile, the Minister's Department is closing job clubs and putting all its effort into the new deal, which is a monumental irrelevance. It does absolutely nothing to help the people who are currently losing their jobs thanks to the Government's economic policies. Why will the Government not treat all unemployed people fairly and shift some resources towards the people who are losing jobs because of the Government's policies?

Ms Hodge: I do hate to blur with simple facts the rather boring and tedious political rhetoric that we are hearing from Conservative Members. The simple facts are that, under our new deal, at this very early stage, more than 23,000 young people who would otherwise have been unemployed are now in work. We are extending that new deal to those who are long-term unemployed—those who have been unemployed for two years. From November, we are piloting the new deal for those who have been unemployed for between 12 and 18 months. That is the proper way to tackle unemployment—with a scheme that is not about massaging unemployment figures, but about creating real opportunities with the gateway and ensuring that we improve employability so that people can go into real jobs.

Mr. Roy Beggs (East Antrim): On behalf of my colleagues, I, too, congratulate the hon. Lady on her promotion. I welcome the fact that the Government have allocated £140 million to Northern Ireland over the next five years for the new deal. Will the hon. Lady join me in urging those who have been disadvantaged to increase their qualifications and upgrade their skills so that they can benefit from the new employment opportunities being created in Northern Ireland?

Ms Hodge: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his kind words and support for the innovative and important new deal introduced by the Government. This is the first time that we have tried to link job opportunities and schemes to training and employment. We know that good skills, education and qualifications matter for the wealth of Britain, so the new deal is a vital scheme which should be supported across the House.

Social Exclusion Unit

11. Ms Dari Taylor (Stockton, South): If he will make a statement on the latest report from the social exclusion unit and on what steps he has taken to tackle the problems faced by disaffected young people. [55101]

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment (Mr. David Blunkett): I welcome the social exclusion unit's report, "Bringing Britain Together: A Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal", which is linked to the earlier report on truancy and exclusion. We are setting a target for a reduction of one third in truancy and exclusion over the next three years. During that time we shall invest £493 million to tackle head on the tragedy of exclusion and truancy. We shall use a cross-departmental approach to overcome disadvantages in our most deprived neighbourhoods and we shall invest the resources that the Conservative party denied for so many years.

Ms Taylor: Does my right hon. Friend agree that if we are to be successful in including young people, local partnerships and local authorities must be involved in all policies? Does he agree also that successfully helping young people will be the test of our policy of including the excluded? Are local authorities to be given further advice on funding sixth form education?

Mr. Blunkett: On the first two questions, it is absolutely clear that without a partnership approach that includes every agency and contributor, we cannot succeed. That is why the schools plus team, which was set up following the renewal report, and our advice on best practice in avoiding exclusion and truancy must combine to spread the excellence that already exists. In addition, the new start programme will target 14 to 19-year-olds.

It is clear that children who are excluded and who truant from school are excluded from life. They cannot get a job; they often find themselves in difficulty with the law, and they find themselves alienated from society. A comprehensive approach to post-16 education by further education and sixth form colleges, which provides work-based training and work in the community, is vital in ensuring that everyone is pulling in the same direction.

Mr. Don Foster (Bath): I congratulate the new members of the Front-Bench team and welcome many of the Secretary of State's proposals for tackling the disaffected. Does he accept that disaffected young people are often those who achieve the least academically? Will he therefore explain to the House why, if targets are so important to him, there are no targets in literacy for the bottom 20 per cent. of pupils, which means that teachers tend to concentrate on the rest? Will not that lead to further disaffection? Is there not already a growing gap between the bottom 20 per cent. of pupils and the rest, which is a recipe for disaster?

Mr. Blunkett: In view of the congratulations coming from all sides to half of my team, I think that I should congratulate them myself.

We have a difficulty in that every time we set new targets, the Liberal Democrats say that we are overloading teachers and causing them aggravation. I shall be delighted to set targets in the not too distant future to avoid having children leaving school with no qualifications. Last year 45,000 young people left school without a single qualification to their name. Regrettably, the vast majority of children in care leave school without qualifications. We shall do something about that. However, a solution will be achieved not simply by setting a target but by putting in place the necessary support mechanisms to ensure that all children are well educated.

Recent GCSE results show an improvement in terms of those gaining an A to G qualification or the equivalent, and a decrease in the number of pupils who leave school with no qualifications. I think that we should take some pride in those results and spread best practice so that we can do even better next year.

Business of the House

3.30 pm

Sir George Young (North-West Hampshire): May I ask the Leader of the House to give us the business for next week?

The President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mrs. Margaret Beckett):

The business for next week will be as follows:

MONDAY 26 OCTOBER—Opposition Day

Until about 7 o'clock there will be a debate on the Economy followed by a debate on Agriculture and the Food Industry. Both debates will arise on motions in the name of the Liberal Democrats.

TUESDAY 27 OCTOBER—Consideration of Lords Amendments to the European Parliamentary Elections Bill.

Motion relating to the Working Time Regulations

WEDNESDAY 28 OCTOBER—Until 2 o'clock, there will be debates on the motion for the Adjournment of the House.

Debate on the Army on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

THURSDAY 29 OCTOBER—Debate on Quarantine for Pets on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

FRIDAY 30 OCTOBER—The House will not be sitting.

MONDAY 2 NOVEMBER—Debate on the Security and Intelligence Agencies on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

The House will also wish to know that on Wednesday 4 November there will be a debate on the Social Action Programme 1998–2000 in European Standing Committee B.

Details of the relevant documents will be given in the Official Report.

[Wednesday 4 November:

European Standing Committee B:—Relevant European Community Document: 8328/98, Social Action Programme; Relevant European Legislation Committee Report: HC 155-xxx (1997-98].

It may be convenient for the House if I announce now that the new Session will be opened on Tuesday 24 November.

Sir George Young: The House is grateful to the right hon. Lady for providing the business for the first week. I understand the current uncertainties, but I hope that she plans to revert to announcing two weeks' business in advance so that hon. Members may plan ahead.

Is it not astonishing that, although there is minimal pressure on parliamentary time, the Government have not found time for a full day's debate on the economy? While we may disagree about the reasons for the economic downturn confronting us, the recession concerns our constituents and is the subject of intense debate in the newspapers. It should be debated in the House, and the Government should not rely on Opposition days for debating that key subject. Is that not further evidence of the Government's intention to sideline and marginalise this Chamber?

After Parliament rose for the recess, we saw the publication of the Neill committee's report on the funding of political parties. It is a radical report with wide implications for the political process, and there are rumours that the Government plan to cherry-pick it. Can the right hon. Lady find time to debate the Neill committee report in the overspill? We are expecting the publication next week of the Jenkins report commissioned by the Government. On what day next week does the right hon. Lady expect its publication? Will the Government make a statement about that report? The House will expect an early debate on the report and the Government's response to it.

We are grateful to the right hon. Lady for announcing the date of the state opening of Parliament. Can she confirm when she plans to prorogue the House? In view of the shifting foreign affairs situation in Kosovo and elsewhere, is there any prospect of a debate on foreign affairs?

Finally, the right hon. Lady may know that an important international conference will be held in Buenos Aires from 2 to 12 November following up the Kyoto summit. It would be helpful if the Government could hold a debate before the conference starts so that hon. Members may give the Government the benefit of their views on those issues.

Mrs. Beckett: I shall endeavour to cover all the issues that the right hon. Gentleman has raised. On the economy, the House will be very well aware that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced that he will be making his pre-Budget statement on 3 November. The House will also be well aware that this is when the Government set out in full, with all the latest information, their current view of the economy. In that sense, it is faintly ludicrous to accuse the Government of not being prepared to come to the House and focus on those issues.

The right hon. Gentleman also asked me about the Neill and Jenkins reports. I would normally hope to adopt an attitude of sweet reason in our weekly exchanges, but I find it extraordinary that the Opposition are already trying to make something of the Neill report and accusing the Government of trying to cherry-pick it. As the Conservatives are supposed to have given undertakings to implement some of the recommendations on publishing political party accounts and have singularly failed to do so, I do not think that it lies with them to accuse anyone of cherry-picking the Neill report. It is an extensive report. We were pleased that many of its recommendations chime in with our own evidence, but it goes far wider—

Sir George Young: Not all.

Mrs. Beckett: The right hon. Gentleman says, "Not all". As far as I can recall, the report does not chime in with any of the recommendations made by the Opposition. Indeed, they refused point blank to allow Neill even to consider party political funding, so it seems quite farcical for them to pretend that they have the high ground on this matter. Of course we have every intention that there should be proper debate and consideration of the Neill report. When we have had a better chance to consider its wide range of recommendations and proposals, no doubt the matter will return in some form.

The right hon. Gentleman also asked me when I expected the Jenkins report. I am afraid that is not immediately fresh in my mind. It may be Thursday next week, but I cannot be absolutely categorical. Again, we do not yet have the report, but of course I recognise that it is a matter in which there is passionate interest on both sides of the House and I am confident that it will come before the House at some stage.

The right hon. Gentleman asked me when the House may prorogue. I cannot give him a date, but I anticipate that it is likely to be late in the week preceding the state opening. I have taken note of his request for a debate on matters raised in the aftermath of Kyoto and of the dates that he gave for the conference in Buenos Aires. He also asked me about the prospect of a discussion on Kosovo. He will be aware, I am sure, that Foreign and Commonwealth questions are top next Tuesday.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): Will the House be kept informed of developments over the Pinochet case? Is it not important that the due processes of law apply to all criminals, including a former murderous, criminal dictator and torturer such as Pinochet? Would it not have been far better had Lady Thatcher realised that and kept her mouth shut?

Mrs. Beckett: I entirely share my hon. Friend's view that we should recognise the key importance of due processes of law with regard to all. He has asked for an assurance that the House will be kept informed. Knowing his considerable experience in commenting on such matters, I am confident that he will be well aware of the quasi-judicial role occupied by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. Obviously, I will bear in mind his request, consistent with that responsibility.

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): May I endorse the request for debates, when time can be found, on the Neill and Jenkins reports as well as Kosovo? There is a general feeling in the House that simply answering questions is not a sufficient response to that problem.

Will the Leader of the House undertake an urgent investigation and report back to the House as soon as possible on the terms of reference and the criteria for editing the parliamentary channel? I do not know whether she is aware that the BBC has now taken responsibility for the channel. I am given to understand, and I now have some evidence, that that has put the BBC in a rather invidious position. She may be aware that yesterday, I initiated a debate in the House on the reporting of Parliament by the BBC, which is a matter of considerable concern, and I was told afterwards by an hon. Gentleman that the BBC, in its strapline that runs across the bottom of the picture, was interpolating its own comments on our debate. This is a particularly invidious situation. I hope that the Leader of the House will agree that it is worth looking at the terms of reference of the BBC when it undertakes the reporting of Parliament on our behalf.

This afternoon, I viewed the tape of that debate. My speeches and those of other hon. Members appear with the BBC's own comments on the debate across the bottom of the picture. This may be a special case, but I think the Leader of the House will agree that in such circumstances, it could be invidious for the BBC to comment in that way, and possibly extremely misleading.

Mrs. Beckett: The issue that the hon. Gentleman raises was not familiar to me. I am sure that many hon. Members will share his concern. I take his point that he would wish the House to consider the matter at some stage, and I shall bear that in mind.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): After all the statements have been made about General Pinochet, and if all else fails, may I offer a decent suggestion? The official solicitor should gently take him by the hand to Mrs. Thatcher's flat, and force him to live there for the next six months.

Hon. Members: Cruel and unusual punishment.

Mrs. Beckett: I cannot possibly comment.

Mr. Peter Brooke (Cities of London and Westminster): As I have read that the Government are in favour of the main thrust of the Neill report, which contained 100 recommendations, can the Leader of the House tell us how many recommendations fall under what I assume is the lesser thrust?

Mrs. Beckett: I am afraid that I did not follow the end of the right hon. Gentleman's question, but I can tell him, as I said a few moments ago, that the Neill report is more wide-ranging than any of us had anticipated, and the Government will want to—

Mr. Andrew MacKay (Bracknell): We have accepted all the recommendations.

Mrs. Beckett: In that case, I look forward with eager anticipation to the publication of the Conservative party's accounts.

Mr. Stuart Bell (Middlesbrough): May I build on the response that the President of the Council gave to the shadow Leader of the House, and tell my right hon. Friend and the House that the Jenkins report will be published on Thursday morning with a press conference at the Institute of Directors, which seems entirely appropriate? In the light of my right hon. Friend's comments on sweet reasonableness, may I ask her to ask the Prime Minister to come to the House on Thursday afternoon and give us a statement on the Jenkins commission's report and recommendations, and to follow that with an early debate, given the report's constitutional implications and importance for the House?

Mrs. Beckett: I am well aware of the passionate interest that my hon. Friend, along with many other hon. Members, takes in the matter. I am confident that when the Jenkins report has been published, time will be found to air the issues that it raises, but I am not keen to speculate on when.

Sir Teddy Taylor (Rochford and Southend, East): As the Government of Libya have now accepted in writing the arrangements for a trial in The Hague of the Lockerbie suspects, subject to three amendments, and as the British and American Governments have said that there can be no amendments, is it not rather insulting to the House of Commons that the order providing for the trial and the expenditure, No. 2251, is not subject to debate or consideration by the House or any Committee? Would it not be fairer to democracy and to the relatives of those who lost their lives if the Government would arrange a debate for next week, to allow the House to say whether it approves of the Government's tough line, or whether it thinks that there was some merit in making concessions on the three amendments proposed by the Libyan Government?

Mrs. Beckett: I hear what the hon. Gentleman says in requesting time to be found to raise the matter in the House. He will be aware that it is Foreign and Commonwealth Office questions on Tuesday, when he will no doubt look for an opportunity to raise the matter.

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire): As I am sure the Leader of the House knows, the Department of Social Security today announced the outcome of the annual review of the cold weather payments scheme. The problem still exists of postal areas being covered by different meteorological offices. In my constituency I have a massive problem with two postcode areas that are dealt with from Leeds, rather than from Nottinghamshire. The question of sorting out which meteorological offices should be used is one that should be aired in the House, bearing in mind that we shall all be receiving massive representations from our constituents.

Mrs. Beckett: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that warning. He may be right to say that we shall receive heavy correspondence on the matter and that the issue will be raised in the House. I am aware that the way in which these matters are settled has long been an issue of controversy. The tabling of Social Security questions will be on Monday 2 November. That will give hon. Members an opportunity to try to raise the issue. It remains the position that as a result of the early actions that the Government took on coming into office, all pensioners receive help with their heating bills in a way that was not previously the case. That at least marginally alleviates the difficulties to which my hon. Friend has drawn attention.

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): May I reinforce the plea made by my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) for a debate on foreign affairs? Would not such a debate be particularly apposite before the visit next week of President Menem of Argentina—a visit whose purpose is to effect a full reconciliation between our two countries—in that it would give an opportunity for the Government to explain their policies towards countries that have had civil strife, such as Argentina, where more people died than in Chile? Could not the occasion be used also to remind the House how General Secretary Honecker of East Germany, whose regime was responsible for the deaths of scores of people on the Berlin wall, was received in Chile to pass his declining years with his daughter—with his family? Could not appropriate conclusions be drawn?

Mrs. Beckett: I hear the hon. Gentleman's support for a debate on foreign affairs. We had a statement on foreign affairs on Monday of this week and there will be Foreign Office questions next week. I fear that I do not see time for a foreign affairs debate in the near future.

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): When can we have a debate on early-day motion 1677?

[That this House is gravely concerned at evidence of the over prescription of damaging and addictive medicinal drugs in women's prisons; believes that powerful medicinal drugs prescribed to the late Emma Humphries and one other woman may have caused their premature deaths; is alarmed by the claims made by a distinguished author that neuroleptic drugs are routinely prescribed to young women prisoners who mutilate themselves, and that medicinal drugs are used as pacifiers which move prisoners from non-addictive illegal drug use to highly addictive medicinal drug use; and calls for a full inquiry into all drug use in women's prisons.]

The motion deals with the serious and tragic case of two young women who died at a very early age from, according to the families' belief, addictions to medicinal drugs that they acquired in prison. The claim is being made that there is vast over-prescription of Largactil and other neuroleptics in our prisons, and that Largactil is being used as a pacifier and as a means to enable prison officers to meet their performance targets by weaning prisoners, especially women prisoners, off non-addictive, illegal drugs on to highly addictive and dangerous legal drugs. The case has been made eloquently in a recent book by Angela Devlin entitled "Invisible Women".

The Home Office of this Government and that of the previous Government have refused to give details of prescribing neuroleptics in women's prisons. Is it not right that we should have a debate to ensure that the plight of these defenceless women is made visible?

Mrs. Beckett: I am aware of my hon. Friend's long-standing interest in these matters and of his concern about issues such as the welfare of prisoners. I can only say to him that there will be Home Office questions this coming Monday, which may provide an opportunity to raise the matter to which he has referred. I cannot promise him time for a debate in the very near future.

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): Does the Leader of the House accept that she has perhaps inadvertently given the best possible reason for an urgent debate on the Neill report? The Leader has wriggled obviously about the Government's response to the report, which they set up with much posturing and wringing of hands, allegedly taking the moral high ground. How is it that the right hon. Lady finds it so difficult, even at this stage, to say, "We don't need a debate on the report because we, the Government, accept every proposed measure in it", as the Opposition have done?

Surely we need an opportunity for the Leader of the House and others on the Government Benches to explain why they are so embarrassed about the Neill report and why they will not accept some of the key recommendations, not least those on referendums, which the Government are obviously hell bent on using as a twisted device to massage public opinion for their own needs.

Mrs. Beckett: I have seldom heard such claptrap at any Question Time or debate. Labour asked the Neill committee to report on these matters against the opposition of the Conservative party. We have implemented all the things that we could voluntarily implement and that were in our evidence to the committee already. The Conservative party claims to accept all the recommendations, but has not lifted a finger to implement any of them. As there are wide recommendations on referendums that require careful consideration, it is sensible for the Government to weigh these matters and then come to the House with their response. As for the notion that the Conservatives have attained the moral high ground by saying that they accept in full all the recommendations, the fact that they have not implemented any of the ones that they could have implemented shows that they would not know the moral high ground if they saw it.

Mr. Jim Marshall (Leicester, South): Has my right hon. Friend seen the words attributed to the Prime Minister this week on the European Union and defence? If she has, could she explain in greater detail than was given in the press what he had in mind on that relationship? If she cannot do that now, could she encourage him to come to the House to flesh out his ideas so that ordinary Members of Parliament can hear his views, and let him know ours, about any possible relationship between the European Union and defence?

Mrs. Beckett: I speak from memory, but I think this matter might have been raised with the Prime Minister yesterday. I understand and respect my hon. Friend's concerns. The Prime Minister was saying that we want some imaginative thinking on how we can enhance the European contribution to NATO. There is no suggestion, and never has been, that he or the Government wish to undermine NATO, which is the cornerstone of our defence and security policy. It has always been made clear that we would not support, for example, a standing European army. If my hon. Friend or other hon. Members wish to explore the matter further, there will be an opportunity next Wednesday in the debate on the Army.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): Will the right hon. Lady reconsider and find time for an early debate on the deteriorating state of the economy—that debate to be initiated by the Prime Minister? Is she aware that despite his glib evasions yesterday and the truly gut-wrenching complacency of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the European Commission predicts that Britain will slump to the bottom of the European growth table next year? Does she accept that as the Prime Minister's policies of tax, waste and regulate are responsible for, once again, making Britain the sick man of Europe, he is responsible for coming to the Floor of the House to debate the possible cures for the sickness that he has caused?

Mrs. Beckett: I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on trumping the contribution of the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) in the deleteriousness league. I agree with what I think was the underlying thrust of the hon. Gentleman's observations—that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister did an excellent job yesterday of advancing the Government's case on the handling of the economy, although I can well understand that the hon. Gentleman did not like it one little bit.

Mr. Bercow: Glib evasions.

Mrs. Beckett: They were not glib evasions. The problem for the Conservatives is that they were statistics, which are much harder for them to deal with, especially as they seem not to understand them. The hon. Gentleman accused my right hon. Friends of complacency. That is not the case. It is clear that they, like the whole Government, recognise the difficulties that some sections of the economy face, but we also recognise how far-fetched are the suggestions of the Conservative party that all the problems arose only during our tenure of office. The pre-Budget statement putting all these matters in context will be made on 3 November and I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is looking forward to that. We certainly are.

Mr. Tom Clarke (Coatbridge and Chryston): Does my right hon. Friend agree that we have seen a welcome renaissance of the British film industry in recent times? Does she recall that in March, a review co-chaired by Stewart Till of Polygram, called "A Bigger Picture", met with fairly widespread approval? I think that it was the Financial Times that said that it was the most comprehensive review of the British film industry for 30 years. Will my right hon. Friend therefore give us some support in ensuring that such an important aspect of Britain's creative industries is given a fair wind, and a debate on the Floor of the House?

Mrs. Beckett: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend. I know of his strong support for the film industry, and I appreciate his welcome for the review that he mentioned. He will know of the strong support being given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, and about his widespread consultations on how we can advance the future of the film industry, whose importance is recognised throughout the House. I shall certainly bear my right hon. Friend's observation in mind. The day for tabling questions to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport is next Monday.

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Worthing, West): May I follow the question asked by the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall), who asked whether the Prime Minister would be able to answer questions about his view on what defence co-operation not covered by present arrangements should take place in Europe? Hearing other Ministers speak in Wednesday's debate would not be sufficient.

We are responding to a story that came out through a briefing, so could the Government give us an open register of official briefings to journalists by Ministers and for the Prime Minister, so that the rest of us would know what was said in private? Could we also have a register of the Philip Gould-type groups consulted by the Government and paid for with taxpayers' money, so that we can understand what the Government are being told by other people, in the same way that we hope that the Government will also pay attention to what we say in the Chamber?

Mrs. Beckett: As I am sure the hon. Gentleman has noticed, the Prime Minister comes here every week for half an hour of Question Time in which many such matters can be raised. I am sure that should the hon. Gentleman or any of his hon. Friends catch your eye, Madam Speaker, it will be possible for them to raise such issues directly with the Prime Minister. That will certainly meet the point that the hon. Gentleman made. As for openness, as we are a Government who hold open briefings to the Lobby by the Prime Minister's official spokesman, and who are committed to introducing proposals for freedom of information, we need no lectures from the Opposition on that subject.

Ms Gisela Stuart (Birmingham, Edgbaston): I am sure that the Leader of the House is aware of the grave situation at Longbridge, next to my constituency. Many jobs are threatened there, and although I agree with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry that the decision is primarily one for Rover, does not the present situation show us that the previous Government left us with deep structural damage to our industrial base? Our supply chain base is weakened and we lack a sufficiently skilled work force to provide the car industry with the skills that it needs. Can space be found in the near future for a debate on how the regional development agencies, in particular, could take a strategic position in developing our supply chain base, thus helping the people at Longbridge in connection with jobs in the car industry, whether with Rover or with one of the other manufacturers?

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend makes an important and powerful point. It is clear that the difficulties being experienced at Longbridge have been long in the making. She will know that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry met representatives of the company this morning and had a useful discussion. The issues at Longbridge include short-term costs and long-term investment decisions. My hon. Friend is right to say that the present position casts light not only on the reality of our economic inheritance from the Conservatives, but on the need for work such as that of the regional development agencies. I shall bear in mind her view that hon. Members might like to debate the matter in future.

Mr. Howard Flight (Arundel and South Downs): It is a long time since we heard announcements about the Food Standards Agency. In view of the depression facing agriculture and the concern of farmers in particular that consumers should know where the food they buy in the shops is produced geographically—and that it has met the standards and quality of production required in this country and represented by the Food Advisory Board standards—might the Leader of the House make time for a debate on the issue of food standard labelling?

Mrs. Beckett: There will be a debate on agriculture on Monday, as the hon. Gentleman will have heard me say in the statement. I hear and welcome his support for greater information to be provided about food, and his support for food standards. It is unfortunate that the setting up of an agency was not a step that the Conservative Government felt inclined to take. However, I always welcome converts and I am glad to hear of his support. I cannot promise a debate in the near future, but I can promise him that the Government intend to press on with the matter.

Mr. Tony McWalter (Hemel Hempstead): Will my right hon. Friend consider having a debate on science and technology policy in the near future, particularly since the comprehensive spending review allocated a very welcome £1.1 billion to new initiatives? However, the House has not had an opportunity to consider the philosophy under which those funds should be allocated and distributed. In particular, I am worried by the possibility that, because our partner in the initiative is Wellcome, there might be too much of an emphasis on biochemistry or medicinal science and insufficient emphasis on, say, physics, mathematics or chemical sciences. I wish to make a specific plea to the Government to consider aerospace and space technology, particularly in view of the Beagle 2 project. We should make a representation to the European Space Agency before 30 October as to whether we are willing in principle to commit £25 million to support the Mars 2003 project. May we have an early debate on science and technology policy?

Mrs. Beckett: I cannot promise my hon. Friend an early debate on those matters, although I recognise his great interest in the issues. Trade and Industry questions will take place on Thursday. I note also the points he makes about the importance of the aerospace industry—a view he knows that I share—and his concerns about science policy. Some of the boundaries in the handling of and approach to the different scientific disciplines that he identifies are becoming rather blurred these days. I share his view that these are matters of great importance. I cannot promise time for a debate in the near future, but I will bear his views in mind.

Mr. Simon Burns (West Chelmsford): I seek clarification from the Leader of the House on her reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young), concerning his request for a debate on the Buenos Aires conference on climate change. When the right hon. Lady said that she had "taken note" of my right hon. Friend's request, did she mean that she had taken note because he asked the question and would do no more, or that she had taken note, would go away and would come up with the answer that the House can debate the question—preferably before the start of the conference, but certainly before we prorogue?

Mrs. Beckett: My answer means what it has always meant when the Leader of the House has said it under any previous Government.

Mr. John Cryer (Hornchurch): I wish to support the request of my hon. Friend the Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) for an early statement and debate on the Jenkins commission. If the reports are correct—and I think they are likely to be—that Jenkins has opted for the additional member system, it will mean not only that he will be trying to perpetrate an attack on democratic accountability, but that he will have broken the parameters of the investigation. He would have known that if he had read the submission to his commission from the first-past-the-post group, of which I am a member. Sadly, it seems that he was unable to stay off the claret long enough to read it.

Mrs. Beckett: I take that to be a call for a debate on the Jenkins commission report. I shall certainly bear it in mind when the report has been received.

Mr. Julian Brazier (Canterbury): May I also call for an early debate on the Jenkins report? Lord Jenkins was generous enough to spare a full hour during his year researching it to talk to Members of Parliament here. As one colleague of the right hon. Lady pointed out, we all feel terribly humble before him because most of us have fought for only one political party. None the less, it would be nice if the place that is principally affected by his report had an opportunity to debate his findings.

Mrs. Beckett: What is already clear is that such a debate would certainly be lively.

Mr. Shaun Woodward (Witney): Will the Leader of the House clarify exactly what she meant by taking note of the request by my hon. Friend the Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) for a debate on climate change before the meeting in Buenos Aires? Will she simply say yes or no to whether the Government take the issue seriously and whether they will find Government time for a debate on it?

Mrs. Beckett: It may save the hon. Gentleman much time and trouble in the future if he bears in mind that usually what I say is what I really mean. When I said that I would take note of the views of the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), that is precisely what I meant.

Mr. Bercow: What does that mean?

Mrs. Beckett: It means that I will take note of the hon. Gentleman's views. It is quite straightforward. The hon. Member for West Chelmsford made a proposal, gave the date of a particular conference and asked for a debate. I shall consider that request and, if it is possible to grant it, no doubt I will do so. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman attends business questions often enough to know that there are many requests for debates. The whole purpose is that Members should have the opportunity to ask for a debate. I cannot say now what debates will be granted.

Mr. Christopher Fraser (Mid-Dorset and North Poole): Will the right hon. Lady assure the House that the Prime Minister's press office is not trying to influence the present debate about the time of the Independent Television News programme "News at Ten", which was widely discussed by the Select Committee on Culture, Media and Sport this morning and in the press? Does she agree that the issue warrants a debate without the influence of Alastair Campbell?

Mrs. Beckett: I feel sure that the hon. Gentleman is entirely mistaken in the apprehension upon which that question was based.

Mr. Nick Gibb (Bognor Regis and Littlehampton): Given that the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced to the International Monetary Fund on 6 October that growth in the United Kingdom economy next year would be cut by 50 per cent., is not it astonishing that hon. Members have to wait a month before the issue can be debated in full and a month before they are told the Government's actual forecast for 1999? How can hon. Members effectively scrutinise public finances given that the figures in the Blue Book are now completely meaningless, misleading and wrong?

Mrs. Beckett: Few Governments have more experience of figures being misleading and wrong than the Conservatives when they were in power. First, the House did not sit until this Monday. Secondly, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has already made it plain that he will be making his pre-Budget statement in about 10 days. That is when the latest information will be available. I am confident that the House awaits it with eager anticipation and, after what has been said today, I feel sure that there will be a full attendance for it.

Mr. Andrew Stunell (Hazel Grove): Is the Leader of the House aware of the statement made by the chief constable of Greater Manchester on Monday that, as a result of a shortfall in funding induced by the comprehensive spending review, there will be a complete ban on recruitment to the police service there from now on? As a result, 400 posts will be lost in the next 12 months. Does she understand the great concern throughout Greater Manchester and certainly in my constituency? Will she ask the Home Secretary to explain to the House the impact of the comprehensive spending review on police services throughout the country and, in particular, in Greater Manchester, so that I can tell my constituents exactly what the future of policing in the conurbation is to be?

Mrs. Beckett: I was not aware of the statement by the chief constable. The hon. Gentleman asked me to ask the Home Secretary to come to the House to deal with the matter, and my right hon. Friend will, of course, be here for Question Time on Monday.

Sir Patrick Cormack (South Staffordshire): Is the right hon. Lady aware that her reply to the request by my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) for a debate on foreign affairs was disappointing, as were her replies to hon. Members who raised a certain recent subject? Will she give a categorical assurance that Her Majesty's Government had no political involvement in the recent arrest of a senator from a friendly foreign democracy? Will she ask the Foreign Secretary to confirm to the House next week that the aim of the Government's so-called ethical foreign policy is not to interfere in the internal arrangements of other democratic states, any more than their wish is to have other countries interfere in whatever arrangements we deem it appropriate to make in Northern Ireland?

Mrs. Beckett: The issues that the hon. Gentleman raises have been debated—or at least generally discussed in public. He will be aware of the view that I have expressed that some of these more sensitive issues are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary. I readily assure him that the matter is not being handled politically; we have taken the view from the outset that it is a legal matter, which is how it has been and continues to be handled.

Housing

[Relevant documents: Tenth report from the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee, Session 1997–98, on Housing (HC 495-I) and the Government's response thereto (Cm 4080).]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Madam Speaker: I appeal to hon. Members for self-restraint. I know that a number of hon. Members are interested and want to take part in the debates, but I am not able to impose a time limit as the debates are being introduced by Back Benchers and I do not want the limit to apply to them. I simply appeal for self-restraint.

4.10 pm

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I welcome the opportunity to debate our housing report and the Government's response to it. I place on record the Committee's thanks to our Clerk and specialist adviser and to our advisers Richard Bate, Peter Chapman and Dr. Christine Whitehead, who gave us so much help in preparing our report. I also thank all those who sent in written evidence and those who came before the Committee to answer our questions—we are extremely grateful to them all. Finally, I thank all the members of the Committee, who worked so hard, and I apologise to the House for the fact that my co-Chairman, my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), is unable to be here today—she is on a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association delegation.

Our inquiry arose out of the previous Government's projection that an extra 4.4 million households would have to be catered for over the next 15 years or so, which represents an increase on the previous projections of about 1 million—that was the key to our inquiry. I was surprised that very few of the people who sent in evidence challenged those figures, even though they raised many other problems. One reason was that there was little detail on how those projections were arrived at. One of the most pleasing aspects of the Government's response was the promise that the next set of projections would include much more detail on how the figures are arrived at, so that there can be much more discussion about whether they are realistic.

If the projections are wrong, there will clearly be problems. If too many households are projected, rows of houses in parts of the country may contain empty properties, and it is extremely depressing to live in a road where some houses are uncared for and untended. It is important that we do not over-provide or over-provide in particular parts of the country.

Equally, it is important that we do not under-provide. If we do, it is almost certain that house prices will increase, which will mean that many people cannot afford to buy a house, giving rise to an increase in the demand for social housing. Ensuring that the projections are right and meeting those projections are extremely important.

The projections show that the extra dwellings that will be needed will be for young single people, for people in middle age who are likely to be living on their own—perhaps through divorce—and, of course, for the increasing number of elderly people.

One of the key questions is where those dwellings should go. There has been a great deal of argument about how many of them can go on to what are crudely called brown-field sites—areas of land that have been used previously. First, the Government suggested about 60 per cent, but the Opposition have looked for a rather higher figure than that. There was evidence to the Select Committee that, in some parts of the country, it would be easy to reach a higher target than 60 per cent.

I believe that we should be a little cautious about making predictions until we have much better information. One of the most useful things will be Lord Rogers's task force, which will carry out the compilation of a database across the country so that we know how much brown-field land there is. That is fundamental. Until we know how much land there is, we cannot prove how realistic the 60 per cent. target is, or whether a higher target can be reached in some parts of the country. I hope that that information will be available within the next 12 months at least.

If there is to be more development on brown-field sites, the Government have to work hard on the issue of contaminated land. The Select Committee on the Environment first looked at contaminated land over 10 years ago, and came up with a series of recommendations. The previous Administration looked at them, rejected them or altered them, but took very little action. I plead with the Government to get on with the regulations for contaminated land. We have to get on with providing the money so that many of the sites can be reclaimed. We will be able to reach a target of 60 per cent. or higher only if we put that in place.

We have to look at the way in which local authorities are hoarding land for industry. I made some inquiries around the local authorities in Greater Manchester about the amount of land they have in the hope of attracting industry to it. When one adds up all such land around Greater Manchester, one realises that it would be impossible to attract that amount of industry to the area, and, if that amount of industry could be attracted, there would be no way in which there would be sufficient people to work in it. Local authorities must make much more effort to hold back a realistic amount of land for the creation of jobs, which is extremely important, while releasing some of the land for housing. That would go a long way towards reaching the target of 60 per cent.

Sir Sydney Chapman (Chipping Barnet): I share the hon. Gentleman's view about the difficulty of deciding how many brown-field sites are available, as opposed to green-field sites. I also take his point that surplus land may be marked for industrial use. Will the hon. Gentleman share with the House his view and that of the Select Committee on green belt land? Does he agree that, wherever the houses go, they should not go on established green belt sites?

Mr. Bennett: There is unanimity across the House that, as far as possible, green belt land should be sacrosanct. However, there is that little phrase, "as far as possible". That reasoning has been behind the tradition of green belt land, and the Committee and I did not deviate from that historical view.

I must point out that many of the people who gave evidence to the Select Committee did not want housing in their area, but they were still working hard to promote new industries and new jobs. I plead with local authorities, if they are going out to campaign to attract jobs to their area, to accept equal responsibility for providing houses for the people who will carry out that activity.

The core of our report is that we need urban regeneration. We need to make our cities and urban areas work. One of our recommendations was that the Government should produce a White Paper. I am glad that, earlier this week, they announced that we will get an urban White Paper. This is not just a matter for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions—the Deputy Prime Minister's Department—but one that goes right across the Government.

Regeneration of our cities must include ensuring that the schools are tip-top, and that we deal with crime and the problems that shops face. Regeneration means improving the whole environment, and many Government Departments need to play a part. I therefore hope that the White Paper will not suffer from departmentitis, but will receive full co-operation in its production.

If we are to regenerate our cities, we must regenerate some of their old buildings. The Committee was lucky enough to visit Poundbury to see the Prince of Wales's proposals for housing. However, I found more encouraging the work that he is doing with the Heritage Trust to try to bring back into residential use many of the old buildings in our cities. In my constituency, we have the Houldsworth mill project, which I hope succeeds. In the years that I have been in the House, many proposals have been made to bring that fine old mill into residential use, but they never quite made it. I hope that this time will be different.

I welcome the Government's response to the issue of revising the planning regulations, but quick action is needed. The Government have given a commitment to revise planning policy guidance note 3 on housing, PPG11 on regional plans and PPG12 on development plans. The release of land for housing is a crucial issue. At the moment, local authority plans have to include a five-year supply. Unless the Government move quickly, the danger is that some builders will race to use green-field sites, knowing that it will be difficult to use them in the future. I hope that the Government can reassure the House that they will move as speedily as possible to revise the planning regulations.

I mentioned the probable increased demand for social housing. The Committee was disappointed by the Government's response on social housing, although we may have been a little harsh in our report.

The Minister for London and Construction has made his reputation in championing the need for social housing, but his appearance before the Committee was disappointing. I understand that he knew the results of the spending review and we did not, but I reiterate that we need much more social housing than the Government are so far committed to providing. It is a disappointing cop-out to say that it is the responsibility of local authorities. If one local authority attempts to provide social housing, it is often taken up by people from neighbouring authorities that have made no provision. The Government need to set a much more realistic target.

The key to the whole process is continuous monitoring. I hope that the Government will report regularly to the House on how much new housing will be built on brown-field sites. It is very important that the Government succeed in regenerating our cities, because that would improve the quality of life for people who live in them, as well as stop the continual spread of housing into the countryside. I hope that we have a good debate on the report, and, more importantly, that we see action from the Government.

Mr. Jonathan Shaw (Chatham and Aylesford): Does my hon. Friend agree that an essential measure to regenerate our inner cities and relieve the pressures on the countryside and green-field sites is fiscal incentives for the building industry? The imposition of value added tax on the regeneration of older properties and the zero-rating of new properties on green-field sites is an anomaly. If the position were harmonised, it would provide an incentive for the building industry.

Mr. Bennett: I agree. If my hon. Friend had read the report, he would know that we have made that point, and that we were pleased by the Government's response. It is crazy that there is no VAT on new building, and that anyone who wants to regenerate buildings within cities, or conversions of old mills or shops or whatever, faces the problem of paying VAT. We are tied by Europe, and we cannot abolish VAT, although that would be the best approach.

I am keen to keep within the promised 15 minutes. I recommend to the House our report, and many aspects of the Government's response. My plea is for action on implementing a sensible housing policy for the next 15 years, so that all our people can enjoy decent homes.

Mr. Simon Burns (West Chelmsford): I congratulate the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), who chairs the Select Committee on the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs, and his colleagues on a timely, important and interesting report. They have done the House a service. Partly in jest, I find it slightly puzzling that the Deputy Prime Minister should have strongly welcomed the report, given that it contains a number of veiled criticisms of his own actions, both in the text and between the lines. There is a bald statement that the Committee found the answers given to it by one junior Minister to be both "vacuous and disingenuous".

The report represents a thinly veiled attack on the dithering and inaction that characterise the Government's attitude to housing provision. The Committee's findings vindicate our consistent criticism of the Deputy Prime Minister's failure to address the problem of household growth and of the Government's inability to engage in joined-up thinking on the important issue of housing.

The report is a valuable contribution to debate. Although it is in places couched in soft language, it is in many ways a damning indictment of the complacency with which the Government have approached a critical issue. It is a call to arms to those of us on both sides of the House who care about the preservation of the countryside and the regeneration of our towns and cities.

I shall take the House through some of the Committee's key findings. I hope that the House will forgive me for indulging in some translation, so that hon. Members who have not had the privilege of reading the report in its entirety may have some of its flavour, stripped of the spin that Ministers and their advisers have sought to put on it.

[Mr. Simon Burns]

The proposals in the White Paper "Planning for the Communities of the Future" are, in the words of the Committee,

"well-intentioned, but vague."

The report states:

"We do not believe they will be adequate to achieve their aims."

In other words, unless the Government decide to do something instead of just talking about the problems, the countryside will be swamped with new developments, and our towns and cities will suffer decay and deprivation. The report is certainly a long way short of the ringing endorsement to which the Deputy Prime Minister laid claim on Monday.

The report repeatedly stresses the need for a brown-field development target of 60 per cent. or more, to be applied as soon as possible. The Committee supports

"an interim national target . . . of at least 60 per cent., which should be applied in the coming round of Regional Planning Guidance, rather than over 10 years as the Government has proposed."

If I may take the liberty of paraphrasing once again, unless the Government decide to do something instead of just talking, the green belt will not be saved, and our towns and cities will continue to be scarred by derelict sites. Again, that seems to fall short of the endorsement heralded by the Secretary of State.

The report continues:

"It is important that the target set should be challenging, e.g. 60 per cent. or higher—some witnesses thought 75 per cent. was possible".

For the Government to state—as the Deputy Prime Minister did on Monday—that that constitutes support for the Government's 60 per cent. target is, to coin a phrase, both vacuous and disingenuous.

Our manifesto at the general election stated that we would set a target of more than 60 per cent. We have since pressed the Government to fix a target of two thirds. I hope that the Minister can rise to announce that, in the light of the Select Committee's evidence, he will increase the target to two thirds with immediate effect.

The report is not just critical of what the Deputy Prime Minister has not done. It attacks what little he has done to discharge his duties—for example, in relation to the task force which he set up under Lord Rogers. The report states:

"We are concerned as to whether the Task Force will be able to undertake the wide range of tasks it has been set . . . It must not be used as a means of causing delay."

Again, the implication is clear. The Committee believes what Conservative Members have long suspected: as with so many other task forces and reviews set up over the past 18 months, the Government see this as a way of kicking the ball into the long grass and hoping that the problem will go away.

Mr. Bennett: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Burns: I will certainly give way to the Chairman, although I do not wish to give way again, because of the scarcity of time.

Mr. Bennett: Can the hon. Gentleman explain why the previous Government did not produce in the years after the target was put forward a register of how much brown-field land was available? If we had that information, everybody could put forward a realistic figure, not one based on guesswork.

Mr. Burns: I understand and have some sympathy with the hon. Gentleman's point, but it is important not to overlook the fact that, at the same time during that time scale, my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) was determined to ensure that more and more building was done on brown-field sites when it was feasible, so as to protect and preserve the countryside and green-field sites.

The Committee states:

"Central government must support local authorities when they restrict the use of green-field sites."

Does the Deputy Prime Minister now accept that he was wrong on the principle of the issue to force West Sussex county council to cater for an extra 13,000 homes in its local plans, flying in the face of opposition from all three parties on the county council and of the advice of the planning inspectorate?

When the Minister replies, perhaps he will care to tell the House this, despite the answer which the Under-Secretary of State used as a dodge at Question Time on Tuesday to avoid the issue. To get away from the niceties of the sub judice rule that the Under-Secretary used, I am asking whether the Minister would care to answer the question on the principle rather than on the individual case.

How can that decision be squared with the words of the Select Committee and the Deputy Prime Minister's support for the report? How can such developments be squared with the recommendations and the Government's own rhetoric on transport? In particular, can the Minister explain how allowing major developments on green-field sites away from shops and other facilities contributes to the aim of reducing the need to travel? To judge from these glaring inconsistencies, the Government are scarcely capable of joined-up writing, let alone joined-up thinking, on the issue.

The Committee adds its voice to our own and the voices of numerous other interested bodies in calling for urgent revision to the Department's planning guidance notes, particularly PPG3 and PPG13. The Government have said that they intend to issue new guidance, and we welcome the commitment given in the Government's response to the report on Monday. The report rightly states that, without a clear planning framework,

"there will be uncertainty and the likelihood that in some regions the Government's policies on urban regeneration, integrated transport and sustainability will be ignored."

When can we expect to see this new guidance? Does the Minister have any news for us on that during this debate?

Why, when the Deputy Prime Minister announced the 60 per cent. target as long ago as February, has there been no movement so far to start giving effect to that target? He increasingly resembles an archer with only a small target to aim at and a quiver as empty as his rhetoric. The means to replace his stock of arrows are within his own power and the longer he delays, the more people will suspect that he does not want to start shooting at all.

The report also calls for the Government to announce a strategy for meeting the target set by the previous Government for reducing the amount of empty property, and to issue advice to local authorities. I take the opportunity to add our voice to that of the Select Committee and remind the Government that Labour-controlled councils currently have the highest proportion of stock awaiting letting. The 10 authorities with the highest proportion of properties ready for letting or awaiting minor repairs are all, not unexpectedly, Labour-controlled.

Perhaps the Minister would like to tell us what plans the Government have to make sure that Labour councils bring their performance into line with that achieved by Conservative councils. Is he aware that the number of vacant dwellings is rising? There are now some 80,000 vacant dwellings under local authority management, accounting for almost 2.5 per cent. of the stock. How do the Government propose to tackle that major and growing problem?

Local authorities and the framework within which they operate will play a key role in determining the success of any strategy to bring more brown-field sites into use.

Mr. Andrew Love (Edmonton): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Burns: I am sorry—I will not give way, because time is short and so many other hon. Members wish to speak.

The Government may rest assured that Conservative councillors will continue to protect the green belt against development as long as they are not further hindered by decisions from the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Conservative councillors in towns and cities will continue to urge the reuse of derelict sites and the clean-up of contaminated land. What measures does the Minister plan to introduce to ensure consistency across the planning system to give effect to the target of 60 per cent. of building on brown-field sites? Are the Government prepared to use their influence with the Labour-run authorities in our towns and cities, which control much of the brown land in question, to ensure that local authorities play their part in freeing brown-field sites for housing purposes? How does the Minister intend to encourage local authorities to allow brown land currently designated for industrial or commercial use to be used instead for residential purposes where feasible?

At present, planning law entitles local authorities to ask for contributions from developers towards the cost of overcoming genuine planning obstructions, such as widening road junctions or expanding the capacity of local schools. Conservative councillors will continue to seek fair agreements with developers for the joint funding of necessary local improvements.

Some local authorities allegedly abuse the system in order to finance unrelated spending. I understand that one local authority even demanded a contribution towards play areas from developers who were providing sheltered housing for the elderly. Such abuse discourages would-be developers from making applications to use brown-field sites. What will the Government do to prevent such seemingly sharp practices?

What line do the Government plan to take on the draft EU rules that will bar public bodies from contributing to pollution clean-up, and will insist that all land be returned to its natural state, regardless of its end use? When will the Government fix parameters for pollution clean-up, so that developers and local authorities know exactly where they stand?

The Government's response to the report is a poor attempt to paint it as an endorsement of their approach. That claim is not supported by a careful reading of the report. In fact, as the Deputy Prime Minister said on Monday, pretty much everybody claims to agree with the basic principles that we need more sustainable patterns of development and that we should minimise the use of green-field sites and maximise reuse of brown-field sites. The report exposes the hypocrisy of a Government who purport to defend the countryside and promote urban regeneration, while all the time taking decisions such as that in West Sussex, which undermine and frustrate their declared aims.

When the report was published, Friends of the Earth stated:

"the Select Committee has not been fooled by John Prescott's vague rhetoric."

The Government's response represents more of the same. The Select Committee was not fooled then, and I assure Ministers that the House will not be fooled now.

The Government's response is woefully inadequate. Its so-called strategy for meeting demand for new housing has been exposed as a sham. It is a catalogue of delay, indecision and downright incompetence. Instead of trying to paint a gloss over the report and paper over the cracks in their failed approach, the Government should go back to the drawing board and urgently consider relaying the entire foundations of their strategy to meet the problems facing the countryside and urban regeneration.

Mrs. Christine Butler (Castle Point): The hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) has not moved the debate further on—indeed, it has been stripped of context. He has not given due consideration to the Government's response to the Select Committee report—a response that was broadly welcomed by Labour Members. The big strategy of sustainability is one that we must all endorse. To move matters on, it is up to all of us to engage in debate on the detail of how to implement that strategy.

The Government and the Select Committee require sustainability to be at the heart of the debate—sustainability in respect of environmental, social and economic concerns. I urge the Government, when considering local authority planning application assessments, to give as much weight to social and economic criteria as to environmental criteria. That is extremely important, because, if we are not careful, the debate will shift in favour of the environmental agenda, which must not be considered in isolation from the social and economic agendas.

A big issue that has not yet been properly addressed, but which is all too evident, is the existence of huge regional differences in need and capacity. There is an enormous difference between north and south in general, but I should like to highlight the case of the south-east, where some of the biggest problems are found. The expected provision in that area is approximately one third of the 4.4 million new homes that have to be built. That is a pretty tall order. I welcome the so-called brown-field task force, although I would prefer the term "previously used land" to "brown field", as I do not think the latter term is appropriate. The task force has been set up to examine urban capacity for regeneration needs, especially in the London area.

The problem is one not merely of providing more housing, but of creating balanced communities. It is important to pay attention to all an area's needs—economic, social and environmental. Ringing the London region are commuter districts. The majority of my constituents commute to their jobs. If that carries on, it will become unsustainable in terms of both transport and the provision of social housing.

I welcome some of the comments in the Government's response, but one or two issues need further detailed examination. In the context of fiscal strategies, there is a real need to redefine conversions, even though the Government would encounter great difficulty with the European Commission, and there would be a prolonged debate about the equalisation of the value added tax regime between new build and conversions. However, if it is at all possible to redefine conversions in the context of the need for new housing, it might bear down on the existing 17.5 per cent. VAT levy. That would be a great achievement.

A further issue with which we must take great care—one which Friends of the Earth and others might push without giving it proper consideration—is that of the green-field levy. It sounds like a great idea, especially if the money was to be put into brown-field site conversion and solving the problems that exist there. However, although I do not want the Government to abandon the idea, it should be a less immediate priority and the Government should give further consideration to the pros and cons of imposing such a levy.

Of the greatest urgency and importance are the new planning policy guidance notes. Already, local authorities are proposing and adopting plans, and regional planning conferences are at various stages of reporting and adoption. If we do not get the new PPGs in soon, we shall leave ourselves open to speculative developments on green-field land.

Mr. Anthony Steen (Totnes): The hon. Lady mentions PPGs, but does she not agree that the major problem facing the south-east is that 868,000 new houses are scheduled to be built in the south-east of England alone? I am sure that she would agree that the consequences, including the use of public funds for infrastructure, are far-reaching and should be addressed in the House now. Has the hon. Lady actually envisaged what 868,000 houses will mean to the whole of the south-east of England?

Mrs. Butler: I am following my own track and my own agenda. If I am allowed to continue, the hon. Gentleman will hear the answer to his question. The lack of attention paid to the issues dealt with by the Committee and to the smaller points that I am highlighting now is what really matters. We know what the figures are.

There has already been speculative interest in green-field sites in my constituency. The authority would like to reject that, but cannot do so, because of legal niceties. In 1951, a certain site received planning permission for mixed-use, retail and housing development. Try as it might, since that time the authority has been unable to reallocate land use policy in that area, even though the circumstances in the constituency and the wider region have changed dramatically. Why is the authority unable to act? The answer is that a road was built—one road through the whole site, with the result that the site holds developers' interest unfairly.

That is why I welcome a hint in the proposed PPG3 that the Government might be able to strengthen local authorities' resolve when applications for renewal are made. Perhaps huge compensation need not be payable to the inheritors of the land when the local authority can prove that the application is unsuitable. There should be a further requirement: if a proposal has not been entirely developed within a certain period, it fails, and a new application is required. The nonsense of digging a trench or laying a bit of tarmac on a site should no longer be accepted. There is a loophole, and I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to respond to these concerns as soon as possible, if that is appropriate.

Greater consideration should be given to the issues that I have raised. Local authorities are being stymied in their attempts to provide the most sustainable solutions within their own neighbourhoods and communities.

4.48 pm

Mr. Anthony Steen (Totnes): This is an important debate. I pay tribute to the Select Committee for its work on an important subject.

We are told that 4.4 million new houses are to be built by 2016. That is such a large figure that none of us can grasp what 4.4 million houses would look like. Is that equal to the whole of London or Reading? I wonder whether the Government are planning an exhibition on the Upper Committee Corridor to give us an idea of what 4.4 million houses would look like on the ground.

The Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning (Mr. Richard Caborn): Those were the hon. Gentleman's Government's figures.

Mr. Steen: The Minister says that they were our Government's figures, but his Government have adopted them. I want to know how the Government came up with 4.4 million houses. Did the boffins in Kingsway think up that figure? What science do the officials profess to practise? Do they stick pins into lists of figures? What are their qualifications? Is there a special science for working out how many houses are needed?

Mr. Bennett: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that the process has gone on for many years? The interesting point is that officials have got the figures right over time.

Mr. Caborn: Thirty years.

Mr. Bennett: They have got the figures right for 30 years. It is dangerous to poke fun at the figures. We are keen that there should be more background information about the figures so that people can analyse them, but their track record is extremely good.

Mr. Steen: I would hate to argue with the hon. Gentleman, who was my pair many years ago and whose interest in and illustrious track record on the environment and housing is well known in the House, but the fact that figures have been allegedly proved right over 30 years does not mean that the projected figures are correct. The process has worked only because it has become a self-fulfilling prophecy—we go on building houses and people move into them. That does not mean that the figures are right, or that the science is right. The Select Committee could do the House a great service by inquiring in detail into the science and deciding whether it is flawed.

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): I draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to a document published in 1997 entitled "The Economic Determinants of Household Formation—A literature review", which the previous Government commissioned in 1996. It contains a great deal of information about the variables used in the prediction of future household growth and need. The figure has not, as the hon. Gentleman suggests, been plucked out of thin air. It was defended yesterday by the right hon. Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), who shared a platform with me at a meeting. The right hon. Gentleman is well apprised of the fact that a great deal of work has gone into calculating the figure and the hon. Gentleman should understand—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. The hon. Gentleman's intervention is far too long.

Mr. Steen: It was not only far too long but unhelpful. It would be wise if I did not give way again because of the danger of spurious remarks distracting the House from the important points that I shall make. [Interruption.] It is good to hear that those on the Government Front Bench are particularly verbal and volatile today—that always means that one is dealing with points that worry them. Clearly they are concerned about what I shall say and they are trying to stop me saying it, but I shall not be deterred.

I have challenged the acceptance of the figures regardless of which Government proposed them. I am not afraid to say that I would challenge a Conservative Government if we were in office. Unfortunately we are not, so I am challenging the Labour Government to question the figures. I will not dwell on that point.

If we accept the figure of 4.4 million homes, it will be a self-fulfilling prophecy and we should consider how it will affect the south-west, where 438,000 houses are to be built. The Devon structure plan, which includes my constituency, proposed 90,500 homes. That was not enough, and after a public inquiry, the figure was raised to 95,000.

The South Hams, which comprises the majority of my constituency, will have 13,500 additional new dwellings by 2011. That is curious because the House of Commons Library concluded that my constituency is one of the most beautiful in Britain. It did so by examining the number of environmental beauty categories into which the Totnes and South Hams area falls. It has the heritage coastline, areas of great landscape value, areas of outstanding natural beauty, sites of special scientific interest, the Dartmoor national park, conservation areas and so on. How could 13,500 houses be built in such an area without destroying green fields or eating into special environmentally protected areas? Furthermore, it is said that a further 300 acres is needed for employment land and, within the area covered by Devon county council, 3,000 acres is needed for employment land.

It is argued that new homes will be required to house the existing population. I challenge that. We are told that the vast increase in the number of houses is simply necessary to provide for a larger number of individual households, mainly because of divorce, which will create a need for 40 per cent. of the new homes. In addition, 30 per cent. of the new homes are needed because people live longer and another 30 per cent. are needed for young people who leave home and move around the country for work purposes.

I was told that the housing projection for the South Hams is intended to rehouse people who already live there. I hope that the Minister will listen carefully to this point. In 1981, the population of South Hams was 69,993. By 1997, the number had risen to 80,200—an increase of about 18 per cent. By contrast, the population in the whole county of Devon increased by 5 per cent. only. It cannot be that more than 90,000 new houses are needed to redistribute the existing population if there are dramatic increases in population numbers. The population increase in the South Hams has been out of all proportion to that in the county and in the south-west. In no way is that redistribution; it is plain inward migration.

More houses are needed because people come from other places with their families, pets and motor cars to live in Devon, not because overcrowded households need more space. In the three months ending March 1998, 8,233 additional people moved into the county. Since 1988, 8,000 people have been moving into the county every three months. Only during the economic crisis in 1991 did the figure drop. That means that 32,000 people move to Devon every year. That is why the new houses are needed—not to rehouse local people, which is entirely another matter. The county council says that 90,000 new houses are required for local people. That is not true; it is a figment of the planners' and statisticians' imaginations.

My experience supports that. On Saturday afternoons when I have little else to do, I knock on doors at random. That is one of my hobbies, and I should declare it as an interest. Oddly, I find that most of the people whose doors I knock on are newcomers, not people who have moved from other parts of Devon.

Adding to the population rather than redistributing it creates enormous pressure on the local infrastructure. For example, the building of new houses has been banned in Dartmouth because the sewerage system cannot cope. In Ivybridge, the sewerage system is backing up because so many people use it and the facilities are not sufficient.

The Government's housing projections, if implemented, would destroy tens of thousands of acres of green-field land, but in the South Hams they will eat into the special categories of beauty that the House of Commons Library has highlighted as particularly important.

One of the greatest ironies is that the very beauty that attracts people to my constituency will be destroyed by the buildings that they are intending to occupy. Who is running the county council? I am afraid that it is the Liberals. Who is running the Torbay unitary authority that governs part of my constituency? Again, it is the Liberals. Who is running the South Hams district council? I am afraid that it is the Liberals.

[Mr. Steen]

On 30 July, the Liberal county council whipped in all its councillors to attend a debate on the structure plan. They approved the Government's structure plan for the building of 90,000 new houses, despite strong opposition from the Conservatives. That occurred on the afternoon of 30 July. In the evening of 30 July, the Liberals launched a campaign opposing the 90,000 figure that they had approved that afternoon. They are now running around Devon organising meetings and campaigning against the proposal that they passed on the afternoon of 30 July. That is a good Liberal story, is it not? The Liberals talk about sustainable development, but those 90,000 houses are unsustainable. They talk about environmental sensitivity, but they are not the least bit sensitive to the environment.

I must now conclude. [HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear".] I am glad that Labour Members have enjoyed my comments and are ready to respond to them.

I propose a solution to the problem. The Government could ask the local authorities in Devon to agree on a sustainable figure. The Liberals on the Devon county council said that they passed the Government's structure plan because they feared that, if they did not, the Government would increase the figure. If the Government would tell Devon county council, "We will not increase the number of houses, so go back to the other local authorities and come up with a figure that you think is sustainable", the Government would not have to call in the plan. That outcome is inevitable, as the plan would have disastrous consequences in a county as beautiful as Devon—and certainly in the South Hams.

My proposal amounts to a more democratic way of handling the matter. When the Minister replies perhaps he could consider what I believe is a very sensible approach: asking the local authorities to provide a more sustainable figure. I am most grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I hope that my comments have been helpful to the House.

5.1 pm

Ms Hazel Blears (Salford): I welcome the report of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Select Committee and the recommendations contained therein. I compliment Committee members on the huge amount of work that they have undertaken in compiling the report. I understand that they have seen at least 30 sets of witnesses and received more than 200 memorandums. It has greatly assisted those hon. Members, like myself, who do not serve on the Committee to see the depth of consideration that Committee members have given to these important issues.

Contrary to the assertions made by the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns), I consider the report to be an example of joined-up thinking and joined-up government. It raises issues regarding not just housing but the sustainable development of communities. It will ensure that new housing developments take account of environmental and transport factors. A key recommendation in the report is that housing should be located close to people's places of employment so that they do not have to travel great distances to work. That recommendation is essential to regenerating our towns and cities.

The report is a good example of cross-departmental thinking and it begins to touch on many important issues. It also echoes many of the recommendations in the report of the social exclusion unit, "Bringing Communities Together". We must tackle some very serious issues, not simply housing matters, if we are to regenerate and renew many inner-city areas.

In the limited time available, I shall concentrate on the Committee's recommendations regarding urban areas and inner cities because my constituency is one of the poorest and most deprived inner-city areas in the country. In inner cities our problems are not about a shortage of land, but more about the breakdown of families and communities and the wholesale migration of owner-occupiers, leaving behind dereliction and decay. That is a very difficult issue to tackle in the long term.

I believe that housing must play a major role in urban regeneration. Housing constitutes 80 per cent. of development and is the key to improving our communities. We must bring empty properties back into use. The report's recommendations regarding harmonisation of value added tax on renovations and conversions are crucial. We must ensure that, as far as possible, there is a level playing field for new developments and conversions.

There are several problem areas in Salford which illustrate some of the difficulties that the report tries to tackle. I shall touch briefly on some of them. The Broughton area has a huge problem with small terraced housing. There has been an influx of private landlords, and owner-occupiers have moved out of the city. Indiscriminate letting policies of housing associations and private landlords have produced nuisance tenants who have driven out the majority of good, decent people who formerly lived in those communities.

We are beginning to regenerate the area. A joint single regeneration budget project with our neighbours in Manchester is working well, but it is difficult to encourage private developers to help us. I am delighted that the report highlights the action by English Partnerships to provide incentives and gap funding for developers to encourage them into our inner-city areas. Their assistance is crucial if we are to stabilise our communities and give local people some hope that things will change and improve. We must convince them to stay in our inner cities.

The recommendation for sequential planning consideration, whereby developers must show that they have considered using previously developed land before they are allowed to develop new sites, will be incredibly helpful in inner-city areas. However, we must question the future of small terraced housing. I received a letter only this week from a constituent in Kersal, which is an area of such housing. It is just one example of the hundreds of letters that I receive on this subject. My constituent explains that she is the owner of a two-bedroom terraced property which she cannot sell. She believes that the main problem lies with builders and property developers who are flinging up estates of semi-detached homes with carpets, curtains and gardens which cost about the same as her terraced property. Many first-time buyers are opting for those new starter homes rather than the traditional terraced housing. That leaves us with the real problem of how to encourage occupation in many such areas. Wholesale slum clearance is clearly not an option: it is too expensive and it destroys communities. However, in many parts of the north there is a real question about the relevance of terraced housing.

Another part of the city that has suffered huge problems in recent years is Seedley and Langworthy, where all of the problems of our inner cities—crime, unemployment and poor education—coalesce. We have produced a Seedley and Langworthy action plan which is designed to tackle those problems. Housing is a key regeneration factor and relies on the concept of a partnership of local people. That partnership is led by the community and involves business, voluntary groups, housing associations and a private developer. We have also almost persuaded a building society to join us to talk about how it can contribute to housing regeneration. Building societies are notoriously reluctant to become involved in regeneration, and I am particularly proud that we have been able to secure that assistance.

The action plan for Seedley and Langworthy is not just about housing; it is about education, health and jobs. It proposes the establishment of a community housing company so that local people can determine who lives in the area and how best to achieve regeneration. It is a 10-year plan because we recognise that many problems will not be solved overnight: we will require improvements, year on year. However, local people are determined to tackle the existing problems.

There are just 3,000 homes in the area, and 600 of them are empty. They have been boarded and bricked up or torched and left derelict and in decay because good, decent families have been driven out by crime and other inner-city problems. We must bring those properties back into beneficial use: that is the key to sustainable regeneration.

We must also tackle the problem of private landlords. The report says that the private rented sector has acted as a safety valve. That might be true in some areas, but the private rented sector in Salford is the source of much deterioration and decay. My heart sinks whenever I see a "For Rent" sign in my constituency because I know that it signals that another area is in decline. The owner-occupiers have gone and the absentee landlords and nuisance neighbours have arrived. I know that they will drive people out and that we will see properties boarded up, bricked up and torched. It is almost a logical progression. We must break that cycle of decay that is apparent in so many inner-city areas.

I have written to Ministers requesting regulations governing licensing. I would like to see housing benefit sanctions applied to some absent landlords—there is nothing more effective than hitting them in the pocket. Absentee landlords receive housing benefit and they do not care to whom they rent their properties. They do not manage their properties properly and they are not responsible landlords. I am not referring to every private landlord, but in many parts of my constituency a great deal of that goes on.

The city has a voluntary registration scheme for landlords and about 50 per cent. of them have signed up, but it is the good ones who sign up, the bad ones do not want to be involved. They do not want to be responsible for their properties. The issue must be tackled. Housing benefit sanctions, although difficult to impose, would concentrate minds wonderfully and I urge Ministers to consider them seriously.

We have a lot of hope in Salford. Although there are many problems, we are tackling them together. There is a long way to go, but the provision of decent, safe, warm, affordable and high-quality housing will be the key to our city's renewal and the urban renaissance that is categorised in the report. I welcome the prospect of an urban White Paper which will bring together our thinking across a range of Departments and provide a key and catalyst to urban regeneration.

Cities can be exciting and vibrant places. It is not true that the countryside is the rural idyll and that cities are bad places to live—they can be full of life, the arts and culture. They can have a real buzz. I want my city to have that buzz and to come up from the bottom. We have reached rock bottom and there is only one direction in which to go. We are coming up and fighting back, and I know that the Labour Government will give us the best chance that we have had for the past 20 or 30 years to regenerate our city and make Salford a better place to live, work and bring up families. We are determined to work on it together.

5.10 pm

Mr. Tom Brake (Carshalton and Wallington): I welcome the topical nature of the housing report and part if not all of the Government's response to it. However, I should like to highlight some issues on which I feel that the Government's response is weak or possibly unhelpful.

First, let me turn to the housing projection figures. The report calls the estimate of 4.4 million new homes yet in a report in The Guardian on Monday, senior Government sources are quoted as saying that 5 million new homes would be a more realistic estimate. If that is the view of senior Government sources, and given that it will be significantly harder to identify sites for that increased number of new homes, it should be out in the open and not hidden away in the inside pages of The Guardian.

"the best one there is",

Secondly, on the national target for development on brown-field sites, and perhaps anticipating the contribution from Conservative Members, who no doubt will be calling for a target that is higher than 60 per cent., it is worth reminding the House of their record in government. Under the Tories, an average of about six in 10 homes were built on green-field sites, so the shadow Minister was right the first time when he said that the Tory Government were intent on developing more homes on green-field sites. It is a pity that they have discovered only recently that there is more to be gained by defending the countryside than by building all over it.

The Liberal Democrats do not consider a 60 per cent. target for development on brown-field land to be particularly ambitious. If the right policies were in place, more could be achieved. For instance, the Council for the Protection of Rural England argues that the capacity of cities and towns for new housing is a matter of policy rather than physical constraint. The 60 per cent. target should be an interim target, a stepping stone to a tougher target of 75 per cent.

Thirdly, there is the problem of defining brown-field land. The Government need to refine their definition and make a distinction between sites previously used for housing or industrial developments and ex-MOD land, such as abandoned airfields, which may mostly comprise of green fields. Establishing a new category of land in the development hierarchy, which we have dubbed taupe-field, would enable such sites to be considered for development after consideration of recycled land. The definition could include, for instance, land adjacent to an out-of-town development or situated by a road of at least B status or used for specific purposes. The development hierarchy would then prioritise conversion of old buildings; then development on brown-field sites; then taupe-field sites; and, finally, green-field sites.

That might help to defuse the controversies surrounding proposed developments, such as the proposal for 50,000 new homes on ex-MOD airfields near Cambridge. The new definition would also address some of the Select Committee's concerns that,

"by promoting Brownfield land, regardless of its location, we continue to encourage unsustainable forms of settlement."

Fourthly, a new planning policy guidance note 3 must be issued without delay. It is the simplest means of ensuring that the desired changes to planning policy are implemented forthwith. Otherwise, building on green-field land will continue apace. The Government must provide a firm date by which it is to be published. The Department's best estimate today was that it would be some time early next year. I encourage the Minister to give a more precise date.

Fifthly, one must consider the role of the regional planning conferences which are to spearhead the Government's approach to the provision of future housing. I agree with the CPRE that there is no demonstrable commitment to move away from the policy of "predict and provide". The regional planning conferences have apparently received no advice on how to plan other than according to that policy. They are under-resourced and lack any statutory basis, so they are ill-equipped to deliver the Government's strategy of "plan, monitor and manage".

Sixthly, other hon. Members have mentioned the need to reduce migration. I agree with the Government that strong urban development is needed to slow down or stop net out-migration and that there is a key role for the regional development agencies. I support the policy, but we need a clear statement from the Government on whether the improvements to health, education and transport will be delivered regardless of the economic downturn and its effect on Government spending plans. The provision of better hospitals, schools and transport in urban areas would help to stop that migration.

There is one last area to consider that has been touched on today—tax reform and financial incentives. Tax changes could influence dramatically developers' choice of green-field or brown-field sites, but I fear that the Government have yet to take action. For instance, on the green-field development levy, the Government but no decision has yet been taken as to whether to proceed. I find that response disappointing.

"is considering the use of economic instruments to further our planning objectives"

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that if a levy were charged on building a house on a green-field site, the price of those houses would go up to take account of the tax? That would provide an incentive to those who wish to build executive-style homes in out-of-town development areas, so a green-field levy would have the opposite effect to the one the hon. Gentleman describes.

Mr. Brake: That is not necessarily the case, particularly in locations where there is direct competition between building on green-field sites and building on brown-field sites. The competitive nature of the market will ensure that those house prices remain broadly the same.

The figures supplied by the Civic Trust suggest that some £200 million per annum could be raised by a 10 per cent. levy on green-field land values. If 75 per cent. of that money were spent on cleaning up contaminated land, the remaining £50 million per annum would purchase nearly 15,000 acres of arable land, which I understand from the Library is the equivalent of 53 Hyde parks. Each year we could purchase that quantity of land on the back of the green-field development levy and provide green lungs in urban and rural areas.

There is also the VAT anomaly. Why should people pay 17.5 per cent. on the conversion of properties and no VAT on new build? The Government's response is mixed. In response to an Adjournment debate, Helen Liddell commented that the VAT issue is complex, and a reduced rate could only be applied to social housing, not all housing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. Members should be referred to by constituency.

Mr. Brake: The then Economic Secretary to the Treasury, now the Minister of State, Scottish Office, with responsibility for education and industry, said that in March. She felt that the move would result in taxation loss and was not convinced by it. A few months later, in May 1998, a junior Environment Minister said that a refurbishment VAT cut was under consideration. In their response to the report, the Government say that "unifying VAT would help to provide a more level playing field for conversions".

There is clearly a need for a statement from the Government on their stance in relation to the VAT anomaly, and whether they intend to remove it. There are almost 800,000 empty homes and 800,000 potential homes in England situated in buildings suitable for redevelopment. That underlines the importance of evening out the anomaly as soon as possible.

There is also the matter of roll-over capital gains tax. As hon. Members may be aware, there is a loophole that allows farmers to purchase additional land and thereby to escape capital gains tax. That encourages building and tax evasion.

Site value rating is a subject close to Liberal Democrat hearts, which we like to mention when the opportunity arises. Will the Government consider replacing the uniform business rate with site value rating, a system that taxes the value of land rather than the use made of it? That would encourage landowners to make use of their land, rather than leaving it derelict.

Finally, I accept that limited progress is being made on maximising development on brown-field sites, but the Government must move further and faster. With 110 sq km of countryside disappearing under concrete every year, every week's delay in implementing the Government's new policy means that a further 2 sq km of countryside are lost for ever. If they continue to procrastinate, the Government's legacy to future generations will be row after row of identikit homes marching across down and vale. They will never be forgiven.

5.21 pm

Mrs. Louise Ellman (Liverpool, Riverside): The Select Committee's support for the Government's proposal that at least 60 per cent. of new homes should be provided on brown-field sites arises from a view of housing as a critical part of regeneration, and of regeneration as linked to jobs, training, transport, environment and the provision of social amenities. The key question is whether we have the mechanisms and policies to achieve that in the shortest possible time.

We are in a period of great change. We are embarking on a policy of integrated regional strategies. We are doing that through the creation of regional development agencies—which, I remind the Opposition, were strongly opposed by them—and through the development of regional chambers. In the draft guidance to regional development agencies published earlier this week, they are asked to adopt an integrated approach to the economy, employment, social exclusion and physical decay. The strategy is to be drawn up in co-operation with the regional chambers. For the first time there is a clear statement, guidance and structure for a regional policy on integrated development, to improve housing, the economy and the environment.

I must, however, express concern about the regional planning conferences, which are to assume increasing importance. Can the Minister assure me that the guidance given to regional planning conferences will ensure that they act in harmony with the regional economic strategies to be developed by the agency in co-operation with the elected regional chamber?

Mr. Laurence Robertson (Tewkesbury): Will the hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Ellman: I am sorry, but, in view of the time constraints, I cannot.

Exciting regeneration is currently under way in Everton, a deprived part of my constituency—an area where there is much dereliction, male unemployment stands at 37.5 per cent., and 80 per cent. of pupils in the partnership area involved are eligible for free school meals. Hope university college is spearheading a multimillion pound investment, transforming the disused area of the listed St. Francis Xavier school and the site around it into a major centre for arts, drama and economic development, together with accommodation. Nearby, the private sector is converting the listed disused Collegiate school into flats for sale, and near there the Riverside housing association is converting a disused listed Georgian terrace into a mixed-use development—shops, offices and flats—for a combination of rent and shared ownership.

The result of all that activity is the provision of much-needed homes on brown-field sites, educational opportunities, jobs and an improved environment, giving hope to people currently living in an abandoned and largely derelict area. Achieving that development has been a complex task. A wide variety of funding sources have been called on—for example, English Partnerships, European funding, the Housing Corporation, the college and private sector funding.

Much has been achieved, but how much more could be achieved there and in similar areas if we had a comprehensive policy, with the mechanisms available for that policy to be used for inner-city regeneration? The steps that could be taken include reducing the 17.5 per cent. VAT on conversions, recognising the need to plan for and provide affordable housing, dealing with land assembly and contamination, recognising the new regional development agencies as an important resource for the locality, and harnessing public and private sector funding.

I see much that is encouraging in recent Government policy statements. The document "Fair deal for communities" and the report on a new approach to deprived neighbourhoods advocate joined-up thinking in situations of social breakdown. I am encouraged by the announcement of a new urban White Paper by the Secretary of State earlier this week, which shows that we are ready to adopt such thinking as part of mainstream policy. In that way we can meet housing need to its maximum on brown-field sites, regenerate the inner cities and build a new future for communities in an economically and environmentally sustainable way.

5.26 pm

Mr. James Gray (North Wiltshire): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman). Several other colleagues who have served with me on the Environment Committee over the past 18 months have spoken in the debate.

May I pay particular tribute to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), who puts up with our personal foibles and our use of hyperbole on some occasions with remarkable good humour and tolerance? All members of the Committee are grateful to him for it. It must be a particularly difficult job to be the Darby to the formidable Joan supplied by the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), who is sorry that she cannot be in the Chamber today for the debate, but who approaches the issues that we discuss in the Select Committee with a refreshing robustness of mind.

That is reflected in the report, which goes to such great lengths to criticise—fairly heavily in some parts—what the Government have done. The hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich would be the first to acknowledge that she was ready to do so, were she in her place this afternoon.

The criticism in the report is slightly unusual, as most of our discussion tends to achieve virtual unanimity. The report was agreed unanimously by the Committee. Despite the cross-party banter that we have heard this afternoon, the issues that we are discussing are issues which we as a nation must examine, and are not essentially party political.

On the number of houses that we will require between now and 2016, I do not agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Totnes (Mr. Steen), who went to great lengths to rubbish—a rather unpleasant word—the figures. In Committee, I went to some length to try to find holes in the figures produced by my former colleagues, the excellent civil servants in the Department of the Environment, but no amount of effort on my part could produce an argument to show that 4.4 million was necessarily wrong. Indeed, I was horrified to discover that the likelihood was that the figure might even be higher than 4.4 million new households, based on the statistical projections which were being used. It is probably not all that sensible at the start of the debate to assert that the figures are wrong. They appear to be correct, as far as statistical projections can be correct.

A more interesting question is why there will be 4.4 million new houses. The answer, as my hon. Friend the Member for Totnes said, is primarily the breakdown of families, which is accelerating at such an alarming rate, and because children are tending to wish to leave home earlier than they did when I was a youngster. My experience was that one stayed at home until 21, as I did when I was at university; I stayed at home to begin with in Glasgow and thereafter moved to a bedsit for a number of years. I would never have contemplated having a flat or a house probably until I was well married and into my 30s. Indeed, I did not own any property until I was 35.

That frame of mind has perhaps changed. People nowadays tend to leave home much earlier and then to demand from the nation some form of accommodation at the age of 16. I do not believe that that is right. I do not necessarily believe that society should provide enough houses to accommodate all of the tragedies that come about as a result of family breakdown. If we were to restrict to a degree the availability of new housing in the places where people wanted to be, youngsters might be encouraged to stay at home for a little longer. That might even help some families to stay together which otherwise would fall to pieces, given the availability of somewhere else to go.

Leaving aside the number of houses that are required, we must make better use of the houses that are currently available. At April 1997, there were 767,000 empty homes in Britain, most of them in the private sector. Of that total, 81,000 were local authority homes, a large proportion being controlled by the Labour party, which must look to its own front gardens before it does anything else. There were 27,000 empty housing association homes and 19,000 empty homes belonging to other public sector bodies, mainly health authorities and the armed services.

Most of that accommodation—767,000 homes—is usable. The previous Government produced targets to reduce that total stock of usable empty housing by 3 per cent. per annum. I challenge the new Government, who are so proud of what they are doing in areas such as housing, to better the previous Government's targets. If they believe that they can do that, let us see them doing it. For example, what about 5 per cent? Perhaps they might start with some of their socialist friends. For example, my Labour-controlled local authority in Swindon has a significant number of empty homes. It is important that the Government look first to their own laurels.

In that context, is it not extraordinary that in Newcastle recently permission was given for 2,500 new houses to be built on green-field sites despite the fact that in the centre of the city 4,000 lettable properties were empty? Why do we not fill empty lettable properties in Newcastle first before we give planning permission for 2,500 homes to be built on the green belt surrounding the city?

Making better use of existing stock will not happen by chance. We can force local authorities, housing associations and private owners to make better use of existing stock only if we restrict the availability of new stock. If developers are constantly providing new stock in addition to the nation's current stock of housing, people will go to live in the new stock. If we say to developers, "Look, you have a choice; you can either build on a green-field site or in the inner city", they will build on green-field sites. After all, it is so much cheaper and the homes will sell so much better.

People want—wrongly, I think—to live in suburban Britain on a green-field site. The only way in which we shall persuade developers to redevelop inner cities is physically to restrict the amount of green-field land that is available to them. As long as that land is available to them, they will use it. We must find ways of restricting much more heavily the use of green-field land that surrounds our cities.

In my constituency, there is a proposal—it has been put up by the socialist local authority in Swindon—for 17,500 new houses to be built on the land between Swindon and Wootton Bassett. However, the centre of Swindon—an old railway town—is entirely run down and a huge amount of redevelopment is necessary. People will go into the centre of the town if we say that the rural buffer zone that currently surrounds Swindon is as powerful as the green belt would be and developers may not build within it. I welcome the Government's response to rural buffer zones and other local designations. It would seem that the Government may move towards giving such zones and designations the same power in law as green belt land.

I issue a word of caution on brown-field land. It seems that there is a slight pre-supposition that all brown-field sites may be built upon. The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) mentioned Ministry of Defence sites, and in my constituency I have several redundant Royal Air Force and Army sites. It would be wrong to build houses on those sites because they are green-field sites. They are in the middle of the countryside and there is no infrastructure attached to them. There are no shops, pubs, schools or roads. There is no nothing. They are, to all intents and purposes, green-field sites. The fact that they were used for something else should not be a presumption that they should be built upon.

The Government have not responded to the points made in the Select Committee's report about villages. At risk of being called a NIMBY, I shall refer to my village of Slaughterford in Wiltshire. It is a tiny hamlet within which there are 30 residents. It is proposed to build 14 executive-style homes in the village.

Mr. Caborn: It is amazing how we all live in these places.

Mr. Gray: The hon. Gentleman says that from a sedentary position. It is indeed amazing how we all live in these places, and I am delighted that I live in one. The Minister must come to visit me at Slaughterford. I shall try to lay on the best hospitality that I can when he does so. If the Minister comes to Slaughterford he will find a hamlet which has been untouched for 100 years. There are 30 people living in it. However, there is a proposal to build 14 executive-style homes at a cost of £600,000 each on a disused mill site in the village. Slaughterford has no roads save two miles of single track needed to get there. There is no public transport and there is no school, no pub and no shop. There is nothing at all. There are a few tiny properties and there is the proposal to build the new houses on the mill site.

The developers are using the Government's response to the Select Committee and their talk about brown-field sites as a possible excuse to build the new homes. I say that villages should be built on only when local people have the need of somewhere to live. I think particularly of the children of agricultural workers, who need to stay in the villages. They are local people and they need to live locally. That is fine. Let us have a little bit of infill. Against that background, £600,000-worth of executive-style homes in a remote Wiltshire hamlet ain't what the Government should be encouraging.

Other than that, I wholly endorse most of what the Government have said about their preference for brown-field sites. However, like most of my hon. Friends, I regret that the Government have been so timid in going for 60 per cent. They should have endorsed our target of 66 per cent. if possible. I have slight worries about how genuine the Government are being in their preference for brown-field sites. They give lip service in favour of these sites, but, at the same time, they allow building in Stevenage, West Sussex and Newcastle, and who knows where else. The decision to build 17,000 houses round Swindon will be an interesting touchstone for the Government's attitude towards new housing in country areas.

It seems that the Government have the right ideas. The report says that they probably have the right ideas—vague but nevertheless the right ideas. In the immortal words of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson), they need to sharpen up their act and save our countryside from the bulldozer.

5.37 pm

Mrs. Ann Cryer (Keighley): I thoroughly enjoyed the contribution by my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Salford (Ms Blears). Many of her comments apply almost equally to my constituency although perhaps to a lesser degree.

I welcome the Select Committee's report. The conclusions and recommendations are much in line with my own thinking. The statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the White Paper, which was produced earlier this year, are also to be welcomed, particularly the commitment to a 60 per cent. brown-field and 40 per cent. green-field future for housing land allocation. My anxiety is about how that policy is to be implemented. I am therefore pleased to note the recommendation in the Select Committee's report, which goes a long way to addressing the dilemma. I refer to the Select Committee's comment at the end of paragraph 245 on page xvii, which reads:

"We strongly agree with those witnesses who argued that there must be a restriction on the amount of greenfield land available for development if developers are ever to make full use of the brownfield land available."

I could not agree more.

The Bradford unitary development plan, like others, makes far too much green-field land available. In a beautiful part of the Aire valley near Silsden in my constituency, it could allow 1,500 additional houses in green belt. The development would almost double the size of that mainly Victorian industrial village, remove for ever its character, urbanise yet further that green and pleasant part of our Aire valley, and leave schools, roads and other facilities unable to cope without massive injections of public money. The Silsden town action group, with support from me and the parish council, will oppose any detailed planning applications as they arise.

I want to touch on two other green-field sites in my constituency's part of Bradford's UDP. Manor Garth, which has always been regarded as common land in Addingham in the Wharfe valley, was designated in the UDP as village green space. Unfortunately, the owners saw a sizeable profit coming their way if it was zoned for housing. They appealed, and the Department's inspector under the previous Government agreed that their land should be available for housing. In the teeth of opposition from the parish council, the civic society, the local authority and me, there is a strong possibility that eventually, this much cherished field, which allows views of some interesting ancient buildings, will be lost for ever.

An almost identical situation prevails at Leeming, a hamlet close to the village of Oxenhope. Again, the landowner, on appeal to the inspector, was able to change a field from village green space to housing land and, at a stroke, enhance the potential size of his bank balance. I and Oxenhope village action group, the parish council and local councillors oppose any development on the site.

The UDP review is starting to roll again. I hope that my constituents will take a much more careful and critical view of it than they and their councillors took four and a half years ago. I also hope that the next plan will be under the guidance of the Department, which will be implementing the recommendations of the Select Committee report.

To show that all is not doom and gloom in my constituency on the planning and housing front, I shall mention a few minor triumphs. My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Housing visited us during the recess and saw two schemes funded by the single regeneration budget. The one in Keighley town centre is now complete, with family homes available at affordable rents. The other is at Oakworth road, where Hillworth lodge, the old and much detested workhouse, will be converted and enhanced to form a mixture of maisonettes and houses for older people and families. Plans to create a living-over-the-shop scheme of apartments in the town centre are being explored. I hope that they will eventually take shape. Those schemes will help regenerate and enhance Keighley town centre and the quality of life of those living there. Unlike the three green-field developments that I mentioned earlier, they are made up of homes that local people on low incomes will be able to afford.

Many brown-field sites and unused buildings could be used for housing if there were incentives for developers to consider them instead of the rich pickings of green-field sites. Keighley has many former mills standing derelict, and there are the unused warehouses on the Leeds-Liverpool canal, which British Waterways is anxious to offload.

Nearer the centre of Bradford, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Singh), lie the historic Lister's Manningham mills, where once the finest velvets were manufactured. The Victoria and Albert museum had thought of moving its south-east Asia collection there, which would have been welcomed by the local community, but, alas, that will not happen. What better way to use the building than to create hundreds of well-designed flats at affordable rents? Such a development has taken place at Saltaire in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie) in the old mending and burling shed of Salts mill, alongside imaginative conversions of other parts of Salts to health authority offices, a Hockney art gallery and various attractive shops. It is a well-thought out conversion and use of what was becoming another derelict mill.

There is so much that can be done to provide homes without losing vast areas of our countryside. Our Government are moving in the right direction. Where there is a political will, a practical way can usually be found. The report points us in the direction of that practical way. I congratulate the Committee on its thorough work and excellent ideas.

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): The Committee has produced a report and made recommendations that contribute significantly to the housing debate, and I welcome the opportunity to discuss them.

In Hampshire, as my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth), and, perhaps, the hon. Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) know, we are facing a nightmare scenario. According to regional planning guidance, we are threatened with 56,000 houses. More than 25 per cent.—15,000—are destined for Basingstoke. Borough officials tell me that 76 per cent. of those must be built on green-field sites because of the lack of brown-field sites in the town of Basingstoke.

There was an interesting variation of view between my hon. Friends the Members for Totnes (Mr. Steen) and for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray). I agree that 4.4 million may be the best estimate. I, too, have spent some time studying the various statistics that make up that estimate. I, too, find puzzling points which I shall tell the House about and ask my hon. Friends to contemplate. One is that in the period considered, there is a phenomenal anticipated increase in the number of European Union citizens working in the United Kingdom. The figure rises to 850,000, which means that we will have immigration not equalled even at the height of West Indian immigration in the 1950s and 1960s. However, the estimate does not take into account UK citizens who go to work in other EU countries.

Another puzzling feature is the extraordinary slow-down assumed in the number of cohabiting unmarried couples. We know from the census that in the 10 years before 1991, cohabiting unmarried couples increased from 2.9 to 6.4 per cent. of households, more than double, but for the 15 years covered by this estimate, the increase is only 0.3 per cent. It is very puzzling to think what social reason will lead to that extraordinary change. In those two respects, I believe that the estimate is likely to be suspect.

There is common ground on at least one aspect in this debate: priority must given to brown-field site development and urban regeneration. I regret that the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) is not in his seat. He and I seldom agree. This time we do, and I regret that he is not at hand to share the moment. His evidence to the Committee was telling and was closely reflected in the speech by the hon. Member for Salford (Ms Blears). His testimony laid great emphasis on the urban dereliction in his constituency and he wrote of the imperative of creating penalties to deter green-field development and incentives to promote inner-city development.

I take seriously the warning by my hon. Friend the Member for North Wiltshire about green-field tax, but I believe that the Government should look positively on incentives to make inner cities habitable again. For that reason, I share the Committee's concern that Lord Rogers's task force should not be used as a means of causing delay. As the House-Builders Federation advocated in a helpful note that I received this morning, measures should be introduced long before we see Lord Rogers's report next year.

I regret that to date the Government have gone for a rather miserly proposed target of 60 per cent. of development taking place on brown-field sites, to be achieved over 10 years. I welcome the Committee's recommendations that the target should be at least 60 per cent., and should be applied during the coming round of regional planning guidance rather than over 10 years.

I noted with interest that the Committee said that there would be regional variations, and that in some regions brown-field development could be close to 100 per cent. but that in all regions it should be at least 40 per cent. If that became Government policy it would be good news for the people of north Hampshire. If borough officials are right in saying that brown-field sites to accommodate even 40 per cent. of the proposed development cannot be found, such a target would require either a significant lowering of the county's requirement for new housing, or a fundamental redistribution of new housing within the county. I suspect that even with that, 40 per cent. could not be achieved. The county council is right to urge the Government not to force the 56,000 houses on us but to look for a lower figure; 42,000, which is itself a considerable number, is the target it advocates.

I share the Committee's conclusion that most new homes should be built in suitable urban areas, that brown-field sites or converted buildings should be used, and that the provision of green-field sites for development must be severely restricted.

I shall throw out a word of caution about edge-of-town development. There are two dangers associated with it. West of Basingstoke there is an outline proposal to build 5,000 or so houses, and the provisional plans show an uneconomic use of land. It is imperative that if we go in for significant amounts of edge-of-town development, the land must be used economically. The example of Poundbury, with an accommodation density of 15 or 20 units per acre, shows that it is not necessary for excessive quantities of land to be used. That should be borne in mind when edge-of-town development is being considered.

The second danger associated with edge-of-town development is that people may be encouraged to think that it will not generate traffic. That is not so, and it will not be so in the north of Hampshire, in the greater M4—Thames corridor.

We have high employment, at least at the moment, and a highly skilled work force. High employment encourages job mobility, and people are prepared to drive 30 or even 50 miles to their places of work. If the current plans proceed, and about 15,000 houses are built around Basingstoke, it will be wrong to imagine that most of the people living in them will necessarily work in the town of Basingstoke. Traffic will be generated as they travel to their employment in various parts of the greater area.

I welcome the fact that the report has raised these issues, and I hope that the Government will reflect the Committee's recommendations in their policy decisions. I also hope that their wider response on housing and planning will extend to reversing damaging decisions that have already been made and giving unqualified protection to the green belt, and that they will commit themselves to a target of at least 60 per cent. for brown-field development.

5.54 pm

Mr. Graham Stringer (Manchester, Blackley): I am grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to have been called in this debate as well as in the previous debate on the future of the countryside. What characterised both debates, and the considerations of the Select Committee, was an increasing consensus among the political parties, the professionals giving evidence to the Committee, and even the Government in their response to the report, that the future protection of the countryside is intimately related to the protection of cities and towns. Urban renaissance depends on keeping the countryside as the countryside.

My only quibble with my right hon. and hon. Friends in government is over the speed at which things should happen. I know the north-west better than the areas that Opposition Members have talked about, so I shall use it as my example. At a stroke—I hate using that phrase, because of its political pedigree—one could, by announcing that there would be no future housing developments on green-field sites, give Manchester, Liverpool and the other towns in the north-west the biggest boost imaginable.

There is an alternative to an urban renaissance, and it is the urban dark ages. The future of our cities is on the cusp, on the edge, and immediate action is needed to make the developers who have invested their money in turnip fields and grass in the areas around our cities dedicate that money, and their creative resources, to the cities.

Fields are bought up by the big housing developers as land banks for programmes that will go on for 30 years. While those resources are tied up in the countryside, the developers are not bringing their ingenuity and their contributions into the cities. Eventually, if they are allowed to concrete over the countryside, they will severely damage it. We want what people who watch American football call a "hurry up" offence.

I associate myself with the comments made by my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears). My constituency is in almost exactly the same socio-economic category as Salford, and I would like to deal in detail with the mechanisms that lead to the problems in the terraced streets. If we understand those mechanisms, some solutions can be applied fairly quickly.

One of the housing facilities in my constituency is not voluntary; it is called Strangeways. It is possible for somebody to come out of Strangeways, collect his money and set up as a private landlord. He will buy a house in a terraced street and get somebody—preferably, from his point of view, an undesirable neighbour—to rent it.

The landlord will get a capital return on the house within two or three years, sometimes less. If he puts his anti-social friends in, he can drive property prices down so that eventually nobody wants to live on either side of the whole of a terraced street. Such people can drive the prices of houses that cost £30,000 or £35,000 in the late 1980s down to £3,000 or £4,000. They then buy up the street. Nobody wants to live there, but housing benefit pays for the people who do live there. The local authority then has the problem of compulsorily purchasing the houses at values three or four years out of date.

There must be a solution that stops public money being used to destroy parts of our inner cities. I do not believe that any other service comparable to the private rented sector is so completely deregulated. People can come out of prison and do what I have described. They are providing a service, and there is no recourse for tenants apart from the courts.

We need a body like the one that oversees housing associations to regulate landlords and stop undesirables, as we do with publicans. To sell us a pint of beer somebody has to be of good character, but anybody can make people's lives miserable by becoming a private landlord. We need regulation and bodies for people to go to that will stop all that.

I do not want to pretend that all private landlords are bad; they are not. However, there are some operating in my constituency and other constituencies in Manchester and Salford, such as Madina, who make real efforts to drive house prices down.

Adjacent to terraced houses in my constituency—which are becoming increasingly difficult to let and which need Government action—there are council houses which are also difficult to let for similar reasons. Manchester city council is considering a proposal to knock down an estate where, only three or four years ago, families were living happily, and some families had been there for 22 years, since the estate was built. What happened? About three years ago, a group of drug dealers got on to the estate, and all who could move out did so. The local authority is considering demolishing the whole lot. I hope that it reconsiders.

One of the reasons why the families moved out was that it took the local authority—which is good on these matters, and is better than many others—18 months to get the people out. There is no mandatory right for a local authority to get rid of the worst tenants, and we need a change in the law to provide that right. The proposals from the housing department in Manchester and from my colleagues when I was on the city council—to have provisional or probationary tenancies—have been unpopular in the housing world. We sponsored that idea for housing associations, and we want it for council tenants.

I never thought that I would stand up in this Chamber to ask for less security of tenure for council house tenants. However, in estates in my constituency and most other inner-city constituencies one will find that tenants want the security of having the ability to evict those people who make their lives miserable, either by selling drugs or by other forms of anti-social behaviour. We need to change the rules; that will make a big and immediate difference in the city.

[Mr. Graham Stringer]

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Salford and other hon. Members that cities are the future of this country. It will grow and thrive economically only if we make the cities work. If we neglect them, as we have done in the past, the whole economy and the whole of our society will fall into decline. We have to start, and there are things that we can do immediately. I hope that my Front-Bench colleagues will take action as soon as possible.

6.1 pm

Mr. Howard Flight (Arundel and South Downs): I was privileged to serve on the Committee and I pay tribute to the Chairman, the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), and other colleagues with whom I worked. This is an important report which I hope receives better coverage in the media. The report is about an absolutely crucial subject to all of us and, as many have commented, the view reached was largely bipartisan. I do not think that this is fundamentally a party political issue.

I wish to refer to some issues which, perhaps, were not greatly focused on in the report. The first is the rather crude macro-point that putting one third of all new housing and further economic concentration in the south-east is not acceptable in the long term. However, anyone who takes that view must accept that the market must be allowed to operate to some extent to make it more attractive for business to go elsewhere. Simply, if we restrict supply, house prices will rise, and that will have an economic impetus in terms of what companies do and where they locate. As the Committee Chairman pointed out, there is a lot of trying to have one's cake and eat it. Local authorities want economic development, but not the housing. The other side of that is that one must allow the market to operate if we are not to restrict supply.

I am in the camp that is somewhat sceptical about the numbers. We are talking about a long time ahead to be predicting. The figures are trend-based, and who is to say that trends will stay the same? There are many other areas of activity where trends have changed dramatically. My hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) referred to the growth in cohabiting and the assumptions of massive net immigration to this country. Some 80 per cent. of the growth is projected to be made up of single-person households. However, a recent important survey of young people showed that 84 per cent of 20-year-olds want to get married and have a normal family unit. If anything, they were reacting against some recent trends.

The Government are laying down the figures too much—it is all slightly "1984". It is convenient for bureaucrats and developers to have plenty of scope—say, five years forward—to organise. I believe that supply is, to an extent, creating demand. It is interesting that the hon. Member for Salford (Ms Blears) made that point in referring to the destruction of the value and usage of perfectly good traditional terraced houses.

I hope that we are not changing the buzz words from "predict and provide" to "plan, manage and monitor". I welcome the White Paper, but I have seen nothing that amounts to a fundamental change. We are still playing the old game of "predict a number" 20 years forward. We will need more flexible management of the numbers if we are to fine-tune the system.

I had a long conversation with the executive of Redland who is responsible for the company's derelict land. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of urban land for redevelopment. The company wants to sell the land, but there is a planning nightmare because it is still a zone for industrial usage. Many authorities do not have their structural plans in place, and there is a five-year agony in trying to get planning permission. The system needs a bomb under it. There is masses of such land and there are willing sellers. However, many of the inefficiencies of the planning process stand in the way of getting the land used.

In my constituency in West Sussex, we suffer from the green belt—it restricts building, as it were, in Surrey and tips it over the border into West Sussex. There is a pull-push between the two counties. One might suggest that, for larger cities in the south, the answer could be to extend the radius of the green belt from 35 miles to 80 miles. At present, we have had an explosion of far-distant dormitory rural suburbia—almost the worst possible result for the future.

Architecture is terribly important, and Poundbury has been cited. The report was critical of new settlements, but if one goes to Bath, one cannot criticise a "new settlement" which was built 200 years ago. How is it that, 200 years later, we are not capable of building a beautiful, substantial new city? Surely we must be able to do that. Design and architecture matters should not completely rule out new settlements.

In my part of the world, there is an extremely competent county council—both its civil servants and its political representatives—and I am extremely sceptical and concerned lest power move even further from the county councils and cities with which people identify to regional development agencies and Government regional offices.

I do not believe that the Deputy Prime Minister really intended to approve those extra houses for West Sussex. I believe that the Government office for the south-east took the decision because it was concerned that it would set a dangerous precedent for other counties. I suspect that the Deputy Prime Minister may not have been fully aware of all the implications when he gave his approval. I make a plea to the Government to try to find a face-saving way of reviewing the decision. The Government know that the courts rejected the judicial review on a matter of law concerning the Government's power, not on whether it was a good decision.

The report found six important territories contravening the decision. It rightly recommends that a detailed environmental sustainability appraisal should be at the centre of planning policy before starting. West Sussex has been a pioneer of that, as we know. One has to have proper consideration, consultation and examination in public to support the structural plan, with full cross-examination. West Sussex was the only authority to do that.

The report calls on central Government to support local authorities and not to undermine them in restricting development on green-field sites. West Sussex has moved from 60 per cent. brown to 60 per cent. green, on the increase in the figures—an area that has already more than doubled its population in the past 25 years. Also, West Sussex has a huge water supply problem. In the summer, we have water rationing and water levels are sinking, with many lakes drying up. Long term, there is no evidence that we will have sufficient water.

The report cites the bottom-up approach. As the Minister knows, 45,000 people in West Sussex have signed four or five petitions—people of all political parties. Is not that approach in line with getting the in-depth views of the community?

Finally, on travel, what is known as the Cinderella line runs down to Arundel, and long may it so remain as it has preserved the southern half of West Sussex from being a commuter area. Only in the east of the area do we have such a travel facility.

Let us forget the party politics. I ask the Government to find a discreet way to review the decision. We do not want pious words and good intentions. Let us really try to make it happen.

The report highlights six key issues. As the Chairman of the Select Committee pointed out, there is an urgent need for intermediate Government guidance on the redemption of contaminated land. I happen to know of some land in Somerset that was banned because it was contaminated, even though the metal found was in fact from the Stone age.

Another issue is the importance of getting a move on and implementing the 60 per cent. target now rather than over 10 years. Let us copy the French and get a move on to redefine conversions for value added tax. It cannot be that difficult. Let us also allow local authorities' structural plans to restrict migrants. Finally, there is no need to be in a hurry ahead of Lord Rogers' report. Those are the key issues on which we should get a move on, and they have cross-party support.

Mr. Vernon Coaker (Gedling): We are discussing one of the most crucial issues to confront Members of Parliament. I feel sorry for the Minister in some ways when I consider what we are trying to do. We have to regenerate our cities and stop the degeneration that is taking place. We must protect our green fields and countryside. However, at the same time we must meet housing need. Looked at in that way, it is a challenging task.

Alongside that task, policies on transport, crime prevention, public service provision, the environment in general and employment must be developed. That is the nature of the task and without such associated policies the urban regeneration that we want simply will not take place. It cannot take place in a vacuum—the Select Committee Report, which is good, made that important point.

The report builds on the guidelines in the Government's paper, "Planning for the Communities of the Future", recognising that new policies are necessary. The Government recently published their response to the Select Committee report, which demonstrates that they are not static, but are responding to the arguments with fresh thinking and a willingness to move forward. The new policies, when fully in place, will represent a truly radical change in planning—I think of that famous phrase, "joined-up policies"—and will be a tribute to the Government.

However, as the Minister knows, the transition from one set of planning policies to another is the problem and it is causing many of us to receive a significant number of letters in our post bags. The Minister knows Nottinghamshire well and I thank him for coming there to talk to local authorities and Members of Parliament about our problems. Our structure plan dates back to 1996 and was agreed according to the policies of the past. Having been allocated housing figures, the districts are busy identifying land to meet them.

Gedling borough council is running a public consultation exercise to explain the process, but people in such areas as New Farm and Stockings Farm in Redhill are concerned that inappropriate development on green-field sites will take place despite the changed approach reflected in the Select Committee report and the Government's new policies. My constituents often tell me that they hear that policies have changed nationally, but that the change is not having the impact that they want locally. In fact, some of the old policies and guidelines are still being used, which makes little sense to them—or sometimes to me, either.

The Minister has responded to such concern by telling Nottinghamshire local authorities that they can reallocate some of the housing between themselves if they can reach agreement; I thank him for doing so. However, it is difficult for them because the new policies are not in place. For example, Nottingham city council wants to build new houses, reclaim derelict land, convert offices and old factories to housing, use space above shops and so forth, as I am sure councils in Manchester, Glasgow and all our other cities wish to do. Under the existing financial regime, that is difficult. There must be changes in taxation so that we can regenerate Nottingham and our other cities and, at the same time, protect green-field sites where appropriate. Furthermore, in Nottinghamshire the changes that we need in taxation and grant policies have a bearing on some of the old coalfield and industrial areas. Without the changes, 4.4 million five-bedroom houses will be built to meet the need for 4.4 million households; and houses that would meet people's needs in city areas will not be built.

The Select Committee report draws attention, at page 83—it is actually written in roman numerals and I had to look it up to ensure that I did not make an idiot of myself—paragraph 278 to the fact that the Department has always wanted to ensure > "that sufficient land is available at all times at the expense of so many of its other policies, for example on sustainable development, transport, the environment and the use of recycled land."

The Select Committee and the Government are saying that we need a phased release of land to ensure that an adequate amount of brown-field and, where appropriate, green-field land is available. Sequential planning is crucial to ensure that the brown-field sites are developed first and that developers do not take the easy option of using green-field sites—that is what they will do if we leave it to them.

The central problem, particularly in Gedling and in Nottinghamshire in general, is speed, which is of the essence. While I understand the difficulties of moving from one set of policies to another, we are in the transitional phase and the old policies seem to be grinding on. Paragraph 270 of the Select Committee report states:

> "There is no need to hurry into granting planning permission for greenfield development before Lord Rogers' Task Force has reported on the scope for using recycled land before PPG3 and PPG13 have been revised and before the implications of the Integrated Transport White Paper are taken into account."

All those matters are crucial if we are to meet our policy objectives.

[Mr. Vernon Coaker]

I know that the Minister is doing all he can and that he is aware of the problems. Our policies are changing and moving forward. As I said, we must ensure that all the joined-up policies are working together. In some ways, it does not matter who is in government—this is a difficult issue. However, we have a new Government bringing in new thinking and new policies to meet the challenge. If that challenge is met, our cities will be regenerated, our green-field sites will be protected, and there will have been a truly radical change on which the Government can look back with pride.

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire): I do not want to rehearse what has been said, but I shall add one or two points. The report is extremely valuable and the debate is timely. The question is not so much the number of new homes—we have yet to find out how far future trends will be a reflection of the past—as what, in planning terms, a bottom-up approach means in practice.

On the old predict-and-provide approach, there would be 71,000 additional commitments in Cambridgeshire, but only 25 to 30 per cent. of that number can be provided by using recycled land and windfall opportunities. If the minimum commitment is 40 per cent., we shall not, on the example of Cambridgeshire, be able to build 4.4 million new homes.

On the bottom-up approach, South Cambridgeshire district council rightly responded to the draft regional planning guidance by undertaking an environmental capacity study, which considered those matters mentioned in the report—environmental sustainability, transport infrastructure, water resources and the infrastructure of public services. It makes little sense to propose, over the 20 years from 1995, a 40 per cent. increase in the number of new homes in a district that is already the fastest growing in the country. A bottom-up approach is not only about who makes the decisions, although that is important, but about the method by which one arrives at the numbers and decides where the new houses should be built.

Even if there were nil growth in the area and no net migration, the affordable housing proposals would give rise to 13,000 extra commitments. If we constrain supply, we must find a more consistent way in which to sustain affordable housing so that local people are not driven out. What is the point of social housing if not to reinforce people's opportunities to stay in their familiar community structures?

I am unhappy at the thought that the green belt should be pushed further out to prevent the creation of dormitory communities. In my area, the green belt exists not only to protect the rural villages outside Cambridge; it protects the city itself. If the green belt is pushed out as a result of new building on its inner edge, the historic city centre will be destroyed. The Committee's recommendation that we should focus on building in urban areas does not always apply. For example, Cambridge's historic characteristics would be destroyed if we were to allow urban sprawl or excessive urban density.

We must consider other mechanisms, which will vary from place to place. In Cambridgeshire and parts of East Anglia, we may have to look constructively at the role of market towns. Where development is proposed, we shall have to consider the public transport options.

I am concerned about the decision-making mechanisms, despite the Government's talk about decentralisation and taking decisions closer to the people. The draft regional planning guidance from the Standing Conference of East Anglian Local Authorities will be put forward for public examination in February—it will be the first such public examination. However, as we shall not have the new draft PPG3—the Minister will correct me if I am wrong—what is the point of the public examination? How can we know how the new tests are to be applied?

I do not agree with everything in SCEALA's draft guidance, but it is better that such documents should be agreed by locally elected representatives than be comprehensively second-guessed by independent panels. We may know who is on the panel, but what is the rationale behind having a panel that overturns the decisions of locally elected representatives only to hand back its structure plan to the county council that did not subscribe to it in the first place?

We must apply the bottom-up approach to ensure that local democracy generates the answers and that factors other than predict and provide are taken into account. We must take on board all the integral factors to find out how many new homes can be accommodated without destroying the environment of the area for which the planning was intended to provide a solution.

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): I fail to recognise the green-crusader credentials of the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns). I remember desperately attempting, as a local authority leader during most of the time in which the Conservatives were in government, to combat out-of-town shopping developments, only to find that the then Secretary of State for the Environment was giving out planning permission like confetti, with the results that we see today. I hope that the Conservative party has changed its tune, but I fear that, in the long term, it has not.

I also failed to recognise Conservative Members' descriptions of the report as an attack on the Government. The report strongly supports much of what the Government are doing. Indeed, I was delighted at the Government's response, which endorsed and took further much of what the Committee said.

The projection of 4.4 million extra households between 1991–2016 is robust. As the hon. Member for North Wiltshire (Mr. Gray) confirmed, members of the Committee looked up to the figures—they may not be entirely accurate and there may have to be changes, but, essentially, we believe that they are robust. When the Government said that they wanted to end predict and provide, the response from some quarters was that the 4.4 million figure was no longer important and that people could do their own thing regardless of any overall effect on housing need. That response was misplaced.

Our understanding of how the figures work has changed—for example, we know that windfall sites are much more important than was thought. Nevertheless, it is important that figures on future housing need retain some shape; if they do not, we shall all live to regret it.

The 4.4 million houses should, ideally, be built on brown-field land—the Government's target is that 60 per cent. should be built on recycled land. In the early 1990s, 30 per cent. of completions on brown-field sites were outside urban areas, so we must be wary of the figures—brown field is not simply, as the Government know, an alternative to green field. We should add another dimension to the concept and specify that the brown field is urban—we should be looking at brown field sites in urban areas. As we have heard, there is a case for different targets in different parts of the country.

Mr. John Hayes (South Holland and The Deepings): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Dr. Whitehead: I am sorry, but, because of the lack of time, I will not give way.

What do we mean by urban? A local authority boundary does not determine what is urban. The real footprint of a city is often outside its local authority boundaries. Local authorities must collaborate in deciding how housing should be placed in urban areas. People cannot point to a city centre and say that that local authority should build all the houses. It needs collaboration between authorities and I regret that, in certain parts of the country, that collaboration on decision making does not seem to be present.

On social housing, our report mentions our concern that there appears to be a considerable gap between likely provision and likely need. I am disappointed by the Government's response to the issue of social housing. We shall not be able to build new social housing by relying only on the private sector and private letting, or by relying on planning gain or local authorities overwhelmingly putting money into keeping their housing stock going—important though that is. We need more social housing to be built and we need an accurate understanding of the figures in order to understand how the Housing Corporation can be funded and how local authorities can respond.

I know that the Government are currently reworking the research figures. I ask them to ensure that those figures are produced shortly so that we have an accurate fix on what we need for social housing. It needs to be dealt with urgently. If we get the figures wrong, the people involved cannot just go somewhere else in the market; they will have nowhere to live. We all have a responsibility to get that part of the equation right, together with all the other parts.

6.30 pm

Mr. Gerald Howarth (Aldershot): Even if the Select Committee regarded the Government's paper as being somewhat vague, nobody could accuse the Committee of having produced a vague report. I believe that both sides of the House feel that the Committee has produced a comprehensive and interesting report with a number of thought-provoking ideas.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter), I am extremely concerned about the implications for Hampshire of the dispute between the county's view, which proposes 42,000 houses as the requirement to meet the county's domestic need, and the belief of the unitary authorities in Portsmouth and Southampton that 56,000 houses, as proposed by the Government, are necessary to meet the needs of incomers as well as the county's domestic requirements. I understand that there is to be a meeting with the Secretary of State next week. I hope that he will be able to resolve the matter so that we can get on with it. It is clear that it would be much better for Hampshire if any proposed new planning policies could be introduced quickly. If they are not, the loss of green-field sites will continue and the resulting chaos will be regretted in the rural areas of Hampshire that are currently under threat. I hope that the Minister will take that on board.

The report talks about the concept of environmental capacity. I understand that the Government are reasonably receptive to that concept, but there is no real guidance on what that means and how it can be applied. We have to consider whether we can regard an area as being full up. The hon. Member for Castle Point (Mrs. Butler) mentioned the pressures in her area. All of us in the south-east are subject to enormous pressure. There will come a time when we have to decide whether an area is full up.

The recent experience of West Sussex is not very inspiring in that respect. The county council lost its judicial review in the High Court because the Secretary of State has discretionary powers. Although the county council had prepared an environmental capacity study, the Secretary of State said that it was flawed. How do we know that it was flawed? The county also claimed that further housing growth would seriously jeopardise its rural environment, and designated areas received much sympathy from the presiding judge. However, he held that the law was on the side of the Secretary of State and that he could do nothing to help. The county has had to appeal to the House of Lords.

The time has come when we have to decide that an area is full and that its services and environment cannot take any further expansion. I agree entirely with my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) that this is a case where the market really can apply. If prices rise to a sufficient level, people will be forced to go elsewhere. That will be of benefit to other parts of the country, that are looking for economic and social development, which will not happen if we continue to concrete over the whole of the south-east and those areas that are currently under pressure. If that were to happen, the point made by the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Stringer)—he made some interesting comments about the inner cities—would be met as well. The inner cities would become much more attractive because the developers would not be able to place their money anywhere else and the cities would become somewhere to invest and make a useful return.

That brings me to an important point that the Committee made in paragraph 246. It said that local authorities "should also adopt a helpful and imaginative approach to proposals for urban developments, particularly in respect of their density, layout and the number of car parking spaces they require."

I endorse that strongly. Rushmoor borough council in Aldershot has done a tremendous job and put that into practice already. A big site by the railway station could have been used for a supermarket, but, instead, 200 flats and houses were built there. The number of car parks allocated for those units was half that applied elsewhere. That is one practical suggestion from the Committee that is being put into practice and which should be put into practice elsewhere in the country.

Mr. David Drew (Stroud): Given the shortage of time, I shall be brief. I congratulate the Select Committee on taking on such a challenging topic and producing such a comprehensive report. Despite what the Opposition spokesman said, I believe that the Government produced a full response, which follows on from the White Paper by explaining how Government policy will take things forward.

I want to talk about housing numbers. Some of us on the Labour Benches continue to challenge the numbers, but we realise that there are problems in so doing. We would like to see the Government's proposal for a six-stage scheme as an alternative to the trend-based forecast put into play as soon as possible. It gives an alternative a chance and gives people who want to see bottom-up planning some confidence that alternatives can be put in place.

There are some people who believe that circular projections—the self-fulfilling prophesy that people will move into the houses that are being built—cannot be tracked nationally, but they can operate locally. I support the emphasis on a regional approach. We have not yet seen the competence of real regional emphasis. There will be a need to provide proper guidance and the proper level of support for that to operate effectively.

The Select Committee report makes much of the difference of opinion between those who see the problem as being one of too much housing land and those who think that there is too little. That is simply due to a dysfunction in the provision of housing. We cannot pretend that there is much in common between the market for housing and the provision of affordable and, more particularly, social housing. We must face up to those problems. They are not two sides of the same problem.

I now want to deal with phasing sequential planning and brown-field development. I urge the Government to be a little braver. Rather than saying that they are just looking at the ending of a five-year land supply, they should accept that there are considerable merits in protecting green-field sites and forcing the sequential principle forward.

There is much that we can do to look at alternative places to build in rural Britain. The "Planning and Affordable Housing" document does not get much publicity, but I am pleased to see it. It ends the threshold, which means that in small village communities, social housing can be provided as part of the overall number of houses. We no longer have to have a minimum of 20 or 25 houses before insisting on a developer taking some interest.

Economic measures are important. The proposal for a green-field levy is worth investigating and testing properly and I was interested to note that a report by the Civic Trust suggested that the concept had merit. As my hon. Friends have pointed out, hypothecation could allow urban regeneration and, at the same time, we could deal with council tax anomalies, not least of which is the second home problem. Although Members of Parliament gain from the current position, it has an appalling effect on many rural areas. We have had a good debate and the issues have been well aired. The report is timely and I commend the Government on their response to it.

Mr. Laurence Robertson (Tewkesbury): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew), who is my neighbour in Gloucestershire. I endorse his comments about predictions of the number of houses that will be required, because I also have doubts about them. Trends change, including the divorce rate, the number of people living alone, the age at which young people leave home and other factors affecting mobility, which makes the figure questionable to say the least.

To address the need for houses is to ignore the need to protect the countryside. I am as aware as anybody of the need to provide homes for people, because, before I entered the House, I carried out a large project for the homeless. They were homeless not because they could not find homes to buy, but for other social reasons. As my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) said, if we continue to build at the current rate, the countryside will fill up. When that happens, will we then try to provide homes in a more sustainable manner? If so, why not address the problem now?

The word "sustainability" is over-used and under-obeyed, but the Government should interpret it to mean providing for the needs of today's generation without prejudicing or compromising the needs of future generations. To protect future generations, we must take a radical approach now and not merely pay lip service to sustainability. Destroying the countryside—and creating increased traffic and social problems—while ignoring the needs of inner cities and town centres, is not sustainable.

The pressure to build more and more houses causes many problems in Tewkesbury, which has been forced to accommodate far more than its fair share of housing recently. That has led to the destruction of several attractive villages. Part of the reason is the difficulty that some districts have in providing brown-field sites. Pressure to build in Tewkesbury has led to land that had been declared unsuitable being reconsidered. For example, people's allotments and green-field sites have been built on, and other land, which if built on would lead to villages coalescing, is now being considered for the same fate. I endorse the comments made by the Council for the Protection of Rural England that the local environment must be taken into account when building in rural areas. Sustainability means developing brown-field sites and derelict sites and empty and old buildings, not destroying the countryside and ruining lives.

I do not wish to be party political, but I believe that the Government's policy is inadequate. The Government adopted the previous Government's projected figure, but they did not need to do so. The Government have set up regional agencies without giving them the full responsibility to protect the environment and have also set a worryingly low target for building on brown-field sites. Regardless of party politics, the planning of the building of new houses needs a radical rethink if it is to be sustainable.

The Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning (Mr. Richard Caborn): I congratulate members of the Select Committee on their useful and timely report. I am delighted that the Government are able to agree with many of the Committee's conclusions; that is reflected in our response to the report. I also congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), the Chairman of the Committee. As the former Chairman of the Trade and Industry Committee, I know how difficult it can be to obtain unanimity—I say that from experience and with some bruises—but only unanimous reports carry real weight. This report is unanimous, and must be taken seriously.

The underlying message from the Committee is clear: we must face the fact that people must have an opportunity to live in decent homes. Not before time, we have a growing cross-party consensus on how to plan future house building in a sustainable way that drives the urban renaissance agenda. A clear consensus on that has emerged tonight.

It is not a matter of green-field versus brown-field sites, urban versus rural or country versus town. The Government's response makes it clear that we must rise above NIMBYism, although some hon. Members have tried to draw the drawbridge up tonight to protect their villages. The contribution by the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) for the official Opposition did not show much consensus, and there were a couple of other exceptions, but I hope that we can take the political opportunity to stop urban decay and the urban flight. If we can do so, we can solve many of the problems that have been highlighted tonight.

Mr. Flight: The rural flight.

Mr. Caborn: No, I mean the urban flight to rural areas. The hon. Gentleman should think about the situation.

The Government accept the key recommendation by the Select Committee, that we should publish an urban White Paper. We share the view that, by revitalising and regenerating our towns and cities, and creating an urban renaissance, we will take the pressure off the countryside and bridge the housing gap between the haves and the have-nots.

The household projection figures have been one of the main topics of discussion tonight. The Committee last looked at the issue in 1995-96, when it broadly accepted the methodology, and I welcome the fact that the confidence in it has been reaffirmed. I hope that we can put to bed for good the fruitless arguments about the figures. The Government have tried to be as helpful as possible about the next set of projections. The Committee recommended that "the Government publish with the next national household projections an analysis which shows the effect of small changes in the assumptions underlying the projections."

In response, the Government state:

"The Department notes the recommendation and will publish suitable sensitivity analyses alongside the next set of household projections."

It is in everybody's interest to ensure that the figures are understood, and the analysis accepted.

I welcome the Committee's support for our national land recycling target of 60 per cent. I do not know where some hon. Members have been for the past 18 years, but if we hit 60 per cent., it will be 10 per cent. better than the Conservatives did in their 18 years. The Opposition Front-Bench spokesman has attacked us, although we have been in government for 18 months, but the analysis of brown-field utilisation that we shall publish in a few days' time will prove acceptable.

We accept that there is more to be done. We intend that the regions should establish their own targets through regional planning guidance. I expect them to engage in that process with some urgency. I agree with much of what has been said. That problem will be resolved not in Whitehall, but in the regions and local towns.

The Government are trying to introduce innovatory ideas. The millennium village is on a contaminated site at Greenwich, and my hon. Friend the Minister for London and Construction tells me that that site received an award last night for the decontamination work done there. We are looking into the problems left at Allerton Bywater by the rundown of the mining industry. We are trying to increase the size of that village to give it some economy of scale. We want to resolve the problem without people having to move out. We are trying, in innovative ways, to bring brown fields back into use and to introduce better planning. We will genuinely try to hit the 60 per cent. target.

I welcome the Committee's support for our approach to the provision of regional housing. The regional planning conferences have an essential role to play. We intend to set out a timetable for production of regional planning guidance, and we expect the regions to stick to it and to produce responsible and realistic plans for accommodating housing requirements in their areas. There must be certainty. Everyone says that certainty is needed in the planning regime. Central to that certainty will be having everyone in the planning system adhering to the timetables that we shall evolve after consultation with the parties involved.

We are keen to maintain momentum towards decentralisation of power. As the Committee's report stresses, power comes with responsibility. We genuinely want to devolve powers to the regions so that we can have a bottom-up process. The same is true of local plans. We must respond to the challenges to the Government and to society.

Let me turn to the way forward. Our policy statement last February made it clear that our first choice for new development is that it should be on previously developed land, preferably in urban areas. That sequential approach is long overdue, and we want authorities to explore options fully before they propose urban extensions or the release of other green-field sites. That will be covered more extensively by the revised PPG3.

The Select Committee rightly posed more detailed questions about how we will deliver. Let me fill in some of the gaps. As our response to the Committee makes clear, we have embarked already on an extensive programme of policy initiatives, as set out in "Planning for the Communities of the Future" and "Modernising Planning".

The urban task force, under the guidance of Lord Rogers, is examining the difficulties of redeveloping our urban areas, which have been graphically described, particularly from my side of the House. The task force contains a broad range of expertise drawn from all the professions involved in the debate, from developers to environmentalists. We look forward to receiving Lord Rogers's report in the first half of next year, but he has made it clear this week that he will produce an interim report at the turn of the year.

Work on compiling the national land use database—the equivalent of a Domesday register for the 21st century—is already well under way. The initial results are due next

[Mr. Caborn]

March. It is gathering on-line data about every previously developed site in the country, and I assure the House that that is no mean feat. We will soon know how many previously developed sites there are, and we shall be able to keep that information up to date. Rather than speculate about the ability to reuse brown-field land, we shall shortly have factual information to inform our land recycling policy.

We have a full programme of revision for planning policy guidance. Our response to the Select Committee refers a number of times to the updating of the guidance note on housing, known as PPG3. We are grateful for the Committee's proposals on that document, and we shall factor them into our considerations. The hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) will be the first to have a public examination. I intend to produce PPG3 before that, hopefully by the turn of the year. I have no doubt that the hon. Gentleman will appear at the public examination, and I will ensure that he has the revised PPG3 in his hands.

We are working on other planning guidance, such as the notes on transport, spatial planning and regional planning. We are also working on issues such as compulsory purchase and the use of economic instruments. We need a comprehensive approach, so that we can answer serious structural weaknesses in this part of society.

It has been made clear this evening that we need an holistic approach to urban housing policy. The problems will not be solved through the planning process alone. I am delighted that my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister was able to announce on Tuesday that the Government have accepted the Select Committee's recommendation to publish an urban White Paper. We expect to do so next year.

It is 20 years since there was an urban White Paper. My right hon. Friend remembers it well, because he was parliamentary private secretary to the then Secretary of State, Peter Shore—now Lord Shore—and he was deeply involved in that paper. Regrettably, the Conservative Governments of the 1980s and 1990s failed to advance many of the ideas that flowed from the White Paper.

Debates on Select Committee reports must be kept above party politics, but we have heard a little hypocrisy in the debate. Lord Tebbit used to say, "Get on your bike, come to the south-east and go to where the jobs are." People came, but now the Conservatives complain because we have to house them. Lord Tebbit has not spoken tonight, but he spoke volumes years ago, and we are grappling with the problems he left us. The overheating of the south-east arises from the type of economic policies pursued by previous Administrations.

The Labour Government have a new vision for a new set of urban issues. We seek thriving communities that provide jobs and provide homes that are attractive and pleasant to live in. We are determined to drive an urban renaissance. We are determined to turn our cities back into places where people want to work, live and play. The urban White Paper will link key strands of Government vision for an urban renaissance. It will embrace our programmes for education, employment, health, housing, the problem of social exclusion and transport. It will be the most comprehensive and far-sighted programme of urban renewal since our last White Paper in the 1970s.

It has always been Labour Governments who have addressed the real problems of land use planning. It is 50 years since a Labour Government put the Town and Country Planning Act 1947 on to the statute book. It was a Labour Government who introduced the national parks. It was a Labour Government who introduced the green belt. All that the previous Administration did was to take concrete mixers to build out-of-town shopping centres, and allow more development on green belt and green-field sites than any other Administration ever allowed.

I welcome the report.

6.57 pm

Mr. Bennett: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Traditionally, at the end of debates such as this, the Chairman of the Select Committee responds to fill up a bit of time. However, there is virtually no time left over, so I will just thank the Minister for his responses, both in writing and at the Dispatch Box.

I thank, too, all those who participated in the debate, particularly those hon. Members who did not serve on the Committee. Too often, debates on Select Committee reports involve the members of the Committee talking about their own report. It was refreshing to hear that so many other hon. Members had taken the trouble to read the report and to participate. I regret that there was not enough time to allow everyone to speak who wanted to.

European Structural Funds

[Relevant documents: Seventh report from the Trade and Industry Committee, Session 1997–98, on Reform of European Structural Funds (HC 697), and the Government's response thereto of 11 September.]

6.59 pm

Mr. Roger Berry (Kingswood): It is a pleasure to open this debate on the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report on the reform of European structural funds. I do so only because my hon. Friend the Member for Ochil (Mr. O'Neill), who chairs the Committee, is unable to be present this evening. He asked me to convey his apologies to the House.

First, I wish to place on record the Committee's thanks to the Clerk and his colleagues, Professor Iain Begg of South Bank university, who has provided us with expert assistance and lots of statistics, and all those who gave written or oral evidence. I am mindful of Madam Speaker's earlier request for brevity, and I am aware that many hon. Members wish to speak in this debate, so I shall confine my remarks to a few key issues in both the report and the Government's response.

It is important to see the current renegotiation of the structural funds in context. The funds are the principal instrument of EU regional policy whereby it seeks to reduce regional inequalities, or, as we tend now to say, to promote economic and social cohesion, which seems to me to be essentially the same thing. The current negotiations on the structural funds, the cohesion fund and, indeed, the Community initiatives, are part of the overhaul of EU finances that was initiated by the publication in July last year of Agenda 2000.

The most significant feature of the current discussions about the reform of the structural funds is that they are taking place in much more difficult circumstances than the negotiations on previous reforms. For example, the EU is facing a difficult economic environment, not least characterised by high levels of unemployment. It is embarking on enlargement to the east, with potential EU members being significantly less well off than current members, so more likely to need structural fund assistance.

There is a growing reluctance by net contributing states to continue contributions on the same scale, so there will be only modest increases in resources to promote economic and social cohesion—roughly rising in line with EU GDP. Yet, at the same time, there is a growing awareness of the availability of European funding, so there is increased demand. In the past, structural funds have increased substantially, both in scope and in scale, as the EU has evolved. That will no longer be the case. Therefore, the current re-evaluation of structural fund policy is no easy task, as I am sure the Minister will advise the House.

The Commission's most important proposals are of concern to all of us. The aims are to reduce the number of objectives from seven to three; to reduce Community initiatives from 14 to three; to concentrate funds by greater geographical targeting; in relation to objective 1, to apply the current criterion based on per capita GDP of below 75 per cent. of the European average, but without the existing flexibility; for regions facing major restructuring needs, to set a new objective 2, amalgamating current objectives 2 and 5b and incorporating a number of Community initiatives with particular account being taken of the unemployment rate as the key criterion; and finally, to ensure that the budget for structural and cohesion policies is maintained at the planned 1999 level of 0.46 per cent. of EU GNP.

Allowing for funds committed for enlargement, this will mean an increased spending in real terms of from about 28 billion euros per annum in the current planning period to about 30 billion in the next. There is an increase in real terms roughly in line with GDP, but not a substantial one. It is not like past increases, when we saw the renegotiation of European structural funds. The circumstances are therefore difficult.

Before we consider the Commission's proposals in more detail, we need to address a basic question, which the Committee considered: what is the value of the process whereby member states contribute to a common pool and then get either less or more from that pool, with strings attached by Brussels? That question needs to be asked, and the Committee sought to answer it. Obviously, it is a form of redistribution in the right direction—from rich to poor—and is to be welcomed warmly. It is an important function of the exercise. It is a practical expression of economic and social cohesion at European level. However, the greater the subsidiarity, the more the involvement of European mechanisms must be justified.

The Committee considered that issue in our report, and identified a number of reasons why European funding of this kind has conferred many benefits. As we discovered from travelling around the country listening to people involved in partnerships using European funding, it has led to the growth of many extremely productive partnerships at local level, such as between local authorities and the private and voluntary sectors, the benefits of which should not be underestimated.

Nevertheless, the Committee was impressed by the general indifference of those we met who seek and spend funds as to the source of funding. Whether we were in Merseyside, Stockport or Chorley, the cause of concern was not so much where the money came from as that there should be money available. We made that modest observation in our report.

The Government's response was perfectly fair, reminding us that they believe, rightly, that allocations should be redistributive, and that member states with lower per capita GNP should get more than those with higher per capita GNP. I wholly support that. Redistribution is an important political objective. But with respect, the response slightly side-stepped our point—that those involved in coming up with programmes, projects and schemes that confer enormous economic and social benefits on their communities, and those who have developed partnerships between the local authority and the private and voluntary sectors, often feel that what matters is not the source but the availability of funding. It would have been inaccurate of the Committee not to note that point.

Concentration is a key issue, and is identified at a number of levels. I have already said that the proposal is to concentrate on three rather than seven objectives, and on three rather than 14 Community initiatives. There is to be concentration on areas of priority assistance. There is to be geographical concentration, so that the eligible population in new objective 1 and new objective 2 areas should be reduced from 51 per cent. of the EU population to between 35 and 40 per cent. There is also a proposal for greater financial concentration, which effectively means giving greater priority to objective 1 regions.

The Committee's main concern, which I share, is the proposed increased geographical concentration. There is no obvious reason why increased geographical concentration is a good thing. If relative disadvantage or inequality happens to be widely spread in a spacial sense, there is a good reason to spread the resources to deal with it; so we on the Committee had some difficulty in understanding the emphasis on geographical concentration. Therefore, while we welcome more effective targeting of funds, we share the Government's concern that the current proposals would remove about 10 per cent. of EU citizens—37 million or 38 million people—from structural fund eligibility. We could find no justification for that.

The cohesion fund has taken on a life of its own. It will not be doing what it was intended to do. It was introduced following the Maastricht treaty to help the less prosperous member states with programmes designed to assist them to meet the convergence criteria for entry into economic and monetary union. Now, despite the fact that three of the four countries concerned—Ireland, Portugal and Spain—are to be in the first wave of EMU, having met the convergence criteria, it is proposed that the cohesion fund should continue for those countries for which it was originally set up. That is plainly absurd—probably the strongest expression that I am allowed to use in this Chamber.

The Committee shares the Government's view and that of a number of other member states that continuation of substantial funding from the cohesion fund for those joining the single currency simply cannot be reconciled with the original objectives of the fund. I look forward to the Minister advising the House what the Government, the House or anyone else can do about that extraordinary state of affairs.

As hon. Members will be aware, the Commission proposes that objective 1 will continue to assist regions where per capita GDP for the last three years for which figures are available is less than 75 per cent. of the EU average. Current objective 6 regions—those that are sparsely populated—will also be covered. It is proposed that objective 1 regions will continue to receive roughly two thirds of the funds.

The difference is that it is now suggested that no more than 20 per cent. of the EU population should be covered by objective 1, compared with about 25 per cent. at present, and that the previous flexibility around the 75 per cent. threshold should be eliminated. At the time of writing the report, the Committee understood that that was likely to mean that Merseyside would retain objective 1 status, that South Yorkshire would gain it, and that the highlands and islands and Northern Ireland would lose it, although we anticipated that the highlands and islands would regain it under the sparsity criteria hitherto used for objective 6, and that Northern Ireland would be regarded as a special case.

To eliminate the existing flexibility would in our view cause the United Kingdom particular difficulties. We are the fifth poorest member of the European Union in terms of per capita GDP, but we could lose because we do not have the regional inequalities that exist, for example, in Italy or Germany. This is not special pleading: it is an important matter of principle. The Committee's concern was that the Commission's proposals could penalise poorer countries that had been relatively successful in reducing regional inequalities. For poorer countries to be penalised for achieving greater economic and social cohesion simply does not make sense; nor does the rigid application of the 75 per cent. threshold.

There is no correct statistical methodology for defining the boundaries of EU regions, drawing a line at those with per capita GDP of 75 per cent. of the average, and saying that those below lag behind and those above do not. This is not a statistical exercise; it is a matter of judgment.

I am not talking about the margins of error in a statistical sense, although they exist. The point is that it is simply not possible to replace judgment with an arbitrary statistical device. Therefore, the Committee strongly supports the Government's view that flexibility around the 75 per cent. threshold should continue. In our view, the Government must continue strenuously to question the strange attachment that the European Commission seems to have here, as elsewhere, to rigid and arbitrary criteria. There must be flexibility—a grey zone, as we have referred to it—to give potential but not absolute eligibility to a small number of regions that are on the margin, so that judgment can be exercised rationally.

The Office of National Statistics data were published today. The separation of Cornwall from Devon as a level 2 area is warmly to be welcomed. My hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Ms Atherton) is sitting here, so I have to refer to Cornwall. I was going to refer to the NUTS—nomenclature of territorial units for statistics—level 2 area, but perhaps sticking to level 2 is more appropriate. My hon. Friend the Minister will bring the House up to date, I know, but it looks as if Cornwall will obtain objective 1 status, as will the new west Wales and the valleys level 2 area. That is to be welcomed.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): Although my constituency is not in the objective 1 designated area, it is fair to say that there is an enormous welcome throughout Wales for the prospect that a substantial chunk of Wales will for the first time get objective 1 status. However, there is a specific problem, which I think is unique to Wales.

After devolution, working within the Barnett formula, any additional matching funds for the objective 1 bit of Wales could have to be provided by the new Welsh Assembly. It will have to borrow from Peter—the areas outside the objective 1 area—to pay Paul, unless the Treasury agrees to provide additional funds as the matching funds for the new objective 1 area. Did that matter come within the Select Committee's purview?

Mr. Berry: We did not consider that matter. The Minister may wish to comment on it. If I hurry up and finish my comments, other hon. Members will be able to make similar points, perhaps at more length.

Whatever happiness there is about the ONS data published today and what we believe to be their implications for objective 1 status, I hope, and the Committee hopes, that the Government still feel strongly about flexibility around the 75 per cent. threshold. It is an important matter of principle.

For new objective 2, the emphasis on unemployment as a principal measure of need is not unreasonable. Unemployment is perhaps the EU's greatest problem, so we welcome the emphasis on it. However, it makes no sense to rely exclusively on recent local unemployment rates. It is well known that member states do not exhibit identical economic cycles. That has a number of implications. One is that it is absurd to rely on a three-year snapshot of unemployment to determine fund distribution. The Select Committee is therefore of the view that objective 2 funding should be allocated broadly on the basis of per capita GDP, and that member states should have great freedom to identify the areas to be assisted.

Mr. Paddy Tipping (Sherwood): Coalfield areas have gained substantially from European funding—£200 million a year. Does my hon. Friend agree that it would be strange if the South Yorkshire coalfield got objective 1 status while north Nottinghamshire, which has the same conditions but just misses objective 1 perhaps on unemployment and GDP data, were excluded? Is that not an example of where flexibility ought to be applied?

Mr. Berry: My hon. Friend makes an important point. I shall come to the issue of boundaries.

One issue that local authorities, among others, raised with the Committee was the setting of boundaries for the new objective 2 areas. It is clearly important that areas most in need should receive the funding. The Minister told the Committee that the Government would be looking for an outcome on objective 2 where there would be "the flexibility to delve down into areas of real need", even if those areas were concealed in areas of relative prosperity.

In their response to the report, the Government warned that there were many hurdles to overcome, but said that they were committed to the principle of flexibility. Are the Government willing to continue to seek to have objective 2 areas defined below NUTS level 3—at least to ward level 5, if not below? I think that that takes on the point that my hon. Friend has just made.

There has been a broad welcome in principle for the Commission's proposal to reduce the number of community initiatives from the current 14 to three. It has been argued that many activities pursued under community initiatives could as easily be carried out under objective programmes. However, that can be done only in areas enjoying objective status. In Lancashire, the Committee was briefed on community initiative projects of real worth outside objective areas—the Royal Ordnance site at Chorley and a former cotton mill at Stockport spring to mind.

Moreover, the local authority associations were cautious about reducing the number of community initiatives. The Local Government Association sought the continuation of the urban initiative, which provides concentrated assistance to a few selected urban areas. The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities supports the campaign for a fourth initiative, Restruct, which would bring together the current industrial change initiatives.

The Committee's view is that serious consideration should be given to the continuation in some form of the urban initiative and to the introduction of the proposed Restruct initiative. In light of the Government's response to the Committee's recommendations, may I press the Minister to tell the House how far the Government will back the Restruct initiative and seek transitional funding for urban projects just begun, which the Committee feels is important?

The Government's response agrees with almost all the Committee's conclusions and recommendations, which means that only limited disagreement is to be expected this evening. However, I have raised several issues that require further clarification from the Minister. Because of the time available, the list has not been exhaustive, but I am sure that other hon. Members will now add many more items to that list.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Alan Haselhurst): Order. A great many hon. Members are trying to catch my eye and it is already evident that, unless some self-restraint is exercised, many people will be disappointed.

7.21 pm

Mr. Colin Breed (South-East Cornwall): The broad principles underlying the reforms are to be welcomed. They are, to some extent, overdue. The full implications of enlargement of the European Union, many of which have yet to be recognised, will certainly have concentrated minds, since to do nothing to the current rules relating to structural funding would certainly hugely increase budget contributions. In addition, inequities between certain member states and regions would be created, and tensions within the Union might be aggravated.

The provision of structural funds has clearly been of great importance to all member states, not least the United Kingdom. The funds provide a tangible benefit, and enable people to see how Europe is of assistance to them and how it works constructively for them. That aspect of our membership has not been given the profile it deserves.

The reforms have had to address two sharply conflicting aims: on the one hand, to achieve greater fiscal restraint over a budget and individual contributions that are ever increasing; and, on the other hand, to continue to assist existing poorer regions and cope with future post-enlargement demands from new regions.

Many existing members want their overall contribution to fall in real terms and there have been calls for greater abatements and refunds. However, demands are increasing as awareness of what can be funded increases. Therefore, to reduce the number of initiatives, restrict the range of community initiatives and undertake an exercise in concentration to target assistance in a more focused manner, with the additional benefit of simplifying the system generally, are welcome measures which we should support.

The strict application of the criteria for objective 1, based on per capita gross domestic product of 75 per cent. of the EU average, is understandable from the EU's point of view. As the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) said, it makes for clear-cut, black-and-white decision making. However, it could lead to conflict over the boundaries used for the purposes of statistical data to support new applications. Common sense must prevail, and some flexibility should be retained.

It appears that the total share of structural funds received by the UK would actually fall, and many regions currently enjoying objectives 2 and 5b status only might in future receive only transitional funds under the new objective 2 status. That might have a major effect on some of the regions currently obtaining support, forcing them to draw up new economic plans.

The proposed timetables are, on the face of it, extremely tight, but they must be adhered to if the reforms are to be well embedded prior to the first wave of any enlargement. There will obviously be a danger, emphasised in the report, of putting off difficult decisions—indeed, it appears that some EU members put off a rather difficult decision today. However, that must not be allowed to happen, as procrastination would clearly invite greater difficulties in future. It might also delay opportunities for new members to join: it must be remembered that the peoples of those aspirant member states might lose some of their enthusiasm for enduring the very strictures imposed on them to enable their countries to meet the accession criteria. The EU must maintain the momentum of reform to ensure that enlargement can and does come about.

The Committee's recommendation to concentrate funding on the poorest 20 per cent. of regions is based on a desire to reduce the gap between richer and poorer nations, but it would also reduce the number of objective 1 regions and so be difficult to implement, especially as some of those regions will have only just received that status—I am not necessarily referring to Cornwall in that context. However, the suggestion that each member state should undertake to reduce the population covered as a means of sharing the burden of geographical concentration has some merit. It would be a fairer system that allowed each state to decide how to implement the policy within its own boundaries.

I should like to make a few remarks as a Member of Parliament from Cornwall. As the Minister knows, the whole of Cornwall was pleased—nay, delighted—when the county became a NUTS 2 region in its own right, with the result that its case for objective 1 status was much enhanced. Cornwall is clearly on a par with places such as Greece and Spain in terms of GDP per head, and I, along with nearly half a million other people, am looking forward hopefully to the confirmation of objective 1 status for Cornwall in the not-too-distant future.

The county of Cornwall has benefited from objective 5b status, the experience of which is pertinent to my final point: that the process of seeking funding is far too complex. In addition, it is too unco-ordinated with other programmes, and too vulnerable to delays in decision making. All that often results in carefully assembled packages falling apart at the wrong moment. The bureaucracy and over-elaborate administrative procedures must be examined and overhauled so that, when dealing with the private sector, which is vital in respect of matched funding, we can keep pace with its timetables.

Such reform will not result in any lessening of the quality of accountability, or of ensuring that proper control is maintained. It is unacceptable to allow impediments to such critical funding packages, especially those relating to objective 1 areas, to persist. Some subsidiarity must be applied to that area of EU operations.

Mr. David Heath (Somerton and Frome): I am glad that my hon. Friend has touched on subsidiarity. Having read the Committee report and the Government's overall response, does he agree that the weakest part of that response relates to recommendation 13, which deals with subsidiarity? Does it not bode rather ill for the forthcoming informal European Council on subsidiarity if, at that conference, the Government are not going to promote the case for subsidiarity beyond national level?

Mr. Breed: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. There has been much talk about subsidiarity, but little action to enable it to take place. That is perhaps the most frustrating aspect of the over-bureaucratic administration of funding packages.

The reforms will modernise the structural funds in advance of enlargement, and reduce the total funds available, which should ensure some restraint on funding. However, I suspect that, as with other funds, demand will always exceed the available resources.

I hope that there will be a fervent desire to tackle the bureaucracy and over-elaborate administration. If the red tape were cleared away, that would do much to ensure that economic development was quickly achieved in the regions of the EU, in all the objective statuses, and we know that time is critical to many parts of the UK and other EU countries.

7.30 pm

Mr. Bill O'Brien (Normanton): It is pleasing to be able to take part in this debate. The contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry), who fully explained the national and European dimensions, means that my speech will be shorter because I can concentrate on local issues and plead with the Minister to take note of the problems suffered by coalfield areas.

Research shows that European funding is the largest source of finance for economic regeneration in many areas of the United Kingdom. For the five years from 1994 to 1999, the assessed total that we could obtain is about £3.2 billion for objective 2 funding to assist rundown industrial areas. Those include my constituency and the Wakefield area, where mining, textile and engineering jobs have been lost in their thousands. They were well-paid jobs which contributed substantially to the economy of the Wakefield area and the surrounding towns and cities.

European Union funding could contribute to the securing of 340,000 jobs nationally, which would help to create jobs for redundant mineworkers and provide job opportunities for our young people. The UK is the fifth-largest contributor to the EU budget, so we make a substantial contribution for the return that we obtain.

My fear is that the redrawing of the EU map for objective 1 and objective 2 areas which determines the availability of European grants will mean that my constituency loses out. I am concerned that areas such as West Yorkshire, and Wakefield in particular, will not qualify for either objective status if the negotiations currently taking place do not recognise their economic problems. Wakefield, which has lost its traditional industries, including coal, engineering and textiles, would suffer substantially.

I want to impress on the Minister and the European Commissioners the fact that the present criteria for awarding objective 2 status are narrow and sometimes inaccurate. They work against regions such as Yorkshire and the Humber. It would be cruel and dishonest to change the formula without taking into consideration the current economic conditions of regions such as mine.

The gross domestic product per head in former mining, textile and engineering areas is less than the EU average. The nature of jobs has changed: well-paid permanent jobs have been replaced by low-paid part-time jobs; and skilled jobs have been replaced by non-skilled work in retailing and catering. My area is becoming a supermarket jungle—out-of-town shopping is killing off town and city centres.

Training for skilled employment is a mere token in our area. High-tech jobs are difficult to find; high-tech industries are not attracted to the area, mainly because of the dereliction and closure of our traditional industries. Our damaged environment acts as a deterrent and a disincentive to investment. Local authorities that represent those rundown areas are working hard to combat that dereliction, but they have limited resources. That is a significant reason why areas that now qualify for objective 2 status should continue to do so.

The legacy of over-dependency on a few traditional industries is enduring, and local authorities are working hard to encourage industries and businesses to locate in their areas, but the going is hard and we need the support of EU structural funds. We also need the European Commission to take note of the problems in those areas. I ask that, in any redrawing of the structural maps, note be taken of all the economic conditions.

My constituents ask for fairness, not favours. I support the Government negotiators in pressing the European Commission to consider all economic and social aspects in our regions. In my lobbying for objective 2 status for the Wakefield area, I point out that it has a high proportion of derelict land, high levels of economic inactivity, a high level of dependency on income support, high levels of ill health, low life expectancy and declining male employment. On behalf of my constituents, I therefore plead with the House to be unanimous and impress on the European Commissioners the need to maintain objective 2 status in our area.

Miss Anne McIntosh (Vale of York): I welcome the report and I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate. I congratulate the Minister on her generous and open-door policy and thank her for her generous replies to correspondence and my requests for meetings with her.

I join other hon. Members who have made special pleadings for their areas. As the Minister knows, there is concern in North Yorkshire that has not yet been allayed, particularly about the fact that two initiatives will be discontinued. The first is the Konver programme, which has had a positive impact on areas in my constituency. I am not convinced that those areas will continue to benefit under the new arrangements for objective 2, which is worrying.

I also make a plea on behalf of the farming community, which receives generous benefits from the 5b proposals. I do not need to remind the House of the present plight of farmers. Never before in my lifetime have I witnessed all sectors of the farming industry in such a crisis. Farmers in lowland areas such as the Vale of York, who would normally admit privately to being reasonably well off, have desperately low incomes this year. I make a special plea that those areas covered by the 5b provision not be forgotten.

I am pleased that the Select Committee's report refers to some programmes specifically. However, I am concerned that, in the tussle for funds between rural and urban areas—such as those represented by hon. Members who have spoken this evening—places such as the Vale of York will lose out because the initiatives and the population number criterion are being reduced. I issue a plea on behalf of the rural community that it should continue to benefit from European funding.

Under the new proposals, the existing arrangements will obviously cease from 2000. Tourism, particularly in North Yorkshire, has suffered this year as a result of the strength of the pound and competition from package holidays to attractive parts of Europe and other world destinations. That crisis in the tourism industry must be recognised. Under the current proposals, most service sectors do not qualify for funding because the emphasis is very much on the decline in the manufacturing industry. I do not know whether the Government—even during the United Kingdom's EU presidency, when a vigorous campaign was fought over the transitional arrangements—have made a special case for funding tourism and other service sectors, including port-related activities. I hope that the hon. Lady will put my mind at rest this evening by assuring the House that tourism will benefit from the revised proposals.

I was struck by one important point in the Committee's conclusions: whether the Government have faced honestly the real impact of the proposals on the whole of the United Kingdom. I refer to new objective 2. Several million people currently qualify for funding under the former objective 5b and Konver provisions, and it is regrettable that there will be a dramatic fall in the number who will benefit under the new arrangements. The United Kingdom receives 9 per cent. of the total EU structural funds, but the amount will fall dramatically from 2000. There is no guarantee that people will continue to benefit to the same extent under the transitional arrangements. Will the hon. Lady confirm that the request for an extension of relevant objectives 1 and 2 to six or seven years will be agreed by the other member states?

The new arrangements will, rightly or wrongly, give more say to the national administration and the local Government offices for the regions on how the funds will be administered. We seek an assurance this evening that there will be a certain continuity in the allocation of moneys, which should not be jeopardised in the future.

I met the Minister in about May this year and I was struck by her reference to the new concept of pockets of rural deprivation. However, the Minister's replies in correspondence of 18 June were rather open-ended. She said, for instance, that the negotiations were still at an early stage. However, I understand that the Prime Minister has said that the new arrangements must be agreed by March next year. That is a very ambitious timetable. Will the Minister elucidate on the concept of pockets of rural deprivation and the other outstanding matters on which we touched earlier?

Mr. Gerry Steinberg (City of Durham): I shall be very parochial in my speech tonight—and I make no apologies for that. As chairman of the northern group of Labour Members of Parliament, I speak on behalf of the north-east as well as my constituency. I stress the immense value of structural funds to that region. Those funds have been worth more than £1,000 million to the north-east since 1989 and have created tens of thousands of jobs. At more than £100 million per annum, they are worth more than the proposed budget of the regional development agency. The funds have assisted areas suffering major economic and social hardship and the disiocation of the local work force, and rural areas suffering from a combination of sparse population and a continued dependence on agriculture.

The funds have secured enormous achievements for the north-east. Structural funds have allowed the region to cope with massive structural change and have been a huge boost to the north-east's economic, social and environmental regeneration. They have encouraged considerable private investment. The funds have raised regional competitiveness and have been used effectively and imaginatively. The north-east has been cited by the Commission as one of the best performers in applying and directing resources.

All that is under threat, as the European Commission is recommending the reform of structural funds and a reduction by up to a third in the population level that they cover. Special support to the coalfields and to specific sectors, such as textiles, steel and shipbuilding, will be scrapped. I stress that the north-east needs continued assistance. The task of restructuring the economy is not yet complete and the north-east continues to face severe social and economic problems of a deep-rooted structural nature.

First, per capita gross domestic product in the north-east is the lowest of any region in the country. Secondly, the north-east has the highest unemployment claimant count of any English region. More than one in three unemployed people have been unemployed for more than 12 months. Real unemployment—that is, joblessness—is more than twice as high as the claimant count. Thirdly, average weekly wages in the north-east are the lowest of any English region. The north-east has the lowest disposable household income in the whole of the United Kingdom. Some 37 per cent. of those in work earn less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold—that is the highest rate in the United Kingdom.

Fourthly, business start-up and survival rates are among the lowest in the United Kingdom. Economic activity rates for both men and women are the lowest in England and the second lowest in the United Kingdom. Unfortunately, recent large-scale job losses have exacerbated the problem and highlighted the fragility of the region's economy. I assure the House that that is not a price worth paying.

Although structural funds have cushioned the region from further decline, its relative competitiveness has slipped as other regions have improved their economic performance. A reduction in structural funds would hinder the process of restructuring. It would constitute a major setback in rebuilding confidence and the diversity and strength of the region's economy. Such a reduction would cause a rapid decline in competitiveness and widen the gap between the region and other parts of the United Kingdom and Europe.

The north-east needs the maximum level of financial assistance.Parts of the region—notably the former coalfield and rural areas—have a gross domestic product of less than 75 per cent. of the EU average, which is the selection criterion for objective 1 funding. Northumberland and Durham have not been included as a level 2 region in the agreement reached between the Office for National Statistics and Eurostat. The designation of Northumberland and Durham as a level 2 region would have given us a good chance of obtaining objective 1 status, which would bring up to £150 million in European grants to the area.

The decisions on the revision of level 2 area status are supposedly based purely on statistical arguments rather than political decisions. However, on close examination, that does not appear to be the case. Eurostat has accepted some changes to the level 2 lists. They are in Cornwall, west Wales, London and Scotland.

Before anyone gets up in arms, let me make it clear that it is absolutely not my intention to argue that those areas should not have redesignation—far from it. I agree with the Council of Ministers and the European Commission that decisions should be taken as close to the people as possible. My argument is that there appears to be a double standard in that some areas are accepted while others are rejected.

Let me take Cornwall as an example. If there is supposed to be a statistical adherence to size basis, why should Cornwall, with a population of just 400,000, become a level 2 area?

Ms Candy Atherton (Falmouth and Camborne): The figure is 480,000. Let us get this absolutely clear. Let us be honest and say that Cornwall is a cultural region in its own right.

Mr. Steinberg: I was coming to that. As I said at the beginning of my speech, I am not arguing against Cornwall's redesignation. I am simply making a comparison, and I am entitled to do that. If one area gets level 2 status and another does not, there must be a reason. I want to find out what that reason is. I do not begrudge Cornwall getting redesignation. I am delighted, so my hon. Friend should not get herself in a twist.

Cornwall has been allowed to split off from Devon because of a "recognition of the very different economic conditions of the counties and Cornwall's sparsity of population, geographic peripherality and distinct cultural and historical factors reflecting a Celtic background."

That was a quote from Eurostat.

As Cornwall is a county, on the general rationale it should be a level 3 area and, as such, be eligible for objective 2 rather than objective 1. The specific points allowed by Eurostat in accepting the case for level 2 designation include the "different economic conditions" between Devon and Cornwall, which in gross domestic product terms is 15 per cent. The discrepancy in GDP terms between Northumberland and Tyne and Wear is also 15 per cent. Therefore, economic conditions are just as different between Northumberland and Tyne and Wear as they are between Devon and Cornwall.

It is also worth pointing out that Cornwall is part of the south-west region, which has an overall GDP of 95 per cent. of the EU average while the northern region has only 85 per cent. of the EU average. We are a poor part of a poor region, whereas Cornwall is a poor part of a much richer region.

Cornwall's population sparsity is specifically referred to as part of the rationale for accepting level 2 review. However, in Northumberland and Durham, sparsity is worse, at 123 people per sq km compared with 136 people per sq km in Cornwall. Emphasis is placed on Cornwall's geographical peripherality. Penzance, at the extreme western tip of Cornwall is 282 miles from London while Berwick in the north of Northumberland is further away at 357 miles from London.

I now turn to the "distinct cultural and historic factors reflecting Celtic background".

How can that possibly be a statistical argument? On that basis, Northumberland should have objective 1 status because we were not conquered by the Romans.

In view of that, what exactly is the rationale for accepting Cornwall for review, but not Northumberland and Durham? I ask that question quite seriously. If anything, the statistical case for Cornwall is rather less robust than that for Northumberland and Durham, reinforcing our view that the decision was political, not statistical.

The north-east is one of the most structurally challenged areas and that is why it needs structural funds. The UK Government have finally recognised coalfield areas as a priority. Now is not the time to disallow access to what will be the last major chance of structural funds going to the UK to help those areas. Europe grew out of the coal and steel community. The coalfields have to be understood in the context of permanent, steep long-term decline. The insistence of Eurostat on ignoring the United Kingdom position and rescheduling those areas as level 2 means that they must now compete as objective 2 regions, although their success is by no means certain. In fact, they are objective 1 regions trying to get objective 2 funding. The designation of objective 1 status should be the subject of open debate by the EU and member states, along with the principles of subsidiarity, transparency, fairness and social justice. The matter should not be cut and dried, with Eurostat overruling member states by the utilisation of a subjective formula.

The Commission has proposed that objective 2 eligibility should be based predominantly on employment and unemployment statistics. Industrial decline in the north-east has been long-term and sustained. Some areas have lost so many industrial jobs that they may not continue to qualify as industrial areas.

In selecting eligible objective 2 areas, the United Kingdom Government and the European Commission must use additional indicators of deprivation and exclusion that are meaningful. I suggest to my hon. Friend the Minister that additional selection criteria for objective 2 status should include some of the following factors.

First, per capita GDP should be recognised by the EC as the single most important factor in determining whether a region lags behind the rest of Europe. Parts of the north-east contain some of the lowest GDP in the United Kingdom, and the region as a whole has the lowest GDP of any region. Secondly, the skills level of the work force is fundamental to their ability to compete effectively. The narrow skills base in the north-east is a direct consequence of traditional structural reliance on heavy industry and agriculture. Thirdly, the north-east suffers from endemic deep-rooted unemployment. Official unemployment statistics underplay the problem of joblessness and the related issue of social exclusion. Fourthly, rural areas continue to suffer acute problems in terms of overdependence on a narrow and inflexible economic base, changing economic structures, remoteness and scarcity of population. Finally, aid should be concentrated on areas suffering structural problems. Allowing small areas with cyclical problems to qualify would reduce the impact of structural funds and fail to recognise real need.

At a European level, the UK Government are seeking a fair distribution of structural funds across member states. Distribution within the United Kingdom should also be on a fair basis, recognising real indicators of need. The economy in the north-east is struggling with huge job losses continuing to occur in manufacturing. The region is still undergoing a major restructuring process. The continuation of structural funds is vital to stabilise the future economy and boost job prospects in the north-east of England.

Mr. David Prior (North Norfolk): I am pleased to follow the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) with whom I served on the Select Committee for a few months. I am particularly pleased to follow a Labour Member who still believes in the redistribution of wealth, which is something of a surprise these days.

The debate is important because we receive £11 billion a year from the structural fund which represent 45 per cent. of the European budget. We badly need reform, not just because of the enlargement of Europe, but because as everyone agrees—and the Committee certainly agreed—the system has become hugely over-bureaucratic and needs simplification. Let me quote one item from the Committee report:

"Eligibility for Objective 1 status is based on areas defined in Euro-speak as 'NUTS Level 2'. There has for some years been in existence a system of Nomenclature of Territorial Units for Statistics, designed to provide a single uniform breakdown of sub-national territorial units for statistical and other purposes."

Very few normal people can understand a word of that and it illustrates just how complicated and difficult the system has become. I agree with the Committee report when it refers to the results as arbitrary and capricious.

Worst of all is the political horse-trading in the background and we have heard something about it this evening. Even with Agenda 2000 determining the criteria by which parts of Europe should qualify for the new objectives, there is already horse-trading over those criteria.

It is nonsense that the criteria are determined at EU level and I am glad that the Committee recognised that and stated in its conclusions that in future they must include "delegation to the lowest practicable level, and to non-statutory bodies in suitable cases."

I was also pleased to see conclusion 24 which states:

"The extent to which Objective 2 arrangements allow for wards to be targeted if necessary below local government ward level will be a measure of the Government's success in negotiations."

My own view is that that does not go nearly far enough. It is hard not to agree with Lord Pearson of Rannoch, who asked whether it would be more sensible for us to take control of the whole £11 billion and spend it wisely on our real needs, no doubt saving several billion pounds along the way. The more decisions that can be made locally, the better. If we carry on as we have in the past, we shall merely bring the European Union into disrepute.

Representing a rural constituency, I have a particular concern that objective 5b will be subsumed into the new objective 2, and that the rural areas will be squeezed. They will have to compete directly with industrial and urban areas, and historically they have had far less clout.

The indicators chosen by the European Commission to decide which areas qualify for support clearly discriminate against rural areas. The Commission decided that to qualify, rural areas must have a population density of less than 100 people per square kilometre or a high percentage of agricultural workers. In the United Kingdom that will have a serious effect on our ability to qualify for objective 5b.

Part of my constituency does qualify for objective 5b. It has been successful in attracting new industry and there has been a fruitful partnership between the local authority and private business. Indeed, the Select Committee report includes a letter from my district council which states that it believes that "the additional funding available under the programme has seen positive effects delivered in the area—particularly in terms of capital investment projects by the public and private sectors in Fakenham".

The loss of objective 5b funding will have a serious impact on Fakenham and the surrounding area.

Mr. Bob Blizzard (Waveney): The hon. Gentleman will know from that section of the report that parts of his district felt that they did not obtain objective 5b funding because Lowestoft in my constituency was granted objective 5b, although it is a town of 60,000 or 70,000 people. The case for help through structural funds for Lowestoft was overwhelming, but it was not large enough to qualify for objective 2. In answer to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg), may I say that there are small areas with structural, not just cyclical, unemployment?

Because the only way to help Lowestoft was through objective 5b, it had to be redefined as rural. Is that not an argument for reform of the funds, so that areas such as Lowestoft can get what they deserve, without having to be designated as rural at the expense of other rural areas?

Mr. Prior: Indeed, the hon. Gentleman presents an argument for ensuring that decisions are taken locally, so that such considerations can be taken into account.

I shall conclude my speech with a further example. Alongside North Norfolk is a coastal strip where there are several fishing communities. They would have qualified under objective 5b, but for the fact that the travel-to-work area in which a number of fishermen were assessed included Fakenham, Cromer, North Walsham and other towns, so there was not a high enough percentage of fishermen to qualify. Along the coastal strip, however, the percentage is sufficiently high.

I hope that when the Minister negotiates the qualifications for objective 2, she will support the submission to her from the North Norfolk district council that the North Norfolk coastal strip should be designated under the fisheries strand of the objective 2 programme.

I believe strongly that the structural funds should be allocated and spent locally, as near as possible to the ground, and that rural areas such as North Norfolk and other parts of Great Britain should be safeguarded.

8.3 pm

Ms Candy Atherton (Falmouth and Camborne): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in tonight's debate. To us in Cornwall, objective 1 is more than an opaque piece of bureaucratic jargon. To many, it is like the holy grail—a recognition that distinct regions such as ours on the periphery of the European Market need assistance to overcome chronic structural disadvantages. Indeed, I would not be going too far if I said that in Cornwall, European structural funds are exceedingly sexy.

It came as a terrific boost in June to learn that the Select Committee on Trade and Industry had recognised the inherent logic behind Cornwall's case for recognition as a distinct region at NUTS level 2. Whereas most people in less hard hit regions might repay the mention of objective 1 with a glazed expression, in my constituency even the eyes of schoolchildren light up.

I should not want my hon. Friends to think that we have been pleading emotionally for special treatment. The merit of Cornwall's case rests partly on its distinct regional identity. Cornwall has a unique cultural and economic history. In its heyday it was the powerhouse of British industry, but today it could easily be described as a backwater. The Select Committee agreed in its report that "it would be. . . absurd to describe Cornwall as a bogus entity."

I should welcome a visit to Cornwall by my hon. Friend the Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg), so that I could show him myself the structural problems that we face.

The merit of Cornwall's case also rests heavily on statistics. Recent figures—I believe that more have been published today—show that gross domestic product in the county is only 68 per cent. of the EU average. That is well below the 75 per cent. cut-off for objective 1. I understand that we have come bottom of the table in today's statistics.

For years the truth about Cornwall's problems has been masked by amalgamation with relatively prosperous Devon. We have received objective 5b grants, which are highly constructive. However, they do not offer the fundamental help that the county desperately needs.

The Prime Minister recognised our strong technical case, which also had strong backing in all political parties, in the county and through the wider south-west. The first action of the regional chamber of the south-west was to support unanimously Cornwall's case for objective 1. We were delighted to learn this summer to learn that Eurostat had agreed that Cornwall should be separated from Devon at NUTS level 2.

Cornwall now satisfies all the technical criteria for gaining objective 1 funding. As we approach the next round of objective 1 allocations, we in Cornwall were encouraged that, in discussing the flexibility of the 75 per cent. threshold, the Select Committee suggested that "it is hard to imagine a region below the threshold being excluded".

I look forward to the county council producing an irrefutable package of proposals, based on widespread consultation throughout the county, which will put the seal on our bid. Next week the movers and shakers of the county meet to thrash out the first phase of our plans to spend. Over the next few weeks a consultation document will be delivered to every door in the county asking for direct input from the grass roots.

I particularly agree with the Committee's analysis of the complexity of the process. It is indeed complex, and that is compounded by the jargon. We encounter terms such as Eurostat, Leader, state aids, objectives 1 to 6, the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, and my favourite term—NUTS. It would be fair to say that most people in Cornwall are becoming comfortable with the terminology, if sometimes a little confused. A man came to my surgery recently and asked me, "Well, then, Candy, are we going to get this objectionable 1?" I hope and believe that we will.

In Cornwall we have a true partnership between the public and private sectors, central and local government, and from voluntary organisations to the health authority, all headed by the county council. If we succeed in achieving objective 1, we shall have the opportunity to redefine our county, create a new university, tackle our infrastructure problems and, perhaps, as a predominantly small and medium-sized business centre, become the leading light across the EU in supporting and developing this sector.

The opportunities are there for the taking, and Cornwall stands at a crossroads. I hope that the county that currently stands on a par with the poorer regions of Portugal and Greece will be able to reorient itself into the future, with all its people pulling together.

8.10 pm

Mr. Alasdair Morgan (Galloway and Upper Nithsdale): The reality is, as the members of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry accepted in their report, that the European Union faces budgetary restrictions at a time of expansion. New nations, which we in the Scottish National party are keen to see joining the EU, are the very nations for which structural and cohesion funding are vital to ensure smooth accession and the subsequent smooth operation of the single market.

On the Scottish National party Benches we strongly hold to the principle—as has already been mentioned, it is somewhat out of fashion—that those who have a little more should in the best interests of society, or in this instance the best interests of the EU, contribute to those who have a little or a lot less. Equalising economic development and creating a stable union is in all our interests. We shall all benefit from the new partners who are in a position to participate fully in the single market but the political reality is that there is no endless pot of Euro-gold. If we are to have new members, the cake will have to be divided differently. It is important that the criteria that we adopt in cutting up that cake is not inflexible. We must take a wider view than the current criteria propose.

As for the proposed new objective 1, there must be great doubt over the accuracy of some of the regional gross domestic product figures that are being used as the main criteria for the objective. These figures are partly based on sample surveys. Even the Office for National Statistics itself says that the "estimates cannot be regarded as accurate to the last digit shown."

Yet on that basis a member of the cabinet of Commissioner Monika Wolf-Mathies, who obviously must be a very important person as he was asked before the Select Committee in another place, said—[HON. MEMBERS: "She."] No. I am talking about the cabinet member representing the commissioner. He said before the Select Committee in another place that 75.1 per cent. shared gross domestic product was enough to exclude a region from objective 1. That means an exclusion based on the first decimal point of an inaccurate statistic.

On that basis, the highlands and islands would technically fall outwith the new criteria based on gross domestic product alone. If we take the original reasoning for objective 1, the highlands and islands would clearly benefit from the sort of structural support that is envisaged for objective 1 areas.

The arguments for the highlands and islands getting objective 1 have been well rehearsed, but they should certainly be repeated with force by the Government during the ensuing negotiations. I would expect the hon. Member for Inverness, East, Nairn and Lochaber (Mr. Stewart) to rehearse the arguments in some detail if he catches your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In terms of peripherality, population density, composition and general geography, there is an overwhelming case for the highlands and islands to be treated in the same way as the northern rim regions of Sweden—these are regions that have a higher gross domestic product than the highlands and islands—and Finland.

The case for the highlands and islands is strong, but less attention has been given in Scotland to the position of new objective 2 or current 5b areas. My constituency currently falls within the 5b area, but much of coastal rural "lowland" Scotland is also covered. Population density, unemployment and depopulation are all useful indicators, but they often fail to show the real picture of need.

The Government must press for objective 2 to take more fully into account all the possible indicators of low economic activity. For example, we must consider the amount of casual, seasonal or part-time employment. We must consider also the incidence of low earnings or low household incomes. We must take account of remoteness and lack of access to services and opportunities. We must consider not only population density but population composition—for example, is there an aging population or is there a substantial incidence of emigration of young people?

We must be concerned also about the arbitrary drawing of boundaries. I must say, given the remarks of the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg), that I have no claim to include Berwick within any of the Scottish areas. However, gross domestic product and unemployment statistics conceal vast differences within areas. For example, the GDP of the highlands and islands is skewed by the inclusion of Inverness. The area of the islands is greatly skewed by the inclusion of Shetland.

Unemployment is also a variable statistic. Male unemployment based on claimant count within the region in which my constituency is situated—that is Dumfries and Galloway—is 7.4 per cent. Yet male unemployment in the Newton Stewart travel-to-work area within my constituency is 14.6 per cent., which is almost double. We must have a system that is flexible enough to cope with these discrepancies.

I am concerned that my area of Dumfries and Galloway may not qualify under the current proposed criteria. However, the issue is not about looking after our own backyard and that alone; it is about delivering though objective 2 the aims of economic development. It is about ensuring that communities elsewhere in Scotland, the United Kingdom or throughout the European Union do not have the door closed on them because we have rigidly applied some statistics that have been dreamt up in some bureaucrat's office. So objective 2 should be about providing opportunities for the best programmes in areas of genuine need and not simply, as the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) said—

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): Does the hon. Gentleman agree that areas of great need could include, or should include, fishing communities and fisheries dependent areas?

Mr. Morgan: I would certainly agree with that. That is something that we should bear in mind when we are considering the composition of an area. We should take into account the reliance of that area on declining industries such as fishing and, unfortunately, agriculture. I was saying that we should not simply be throwing all the money at a chosen few. Instead, we should be focusing on the best programmes for areas of genuine need.

In the area that I represent the net income from structural funds is dwarfed by contributions from the common agricultural policy. We are faced with not only the reform of structural funding but complete reassessment of the CAP. There is a growing feeling that European assistance under the CAP should move away from subsidy towards a programme of rural investment. That has a crucial bearing on our debate on structural funding.

At a time when rural areas across Europe and the United Kingdom are facing the possibility of reduced structural support, we must ask ourselves whether there are ways of refocusing other moneys to promote economic development in these areas. We need to find ways of more closely integrating the aims of both funding strands—that is the structural funds and the CAP—to ensure that maximum benefit goes to the areas in greatest need.

Finally, I want to focus briefly on the mechanisms for delivering structural funds within Scotland. We have a structure of local programmes and partnerships, which in many instances have been effective in building community structures and in disbursing structural funds. However, with the creation of a new streamlined structure of three objectives and four funds we have a good opportunity to consider the delivery mechanisms. There has been much criticism of existing structures that centre on levels of bureaucracy, endless meetings, seminars, forums, consultants and little true democratic accountability.

That being so, we must ask ourselves whether there is an opportunity to streamline delivery, to make greater use in Scotland of local enterprise companies along with local authorities and community partnerships and to improve scrutiny through a dedicated Committee of the Scottish Parliament. I would expect the new Scottish Parliament closely to examine this area to ensure that our structures are the most efficient at delivering for Scotland.

Transitional arrangements and safety nets will be vital. We must fight to ensure fair criteria for the new objectives. We must ensure that adequate provision is made to cope with any delay in agreeing the new scheme. The successful partnerships now in place must not be allowed to disappear while the bureaucrats and politicians argue about the next scheme.

Mr. Jon Trickett (Hemsworth): Paragraph 49 of the report refers to the importance of flexibility in the setting of boundaries for the allocation of funds, and states:

"It is clearly important that . . . the areas which are most in need should receive the funding . . . The extent to which Objective 2 arrangements allow for funds to be targeted . . . will be a measure of the Government's success in negotiations."

I agree.

The European Commission's proposals are in danger of causing great injustice, particularly to the coalfield areas, by being too rigid and failing to deal with significant sub-regional disparities. I shall illustrate my point by reference to my area.

Wakefield district, where my constituency is located, has been a significant beneficiary of European funds for many years under objective 2. Since 1989, it has received about £40 million. We have been able to create 2,500 jobs and train about 11,000 of our residents. Local people cannot understand how the district could not qualify for such funding in future. They say that if we fitted the criteria for assistance more than a decade ago, when, admittedly, things in Wakefield were bad, it is inconceivable that we will not have access to the funds when our situation is immeasurably worse after the Thatcher and Major years. Over the past 15 years, the local traditional industries have been decimated. Wakefield had 20 collieries. Now it has one—20,000 mining jobs went. There have been major closures in other local industries such as engineering, textiles and clothing.

According to the recommended criteria, our economy is counted as part of the West Yorkshire region. Our economic and social data are distorted because we are regarded effectively as being part of Greater Leeds. I come from Leeds. I was born, grew up and spent most of my life there. Eventually, I became leader of that great city, but I now live in the former pit villages in the east of the Wakefield district. That is the place I represent. Leeds and Wakefield share almost no economic or social characteristics except for the fact that, for administrative purposes, we form part of the West Riding of Yorkshire, as I insist on calling it.

To qualify for objective 1 funds, it is necessary for a region to have gross domestic product per capita below 75 per cent. of the European Union average. West Yorkshire's figure is well above 90 per cent., but the figure for Wakefield is much lower. It is estimated at 77 per cent., the lowest by far in the West Riding. That statistic alone demonstrates the falsity of the assumption that the population of a region as diverse as ours should be regarded as socially or economically homogeneous.

The same point applies to the objective 2 criteria, but I shall not pursue it because it is self-evident. However, I shall demonstrate the need for European Union structural funds to be sensitive to sub-regional disparities, especially the needs of former mining areas, by reference to my constituency. There are three factors.

First, Hemsworth in the mid-1980s was massively dependent on an industrial base. We were one of the nation's great wealth generators. Two thirds of jobs were classified as industrial—twice the national average. As a result of what can only be described as an economic cataclysm, two thirds of those jobs disappeared in 14 years. Now only a quarter of the jobs in my constituency can be classified as industrial. Wakefield was the seventh worst hit district in the country in the industrial restructuring of the 1980s and 1990s. The district lost 23,000 jobs, but it covers four constituencies. Half the job losses were in just one constituency—mine. We lost almost 10,000 mining jobs in 14 years. That is industrial restructuring on a colossal scale and we will live for many years with the social consequences.

My second point concerns GDP per capita. We live in a region with slightly more than 90 per cent. of the EU average, but it is estimated that the figure for Hemsworth is substantially less than the 75 per cent., which would allow us access to objective 1 funding. My constituency shares boundaries with Barnsley and Doncaster. Our economic and social structure and the competitiveness of local firms have more in common with the South Yorkshire districts than with Leeds and Bradford. All that separates us from South Yorkshire is a couple of fields and a beck—a stream to those unfamiliar with our Yorkshire language. Wading through the beck on the other side of those fields, it seems that South Yorkshire will benefit from the highest priority objective 1 funds while we lose our access to the lower order objective 2 status.

My third point relates to earned income levels. According to Library estimates, one in four people working in my constituency earns less than £3.50 an hour. That compares with one in 14 in West Yorkshire and one in 20 in the economy as a whole. It is inconceivable to argue on that basis for the trickle-down theory, or to say that we are part of the West Yorkshire economy: we clearly are not.

I recognise that the British Government have a complex and sensitive task in negotiating with Brussels. Many people in my area believe that during the Tory years, a sustained effort was launched to tear the heart out of the villages where I live and which I am proud to represent. Small wonder that a recent university study concluded that many people in Hemsworth feel politically, economically and socially marginalised. The European Union recognised that sentiment as the inevitable corollary of industrial and economic restructuring. The structural funds were established because social cohesion was regarded as a fundamental objective of civilised governance. Its opposite, alienation, was seen as destructive of the social fabric. Social cohesion was one of the fundamental objectives of article 2 of Single European Act.

Over the past 15 years, Westminster has often seemed to be the enemy while the EU, through the structural funds, appeared to be our only ally. There will be great frustration and disappointment should the fund be withdrawn with the task only partially completed, or as I would say, hardly begun. I know that my hon. Friend the Minister will do all that she can to ensure that any changes to the administration of the funds are introduced with the greatest care and delicacy, paying particular attention to the existence of sub-regional disparities and micro-economies such as those in West Yorkshire.

I respectfully remind the Minister of the Deputy Prime Minister's coalfield task force report on this matter. She will recall that the task force was acutely aware of the needs of the coalfields and of the significance of securing continuing assistance from Europe. Its report made three recommendations. I recommend those propositions to the House and to her as she goes to negotiate on our behalf.

Mr. Tim Collins (Westmorland and Lonsdale): I commend the Select Committee and its staff for producing an admirably clear and constructive report. It is in many ways a model of its kind, both informative and persuasive. I congratulate the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on his elegant presentation to open the debate. I know that he was filling in for the Committee's Chairman, but, with his magisterial mastery of the overview, he demonstrated that he deserves to be a Chairman in his own right, if greater glory does not beckon before that.

I agree with what the hon. Gentleman said about cohesion funds. If there is a case—and clearly, as many hon. Members have said, there is—for simplification, reduction and co-ordination of the European Union's expenditure in such areas, surely it must arise first and foremost with the cohesion funds.

Here we have public expenditure that was set up for a specific purpose—to prepare four member states for meeting the convergence criteria for joining the EU. Brussels has declared that three of the four have now met those criteria, yet the money is to continue to be paid in large measure. The hon. Gentleman is right to describe that as absurd. To me it is illustrative of a system one of whose acronyms is NUTS. There is a problem there, and it needs to be addressed.

My second point concerns the wider United Kingdom national interest. Whether we are Euro-sceptics, Europhiles or something in between, whether we supported HMS Durham as it shelled HMS Falmouth earlier in the debate, or whether we supported HMS Falmouth as it elegantly shelled HMS Durham back, and whatever our position on the issues, there is a broad United Kingdom national interest in ensuring that we get as much as possible out of the European funds.

We put far more into the European Union than we get out, and we want to make sure that we get out as much as we can. We must all therefore agree that the Government should take a hard-headed negotiating position.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): Does my hon. Friend recall, and will he remind the House, that the genesis of regional development funds lies back in the days of my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Sir E. Heath), during the negotiations on European accession? It was precisely in order to correct some of the imbalances in European funding that the concept was introduced.

Mr. Collins: I agree. The funds are an important balancing mechanism. The Government must continue to remind our EU partners that the reason the United Kingdom gets a large share of the funds is that the system was, and should continue to be, an attempt to rebalance some of the ways in which funds are redistributed around the Union.

[Mr. Collins]

We continue to put far more into the European Union than we get back, and however the budgetary negotiations turn out, that will continue to be the case. On the evidence of the debate, the Government would be right to believe that there was strong cross-party support for a tough negotiating position. I hope that the Minister has heard that in the debate today; it has been a consistent theme of speeches from both sides of the House.

If the Minister will forgive me for the analogy, I hope that she will—indeed, having read her testimony before the Select Committee, I believe that she intends to—go in to bat for Britain rather as a certain right hon. Lady did a few years ago: thump the table and demand our money. Indeed, I see that the hon. Lady has her handbag beside her on the Bench; no doubt she knows how to use it, and I commend her on her negotiating stance.

Like other hon. Members, I shall talk about an important constituency dimension. Much of my constituency benefits from objective 5b expenditure. It is important to recognise that even constituencies such as mine and that of my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of York (Miss McIntosh), with low unemployment—ours is below 2 per cent., and I know that many hon. Ladies and Gentlemen on both sides of the House might envy that, and want their constituencies to move towards it—are not without their difficulties.

My constituency is very rural. Those in the House who were present last night at a meeting of the Rural Services Partnership heard an interesting presentation by Rita Hale, formerly of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, about the fact that people in rural areas have far less access than people elsewhere to public transport and public services, and have to travel much further in terms of both time and distance to get any form of public service, whether that be a leisure centre, a library, the health service, a jobcentre or benefits advice.

In my part of the world we are heavily dependent on two forms of employment. One is agriculture, which, according to local farmers, now faces its worst crisis for 40 or 50 years. The other is tourism, which has also had a bad year, partly because of the strength of sterling, and partly because of the bad weather.

That combination means that many of my constituents feel that this is the worst possible time for any serious debate about taking away large sums in European funding from areas such as ours. So I was delighted to hear the Department of Trade and Industry press office confirm to journalists from Cumbria this afternoon that the Government do not intend to accept a simple crude measure of unemployment as the only criterion on which the funds are distributed.

As many hon. Members have said, there are factors within and behind the unemployment figures that need to be taken into account. If rural Cumbria lost all its European funding, many parts of it would feel that they were being left to bleed to death. The Government would be right to fight hard for a broader, more sensible and more all-encompassing system for the distribution of the funds.

I shall finish now, because I know that many others wish to speak, and tell the Minister that I hope that she will feel that there has been consensus in the debate on the need for a strong negotiating position. I hope that she will be able to take into the discussions with our European partners a belief that the House of Commons wishes the Government to fight Britain's corner hard, that the funds are important and that they should continue to be paid in all parts of the United Kingdom.

The funds should be available in Scotland, in Northern Ireland and in Wales, as well as in all sorts of areas in England, rural as well as urban, some with slow economic development and others that, although they may do better from time to time, do not do well all the time. I hope that the Minister feels that she will now be able to go in to bat for Britain and bring home the bacon.

8.35 pm

Mr. Ian Stewart (Eccles): I, too, welcome the Trade and Industry Select Committee report, which gives a clear and thorough analysis of the implications for the United Kingdom of European Union proposals for changes in structural funds. I also welcome the Government's response to the report.

I am a keen supporter of the benefits of EU membership, and look forward to the enlargement of the Community for the enrichment that it will bring to our political and economic lives. I agree with the Government's premise that a poorer member state or region should receive more than a richer one—in other words, each according to his needs. I also agree with their view that reform of existing regional support must not only be affordable and fair but durable beyond 2006 for enlargement.

The proposed changes in European structural funds mean that while 51 per cent. of the population of the EU now receive assistance, in future only 35 to 40 per cent. of the population will be covered. The Alliance for Regional Aid has shown that funds are already closely targeted. For example, 68 per cent. of the funds go to 25 per cent. of the population.

As the Select Committee has pointed out, the Commission has said that aid should be more focused, although it has not yet made the case for further targeting. The upshot of the Commission's proposals would be that the 92 million people now covered by objective 2 or objective 5b status would be reduced to 74 million. That is a drop—or rather, a plummet—of 20 per cent.

Eccles, my constituency, in the city of Salford within the Greater Manchester area, currently benefits, as do other areas in the north-west region of England, from objective 2 status. The sub-region of Greater Manchester is one of the first and oldest industrial areas in Europe, and has suffered more than most from the widespread decline in traditional manufacturing industries and an aging and crumbling infrastructure.

For example, Salford still has an interest in clearing up the conditions left by mining blight, and one of our local authority members, Councillor Peter Grimshaw, will go to Brussels in December under the auspices of the Alliance for Regional Aid to lobby hard for the maintenance of regional funding that includes mining areas.

Typically, some full-time employment in our area has been replaced by part-time, lower-paid work, which has led to higher male unemployment. Interestingly, female unemployment is less than half the male rate in my constituency. The employment situation clearly would have been worse without European funds.

In the Greater Manchester sub-region, there are many positive points. One of the considerable strengths of Greater Manchester and Salford is its major input into information and communications technologies, research and development. There is further scope for developing this potential for the region's companies through training and advice and the commercial application of research. In the region there are a number of well-developed fibre-optic cable and copper wire networks including the Gemisis 2000 project based at Salford university.

It is ironic that the north-west is faced with the threat of losing EU funding at the very time when the Labour Government are implementing policies that will assist our region, such as the new deal, the minimum wage, the introduction of the regional development agency and chamber, and a single Government office for the north-west. Those measures will improve the efficiency and effectiveness of targeted assistance.

Local authorities in the Greater Manchester area are clear that structural funds have played an essential part in the progress that has been made in the last decade. The funds are vital to ensuring that the progress is consolidated and continued. The Greater Manchester authorities have argued forcefully that, without European support, the gap between the sub-region of Greater Manchester and the other, more prosperous regions in the UK and EU would widen further.

During the 1994 to 1996 programme period, EU structural fund investment in Greater Manchester was about £190 million. More than £80 million has been or will be invested in small and medium-sized enterprises, in which more than 70 per cent. of the work force are employed. Research and development and technological infrastructure projects have received about £25 million. That translates more generally into 52,000 jobs created, 86,000 companies assisted and 13,000 training places.

Between 1994 and 1998, Salford has benefited from £23 million of European structural funds. The local labour initiative was developed by combining European structural funds and European regional development funds, which assisted 275 companies and led to the creation of 221 much needed permanent jobs in the area. Salford is focusing its grant moneys on business support, upskilling the work force and helping the unemployed to access training and employment.

Why should the assistance continue? Greater Manchester and Salford have used their funds well. Funds have been applied as part of a coherent strategy to improve the economic and social position of residents and enhance economic competitiveness. However, the Salford and Greater Manchester economy still has problems which can only be successfully solved through a long-term programme of comprehensive regeneration in which European funding should play a leading and sustained role.

My local authority believes that the review of objective 2 status should not be based solely on the current proposed criteria, and that indices of need should be sharpened and redefined to include, for example, deprivation, local gross domestic product and income levels. Under the index of deprivation, Salford is the 23rd most deprived authority in England, but even that hides the reality. Forty-six of the districts in Salford are among the worst 6 per cent. nationally. It is essential that any revised objective 2 criteria help the UK's traditional industrial and manufacturing areas.

Salford has gained national pathfinder status for its innovative approach to regeneration and is working closely with the Government to share best practice. The loss of objective 2 status would undermine work currently under way. In my constituency, the Barton strategic employment zone—one of the largest undeveloped sites available for economic development in the north-west—has just received EU funding to enable it to be brought forward quickly. The zone is likely to be the engine for growth for the sub-region in the future. Without European funding, it would be difficult to get it started.

The Lowry centre in the neighbouring Salford constituency is an innovative national landmark millennium project which would not be built without EU support. Salford and Greater Manchester's priorities for support in a new objective 2 programme would include integrated business support packages, growth sector-specific support, capital for businesses to grow, access to accommodation for expansion and customised training and development packages.

Like other hon. Members, I welcome the Select Committee's recommendations for transitional support, at paragraph 30, and its suggested seven-year duration. I would like to record my support for objective 1 status for Northern Ireland, parts of Wales, South Yorkshire, Cornwall and Merseyside.

Without continued access to EU structural funds, the ability of the various partners—such as local authorities, training and enterprise councils, the voluntary sector, trade unions and businesses—will be severely hampered from meeting not only our own local and regional regeneration aspirations but those aspirations of the UK Government and the EU. Therefore, I urge the Government, in their negotiations with the European Commission and the Council of Ministers, to press for a package of reforms that will maintain the maximum level of aid to Britain's traditional industrial areas, and to look favourably on us when deciding the allocation of discretionary funds made available to national Governments.

The job of regeneration in the regions and sub-regions is not complete. To reach completion, we need the stability brought about by the maintenance and fair distribution of European structural funds.

8.46 pm

Mr. David Stewart (Inverness, East, Nairn and Lochaber): I welcome the opportunity to add my brief remarks to this vital debate. I wish to concentrate on two matters. First, I wish to refer to the future of objective 1 funding within Europe generally and the UK specifically, particularly in the light of the Commission's well-known statement about strictly applying the criterion for objective 1—per capita gross domestic product being below 75 per cent. of the EU average. Secondly, I wish to refer to the special case for the highlands and islands in terms of sparsity of population.

The highlands and islands is perhaps unique as the last unspoilt area of Europe—that was perhaps reflected by the visit of the Chairman of the Select Committee to my constituency, a visit which I very much welcomed. I endorse the comments of the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Morgan) who perhaps stole my thunder by arguing very competently about sparsity and low wages in the highlands. Perhaps that shows that peace has broken out tonight between Labour and the Scottish National party—not in other debates, but certainly in this one.

As a highlander, I am familiar with the issues of sparsity and low pay. The area is peripheral to the rest of Europe, but forms part of the northern rim of Europe, along with Finland and Sweden. It has high transport costs and unemployment. It is an area larger than Belgium, but has a population less than one third that of Brussels.

The impact of structural funds in the highlands and islands can be traced back to the 1970s, when the area had objective 5b funding status and then, latterly, objective 1. Over the past nine years, more than £240 million has been pumped into the highland economy—from the Mallaig harbour development to the dry dock at the Barmac oil fabrication yard, which will allow the oil fabrication industry in my area to compete in Europe in the manufacture of floating production vessels.

Objective 1 funding is a vital factor in the development of the funicular programme, which will allow a new rail link in the Cairngorms and 12-month-a-year tourism—a great boost to the area. The two main goals for objective 1 within the highlands and islands are, first, the achievement of external cohesion—that is, to pull up the economic performance of the area compared to the EU average—and, secondly, the achievement of internal cohesion, or reducing the disparities throughout the highlands and islands. Objective 1 funding has been a powerful catalyst to stimulate additional investment in the highlands and islands. It has been a great success and hon. Members need not merely take my word for it as independent assessment of all the projects has shown that more than 90 per cent. had either high or medium effectiveness. It has created more than 1,800 jobs in my area, which has been a particular boost to vulnerable and fragile rural areas.

I must touch on some of the threats and opportunities facing the highlands and islands, which will be familiar to many hon. Members with rural areas in their constituencies. The first is food prices, which are 8 per cent. higher in rural than in urban areas—in remote island communities, they can be as much as a quarter higher than in urban areas. Petrol and transport costs are also a great burden and can be up to 20 per cent. higher than in the central belt in Scotland, which reflects the limited competition and a lack of economies of scale.

Unemployment is another big threat. For example, 50 per cent. of those unemployed in the western isles are long-term unemployed. The new earnings survey recently showed that earnings in my area are 14 per cent. below the Scottish average and 23 per cent. below the UK average.

We have, therefore, a combination of a higher cost of living and low incomes. It is a double whammy and it is a recipe for poverty, poor housing and depopulation. However, there are also great opportunities, which I must briefly stress. We have a first-class environment. Two thirds of the sites of special scientific interest are in my area and one third of the highlands and islands is a national scenic area. We have a high-quality environment, which is a key factor in the promotion of the area. Also, we have new technology—that great weapon to defeat the problems of distance. We have the university of the Highlands and Islands, which will offer higher education to all, from the crofter in Barra to the chartered accountant in Inverness. We have the beauty of tele-medicine, so doctors in Inverness can interview patients in Skye. We have tremendous opportunities in the resource base: forestry, fresh water and hydro-electricity. Inverness in my constituency is the world centre for the development of wave power. The area has the opportunities; it merely needs the economic wherewithal to exploit them.

I welcome the recommendation of the Trade and Industry Select Committee that the highlands and islands should be treated on a par with other sparsely populated areas within the northern rim. I also welcome the Government's report on that issue. The highlands and islands are doubly disadvantaged. The area has a low gross domestic product. The figures announced today by the Office for National Statistics show that it is below 78 per cent. of the average GDP in the UK. If that were factored into a European context, I estimate that it would be around 76 per cent. of the European average.

The area also has a sparse population—less than 10 people per square kilometre. Apart from Finland and Sweden, no other area in Europe touches that figure. In addition, we have 90 inhabited islands, and that adds extra social and economic difficulties. That has been reflected in a wider context as article 299 of the treaty of Amsterdam refers to the problems of islands. I understand that the European Parliament will be discussing sparsity in a debate on Monday.

Finally, I warmly welcome this first-class report. It advances a strong case about the range of flexibility, the threshold of objective 1 eligibility and the broader criteria for the new objective 2. The next six months of negotiation in Europe will be tough. The report provides a thorough, thoughtful and welcome addition to the debate.

8.52 pm

Dr. Desmond Turner (Brighton, Kemptown): Perhaps you may be wondering, Mr. Deputy Speaker, what a nice boy representing a south-coast seat is doing in this debate, which has been so heavily dominated by the north. The answer is simple. If my hon. Friend the Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) has visited Brighton—perhaps he has been there for the conference—he will have seen the elegant Regency facades and might have assumed that it is a fairly prosperous place. However, if one looks behind the facades, one finds tremendous poverty. The truth is that Brighton and Hove is a poor place.

I will not enter into a competition, saying, "I'm poorer than thee, lad." That would be silly. However, I want to establish that all the indicators put the area on a par with just about every area whose representatives have spoken tonight and which enjoy objective 2 funding. The difference is that we have never had a penny piece of European structural funding although we have the same difficulties. There are several reasons for that, the major ones being the inflexibility of the present set of statistical criteria that govern European structural funds, which the previous Government never seriously questioned, and the fact that no one made a case for Brighton and Hove. We had three Tory Members of Parliament. My opponent at the general election, who lost his seat to me after 27 years, woke up a year before the election to the fact that Brighton had an unemployment problem. I do not remember him uttering a squeak about it for years before.

Brighton has never been a recognised manufacturing centre, but it had manufacturing industry and now has virtually none. We used to build railway engines—I do not expect that many people know that. In the past 20 years, we have lost thousands of engineering jobs. That is a sector of our employment which has been wiped out and it is why we have some of the worst long-term male unemployment in the country. That is why we are one of the 17 pathfinder areas for the new deal in communities. I have not checked the list, but I strongly suspect that the other 16 currently enjoy either objective 1 or 2 European structural funding. We have had nothing, so we have been unable to create new jobs to fill the spaces on our brown-field industrial estates where the jobs have simply gone. We are claiming not to be poorer than thou, but to be in the same league and we want an opportunity to access similar support.

I shall give a few statistics to justify my case. Unemployment in Brighton and Hove is 7 per cent. compared with a national average of 5 per cent. and a regional average of 3 per cent. However, it is up to 30 per cent. in some wards of our city. The unemployment is concentrated in estates, which is why we have the new deal for communities. Our long-term unemployment puts us sixth out of the 354 local authorities in the United Kingdom—I will bet that not many people knew that, but it is important to us. Our poor housing and rough sleepers put us 35th out of the 354; on poverty we are 60th; and, for the numbers dependent on income support, we are 35th. Our crime levels are high and our wages low. The average wage is £30 less than in Liverpool, which is an objective 1 area, and £55 less than the average for the south-east. However, our cost of living is not low but among the highest in the country outside of London. So, we think that, in principle, we have a good case for being included in European Union structural funding. That has been denied us because we have slipped through the statistical net. Under NUTS 2, we were lumped with the whole of Sussex and Surrey. As an objective 3 area, we were still lost.

Despite the criticisms that we have heard tonight of the proposed criteria and regulations for structural funding, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister on her work to secure increased flexibility. That has enabled HMS Falmouth to line up for objective 1 status and has allowed Brighton and Hove to be recognised as an objective 3 area in its own right, so that we can bid for objective 2 funding.

I shall not press the case for that now, as one has already been prepared—the Minister will receive a copy of the document very soon, if she has not already—and it stands on its own merits. Provided that in the final negotiations for the new regulations we do not slip back and lose any flexibility, I am confident that Brighton and Hove has a very good case—which is not to say that I am confident of securing the funding.

With the new flexibility, many urban areas, including Brighton and Hove, will meet the objective 2 criteria, such as whether the rate of long-term unemployment is higher than the Community average and whether there are high levels of poverty, a particularly damaged environment, a high crime rate or a low level of education among the population. Under the proposals, an area has to meet only one of those criteria, and we score on four out of the five. If that is not flexibility, I do not know what is; I suspect that if hon. Members read the small print of the regulations, they will find greater flexibility than they had imagined.

I am grateful to the Minister for her work to date. I hope that she will be able to complete it on the same lines, to ensure that, at the end of the process, we who have never previously had any help can put in our bids.

9.1 pm

Mrs. Janet Dean (Burton): Hon. Members have concentrated on their own areas, whether urban or rural, and I shall be no exception. Burton upon Trent, the largest town in my constituency, has objective 2 status, and the most northerly ward—Weaver ward—receives help under objective 5.

I wholeheartedly support the Committee's view that the new objective 2 arrangements should apply at or below ward level. It is essential that structural funds can be targeted on real need, which is often hidden in pockets of apparent affluence—unemployment and deprivation may be hidden when the statistics apply to county, district or travel-to-work areas.

Before I deal with the severity of the problem in Burton upon Trent, I shall reflect on Staffordshire as a whole. It has been said that Cornwall is an exception, but there were strong arguments that, with a population of more than 1 million, Staffordshire should have become a NUTS 2 area. The county's average GDP per head over the three years from 1993 to 1995 was 77.3 per cent., a figure that seems to be falling. Staffordshire, therefore, provides a good example of why the strict application of the 75 per cent. rule is wrong.

There is, naturally, disappointment that Staffordshire has not qualified for objective 1 status, but it is important that we look at the needs of individual areas, both urban and rural, in the county. The current state of agriculture makes it essential that every effort is made to secure structural funding for the affected areas of need. The Weaver ward in my constituency is part of the Staffordshire-Derbyshire objective 5b area, demonstrating the case that areas that are below county level or that cross administrative boundaries should continue to be eligible for such funding.

Burton upon Trent is a traditional manufacturing town best known for its brewing industry. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, Burton saw high job losses in its traditional employment base of brewing, engineering, rubber, mining and energy industries. Sadly, Burton has never been included in an assisted area, although neighbouring, more affluent areas, have been included because of their travel-to-work areas. Since Burton has a free-standing travel-to-work area, it has never benefited. I hope that in the review of assisted areas, the Government will look at real need and that Burton upon Trent will be accepted for inclusion.

Although it does not benefit from assisted area status, the difficulties that face the area were recognised and objective 2 status was awarded for the 1994–99 period. That, together with money from the single regeneration budget granted for the inner wards of the town, has helped regeneration to begin. For example, we are proud of the Centre of Productivity and Efficiency that is designed to help business, both locally and regionally, to develop. There is a great need for the good work that has already started to be allowed to continue.

Burton upon Trent continues to have one of the highest rates of unemployment in the west midlands. The current level is 7.4 per cent. However, the unemployment rate in a number of inner wards is still in excess of 10 per cent. Burton has a higher rate of long-term unemployment than the rest of Staffordshire, with 21.4 per cent of all the unemployed having been out of work for over a year.

Industrial employment in the area has fallen by one third from 1984 to 1995, but the percentage of the work force employed in industry remains well in excess of the United Kingdom average. Therefore, there are concerns that there may be a continuing fall in the jobs for industrial workers. Reduction in industrial employment has been only partly matched by an increase in service jobs, many of which, as other hon. Members have said, have been part-time.

There needs to be more diversification of employment opportunities. Burton has the largest single grouping of deprived wards in Staffordshire and within the west midlands shire counties as a whole. Eight of the town's 11 wards have more deprivation than the national average. Over a quarter of households in one ward have an income of less than £5,000 a year. Just under a quarter of all school children in Burton receive free school meals. One of the most frightening indicators of deprivation is the infant mortality rate, which is three times greater than the national average. On most measures, Burton shows high levels of deprivation. A recent survey of private sector housing stock showed that 14 per cent of dwellings in Burton were unfit for habitation.

We often hear of problems in our inner cities and, of course, there is much to be done there, but there are problems in some of our inner towns such as Burton upon Trent, which are hidden by the wider statistics. Structural funds have acted as a catalyst. They have triggered investment and already created over 1,000 jobs in the Burton area. Many people have worked hard. Local government, with its partners in industry, has worked hard to regenerate the area and Burton is beginning to be transformed into an attractive place to relocate business. I must emphasise that because, when one expresses the deprivation of an area, one can sometimes give the impression that it is not a good place to live and work. I believe that Burton and the Burton constituency in East Staffordshire district is a good place, but it needs help.

In order to build on the achievements of recent years, it is essential that Burton retains its objective 2 status. Therefore, I welcome the Select Committee's report and the Government's commitment to arguing that structural funds should be targeted at the pockets of deprivation such as there are in Burton upon Trent.

9.8 pm

Mr. David Lepper (Brighton, Pavilion): I am grateful for the opportunity to supplement the arguments already advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) about the particular needs of the Brighton and Hove area. Before I do so, I welcome the comments about simplifying the bureaucracy involved in bidding for European funds, especially in their delivery.

As my hon. Friend said, Brighton does not yet receive structural funds, but we receive funds through community initiatives—Interreg, the safer cities programme, the urban initiative, and the European structural fund. There is great rejoicing in the streets when the announcement of those funds first appears in the local press, although probably not as great as the rejoicing in the streets of Falmouth and Camborne. However, we then face a long wait before we see any signs of the funding for the youth club or community centre, whatever it might be, and disillusionment begins to set in.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Kemptown said, we are not currently eligible for structural funds. The community initiative money has proved beneficial, but it has not helped to solve the structural problems of deprivation and unemployment in our area. I welcome the flexibility that is given to member states in deciding the criteria for the new objective 2, and I can offer my hon. Friend the Minister any number to choose from, all of which I am confident that Brighton and Hove would satisfy.

I shall not repeat points already made by my hon. Friend, but I wish to point out that we come top of the list for homelessness and numbers of rough sleepers. We have 22,500 houses in multiple occupation; Birmingham, which is four times our size, has 5,000.

High levels of unemployment have already been mentioned. In the depths of the most recent recession, in the central ward in my constituency—the Regency ward—male unemployment reached 33 per cent., and it is still in double figures. That ward will be known to any hon. Member who has visited Brighton for a conference, because it contains the conference centre. We have the third highest level of long-term unemployment outside London. Only Liverpool and Birmingham surpass us.

We have not been able to address certain structural weaknesses in our economy through the support that we have received from central Government—although that is becoming better targeted through the new deal for communities—or from European funding. More than a third of the population in the Brighton and Hove area live in wards that are among the most deprived 10 per cent. in England on the indices of local deprivation. More than a quarter of our primary and secondary school children are eligible for free school meals.

Those are some of the indications of the poverty in what many people still regard as a prosperous part of the south-east. Indeed, even in the most prosperous, suburban and leafy ward in my constituency, 25 per cent. of the households are eligible for housing benefit.

I do not wish to dwell only on the reasons why our case for the new objective 2 structural funds should be considered sympathetically, because I wish to draw attention to the potential of the Brighton and Hove area. We have high levels of unemployment, poverty and deprivation, but we also have two universities and a college of technology. Despite the image that is sometimes presented of south-coast towns as places to which people retire, more than 60 per cent. of the population of the Brighton and Hove local authority area are under 45, so we have a relatively young population.

We now need help to help ourselves to realise the potential of our area. Before I entered the House, I chaired—with my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Caplin)—the local Brighton and Hove regeneration partnership, which played a key role in bringing together business, the local council and the voluntary sector to address the problems that have been described tonight.

We are beginning to make progress with the aid of city challenge funding, and the town is increasingly becoming wired up. In fact, we claim to be the most wired town in the country. We have developed an innovation centre at the university of Sussex to help new, high-tech businesses. We want to extend that centre, which has a 100 per cent. occupancy rate, but, as firms develop, they need somewhere to move to. Too many business premises in our area are old-fashioned, and do not meet the needs of modern high-tech industry. We need help to provide places in which new young industries can grow, so that they can stay in the area in which they first began to grow.

We need help to develop our transport infrastructure. My hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Foster) will—if he is called to speak—have more to say about the need to develop that infrastructure for our part of the coastal strip. The Brighton and Hove area also contains what is probably the largest brown-field site in the south-east of England—Shoreham harbour. The lack of central or European funding to help us to develop that area has left it undeveloped. Its huge potential for creating jobs remains unlocked.

I hope that, when the Minister receives the document that has been drawn to her attention by my hon. Friend the Member for Kemptown, she will carefully consider the case it makes. I hope that she will help Brighton and Hove, and Hastings further along the coast, to help ourselves to overcome the deprivation from which we suffer.

9.16 pm

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster (Hastings and Rye): When I introduce myself as the Labour Member for Hastings and Rye, the usual reaction, even from Ministers, is, "How amazing. How did you do that?" In a sense, that is a compliment, but it is also rather worrying. What people are saying is that they think of Hastings as a genteel, well-heeled, south-coast town, living off a Victorian splendour, where families flock for balmy days on the beach. It is that sort of town, when people can get there, which is another problem in itself. It is a unique town, and I am addicted to it. I have always lived there, and I go back every night, which shows how addicted I am.

However, there is another side to Hastings, and that side replicates much of what my hon. Friends the Members for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper) and for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner) have said about Brighton. They said that they would not claim, "We are more hard up than you." I, however, am going to say that Hastings is more hard up than the constituency of almost everyone who has spoken in the debate. I scanned the unemployment figures as my hon. Friends were speaking, and I have not yet found an area in which unemployment is higher than in Hastings. Our 9.6 per cent. unemployment is devastating, and it is the 87th highest level of unemployment for males in the whole country.

That is not the image that people have of Hastings. Yet we also have deprivation and poor housing. I stood outside a hotel in Hastings this morning holding up "Turning the Tide" for the press. That document contains the objectives of Hastings and Brighton, and we need the Government to take notice of it. We need extra assistance.

Perhaps it was the decades of neglect by previous Governments that made Hastings decide last year to have a Labour Member of Parliament. This year, it has for the first time decided to have a Labour council. The people of Hastings also look across the channel, believing that the town's importance in European history might be reflected by the benefits that European Union membership could bring through structural funding. That is why the restructuring of structural funds may prove a lifeline to my constituency.

Although it is only 60 miles from London, the rail journey is close on two hours, and the road journey is often longer. Our hopes for an electrification of the Hastings-to-Ashford line were dashed when Connex failed to gain an extension of its franchise. Only a few weeks ago, we were dealt a body blow when the integrated transport review denied us the A21 improvements and the bypass which is so essential to the regeneration of our town. What other seaside town has the main road along its seafront, choking both visitors and residents alike? We must wait, and I am sure that we shall do so optimistically, for the Government to decide to go ahead with that important bypass.

In the past few weeks, the town's largest employer, Philips, closed up shop. Although it is fair to say that Philips made it clear that neither Government policy nor the strong pound determined that decision, the fact is that several hundred jobs have been lost in an already impoverished economy. Hastings now has about the highest unemployment and lowest wages in the south. Wage levels are little above half the regional average. That is a fair argument for saying that the minimum wage should have no ill effects.

The area is rich in human resources. Voluntary organisations are paramount in assisting with the problems that exist. In partnership with the statutory agencies and the commercial world, they work hard in planning economic advance. The Hastings Trust led by Christine Goldschmidt, the 1066 Enterprise spearheaded by John Cossen, and the new Labour council led by Richard Stevens, are working tirelessly and single-mindedly to bring about regeneration.

We are grateful for the help received through the assisted area status and through successive successful single regeneration budget bids. Full advantage has been taken. Indeed, assisted area status has brought some £3 million to the town since 1993, and that has locked in a further £37 million of industrial investment. The single regeneration budget has produced £14 million, which has generated £90 million from other sectors. About 1,000 jobs have been created as a consequence. Therefore, we make good use of investment. Despite all that, there remains a structural weakness in the economy, just as there is in Brighton along the coast.

The purpose of this speech is not to hold out a begging bowl. Hastings is a proud town. It is to say that poverty exists, not just in northern towns, but in southern climes such as Hastings, Brighton and elsewhere. When three of the wards in my town have household social security claimant rates of 52 per cent., 49 per cent. and 48 per cent., that is real poverty. When we hold the record for the highest number of suicides in young men in the country, that suggests that the area is close to despair. There may be a north-south divide; there is certainly a south-south divide between prosperous Surrey, which is included in our GNP figures, and impoverished Hastings and Brighton. We are the poor relations of a rich family.

Shortly, Hastings, together with Brighton and Hove, will make a joint bid, entitled "Turning the Tide", for objective 2 status. I hope that these comments will help the Minister to understand why the claims of southern towns such as Hastings and Brighton are equally, if not more, valid than those of other parts of the country for this special status. The new urban strand within the objective 2 now gives an opportunity to aid not only areas that have faced traumatic industrial decline, but areas that have slipped into an abyss of poverty through decades of neglect. I am confident that the Government will listen to these pleas. The inhabitants of Hastings and St. Leonards must not be ragged-trousered philanthropists any longer.

9.23 pm

Mr. Bob Blizzard (Waveney): Last but not least comes Lowestoft—a long-standing pocket of high unemployment and deprivation at Britain's most easterly point.

There is every sense in amalgamating objectives 5b and 2, because, under the current system, at the last round Lowestoft applied for objective 2 and ended up with 5b as the only way of meeting the overwhelming case that was presented. How can a town of 70,000 be a rural area? Strange things happen in the European Union. Of the East Anglian 5b areas, Lowestoft has the best record of submitting projects and accessing funds. However, as so many hon. Members have said this evening, the job of regeneration is far from complete, and it is essential that the designation for structural funds continues for Lowestoft.

I am pleased with the strands that have been identified for objective 2. I am pleased that fishing is still one of them. The decline in fishing was the reason why Lowestoft received 5b funding last time. If Lowestoft, as the second largest fishing port in England, with all the problems that face fishing communities, does not fit the criteria, I do not know where the criteria can apply.

I hope that the strands can be considered in combination, because Lowestoft is also an urban area facing economic and social restructuring. We have lost all our shipbuilding, our food canning factories, a coach works and a shoe factory. The oil and gas industry, which has seen us through in recent years, is now downsizing in a dramatic way. None of those industries has been replaced.

The Select Committee in its report, and the Government, oppose the Commission's proposal for consistency or coterminosity between the structural fund areas and our national assisted area status. It is right to reserve that flexibility. However, in some areas there will be a good case for coterminosity. Lowestoft and its neighbour Great Yarmouth have only five miles of countryside between them; but the previous Government awarded assisted area status to Great Yarmouth, not Lowestoft. Lowestoft but not Yarmouth was awarded European status, possibly as an admission of the mistake in not giving Lowestoft assisted area status.

Any review must take Lowestoft and Great Yarmouth together. They are of a similar size. They are close together. They are a long way from anywhere else, out on the east coast, surrounded by a rural area. They both have high, long-term, structural unemployment, much higher than the unemployment in the hinterland. They are both ports with poor transport links, and they both have involvement in the oil and gas industry. Many of the businesses are interlinked. Many businesses have a presence in each town. People travel to work between the two communities. There has to be a single strategy for both.

We need flexibility, so that objective 2 can cover relatively small areas, as the existing objective 2 cannot. I went to Brussels and lobbied for objective 2 for Lowestoft last time. It met every criterion for objective 2 status, but it was not big enough. We were told that objective 2 had to be awarded to larger areas, and that East Anglia was considered relatively prosperous. Yet within that relatively prosperous area there are unemployment black spots, Lowestoft being the main one.

Last time, the Commission did not favour a black spots approach. It did not believe that regional assistance could be that precise or benefit specified areas. Lowestoft and Great Yarmouth are isolated from the rest of the country and any other areas that might benefit. People ask how else a town such as Lowestoft is to be helped. How are pockets of long-standing unemployment to be dealt with unless we use the structural funds to which we believe we are entitled? The report is right to argue on page 47, as the Government do, that the Commission should not take raw unemployment figures, but should consider other measures of economic difficulty.

The key statement in the report is that regeneration requires continuity. So many of us have argued tonight that we need that continuity. Lowestoft continues to need the European structural funds.

I wonder whether the Minister can take up an important point that has made life difficult in making the best of structural funds. Quite properly, when one submits a project, one has to be specific about the job outcomes. It is difficult to create jobs unless the private sector is involved, yet private sector money cannot be matched by European money. That is a problem for us when it comes to transport. We want to improve our port and our rail links. Railways and ports are almost all private. Associated British Ports is a private company. Railtrack is a private company. It is difficult for those companies to provide their money as match funding for Europe.

Because in this country transport systems, including ports, are largely privatised, we are at a disadvantage compared to other European countries, which can use structural funds for transport infrastructure improvements. We cannot reverse the privatisation, and have no plans to do so, but we need to argue in Europe that, because those privatised companies fulfil a public function—an essential transport function—when bids are put together, the money that those companies can bring to the project should be able to be matched by European funding.

I shall end on that point. I have made my plea for Lowestoft, but I hope that it will help other constituencies if we can tweak those regulations.

9.29 pm

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): The Select Committee's report is extremely helpful. The subject was clearly introduced by the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) and it has spawned an interesting debate. As my hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins) said in his helpful contribution, we are all basically on the same side. We are all informing the Minister and encouraging her to go out and negotiate for Britain's interests, which include getting the largest possible chunk of resources for this country, in some recompense for imbalances elsewhere.

Of course, there were differences of emphasis, for which no apology is needed. It is right that, under our constitution, Members of Parliament have the duty to represent their constituents, to express their pride in their constituency and to explain the needs of their constituency. That was done by hon. Members on both sides of the House, and rightly so. Their speeches revealed not only some of the tensions that are bound to pass into the debate and that will have to be brokered into and through Europe, but some of the underlying concerns that serve to unify us.

I found it instructive to hear the serious speeches made by hon. Members representing constituencies on the south coast of England, those representing urban areas and those representing rural areas. The House knows that I come from a rural background. I am closely involved with Action with Communities in Rural England, and I see that as part of the debate. It would be a foolish member of any party who came to the House and boasted of having no pockets of deprivation in his constituency—to some extent, all our constituencies contain such areas. The question is how we organise their interests and balance them against each other under a principle.

It appears to me that the concern expressed by many hon. Members related as much to issues of relative deprivation and poverty in the middle of affluence as to objective measures. That concern was clearly expressed by hon. Members representing south coast constituencies, and the conditions which they described can be seen in wards in my own constituency. It is uncomfortable to live in such areas, cut off from ready access to higher education, transport links and jobs.

How do we put our concerns together into a policy, bearing in mind the fact that Europe has to change its policy under extremely severe constraints? Let us start with those constraints and with a health warning. It is accepted by hon. Members on both sides of the House, as it was by the Select Committee, that there are important constraints on the EU budget and that they are closely linked to the mounting requirement for the EU to take seriously the issue of enlargement and to finance it as it develops.

It is worth pointing out that any problems of deprivation experienced in our constituencies, wherever they may be, pale into insignificance in comparison with the real poverty and deprivation that characterise most of the countries applying for membership. If we think that some areas in this country should have objective 1 status, those countries should be objective zero. Interestingly enough, when Germany was shattered after world war two, the catch phrase used was "hour zero". That betokens a degree of hope, because, from that shattered state, Germany rebuilt itself and became a successful industrial nation.

There are constraints, which it is necessary coherently to broker and resolve. Nobody has seriously argued that we should not try to target the European funds available better. One point which was not sufficiently stressed is that not all public funding is necessarily distributed at a European level. We are discussing European structural funds, but there is the possibility of public funding from outside Europe. We can debate at another time how that should be balanced and where it should come from. The Select Committee suggested—I agree with it—that we should not use the same template for the state aids map and the European assisted area map because we would deprive ourselves of flexibility, which is what everyone wants the Minister to secure for us.

Continuity is also important. We do not want those who have had support or who have reached different stages in developing schemes—even if they are not included in the current programme—to be cut off at the knees and suddenly to find that they have no support at all.

The final general criterion is common sense. There is no point in pushing a doctrine derived from Brussels beyond the bounds of political acceptability—that is why the concept of the safety net is so much to be welcomed—or practicability. That is why it is important that the criteria are defined reasonably flexibly. I welcome the tone of the debate and—if I may anticipate her—the Minister's readiness to take those messages aboard.

My next remarks are less congenial but need to be made. They particularly concern the rural areas of England. We welcome the fact that political support is clearly developing on all sides for the maintenance of aid for the Scottish highlands, on the analogy of northern Europe, and for Northern Ireland, for important political and objective economic reasons. However, there is a danger that there will be a significant withdrawal of support for the rural areas of England through the winding up of the separate 5b objective.

Before the change of Government, I was the Minister responsible for the agricultural portions of 5b, and I realised its ability to target precise, small-scale and wider rural problems. That was at a time when agriculture was doing relatively well. In or near the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale, I toured the camping barns scheme. In the constituency of the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Ms Atherton), I went to see the work of the South-West Horticulture 2000 initiative, which was trying to bring together the wonderful production of her county and Devon. There is tension, not only because of the suggestion that Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales may benefit, but because English rural areas under severe pressure may lose out. In addition, despite the hon. Lady's welcome for objective 1, which I understand, there is a danger that Cornwall and Devon, which have not traditionally worked together but were integrated in the South-West Horticulture 2000 project, may now be given separate objective statuses.

Ms Atherton: The hon. Gentleman is aware that, if Cornwall achieves objective 1 status, Devon would be well placed to achieve objective 2. We are working with our colleagues in Devon because we want to pull together as a peninsula. What is good for Cornwall will, in the long term, be good for Devon.

Mr. Boswell: I welcome that. I want merely to identify a potential cause of friction through differential treatment. If that can be resolved, so much the better.

We may be able to learn the lessons of flexibility and the virtues of comparatively small-scale, targeted interventions, partnerships and local initiatives. Those are important points which have been stressed by Members on all sides of the House. We hope that we can include them in the new structures and regulations.

Another point which came across strongly—I reiterate it from my own experience—is the need to streamline decision making on the one hand and bureaucracy on the other. We had much difficulty launching 5b in the south-west. It generated a lot of ill will initially because it was very slow to get off the ground and people had to become familiar with the provision. It was complicated and, as challenge funding, was not guaranteed in the traditional manner of agricultural grants; we had to come to terms with that difference. Anything that can make the process simpler, within the bounds of accountability, is very welcome.

We wish the hon. Lady and Her Majesty's Government well in supporting British interests during the negotiations. We are fortunate in having had this constructive report and debate. However, it will be impossible to satisfy everyone—even all hon. Members—and, in fairness, I think that both the House and the Government should accept that constraint on their achievements.

9.40 pm

The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry (Mrs. Barbara Roche): I agree with the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), who speaks for the Opposition on these matters, that this has been a very good debate. Hon. Members on both sides of the House have made contributions of an enormously high standard which have really taken the issue forward. I thank all hon. Members who have participated in the debate for their words of encouragement. Such a united view will strengthen the Government's hand in the negotiations.

The hon. Member for Daventry and practically every hon. Member who has spoken this evening commended the Select Committee on producing an excellent report. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on the elegant and thorough way in which he presented the Select Committee's report and case. The House is indebted to the Select Committee for the way in which it has produced the report and the opportunity that it has presented to have this debate this evening.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood outlined the importance of the structural funds and what they mean. My hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Ms Atherton) also spoke passionately on that subject. For many people in our country, the structural funds and how they are used in their areas are a manifestation of the European Union. I am very pleased that the Committee's report broadly supports the Government's position on several key points. For example, the report refers to the need to contain the cost of the funds, the need for some flexibility for member states in selecting eligible areas under objective 2, and the treatment of sparsely populated regions in the United Kingdom.

Very importantly—this has been a theme of the debate—the report highlights the need for increased simplification, which is a key area of negotiation. We made considerable process in that direction during our presidency of the European Union. The hon. Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) and my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Lepper) made that point when they spoke about the need for simplicity. It is important that the reforms should lead to fewer objectives, less bureaucracy, a broader partnership and a much simplified system of payments. Hon. Members also referred to cohesion funding, and I agree with the comments by my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood.

The Committee researched the report thoroughly. It took evidence from a wide selection of those with an interest in this reform, including several local representative organisations such as the Local Government Association, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and some local partnerships. A great strength of the report is that it is so comprehensive.

I gave evidence to the Committee in May in order to set out the Government's view. The Government replied to the Select Committee report by way of a memorandum, and I want to cover a number of those points today. Since the publication of the Agenda 2000 communication in July 1997, we have said that the reform of the structural and cohesion funds must be affordable and fair to all existing and future member states, including the UK and its regions. It must deliver an outcome that is durable, sustainable and capable of applying in the next programming period and beyond that into 2006 without increasing costs unmanageably or introducing inequalities.

Affordability must be set in the context of current levels of spending and of the prospect of an enlarged union, which was a point raised by the hon. Member for Daventry. That inevitably means that, at some point, the present 15 member states must expect to sustain reductions in both coverage and receipts.

Miss McIntosh: Given that Britain receives 9 per cent. of the structural funds and the fact that, although we are a net contributor, we are now the fourth poorest member state and have been described in one report today as bottom of the league, does the Minister accept that there should be a limit to the reduction that we are prepared to accept?

Mrs. Roche: Let me explain to the hon. Lady—I am aware of her experience in these matters—that that is why the Government are taking such a rigorous view in the negotiations. We accept that reductions will have to be made, but our position is that they will have to be on the basis of fairness to the United Kingdom. The Committee takes a very sensible view that it is probably better done sooner than later and that the programming period after 1999 should prepare member states for eventual enlargement. It also makes the important point that it must be fair. Cuts in population coverage must be proportionate across member states, everything else being relatively equal, and no member state should receive more per capita than it does now.

We agree that the Commission's proposals, which would increase funding in real terms are difficult to reconcile with other principles within the proposals such as concentrating or reducing the areas that receive funding. The Select Committee also covered such issues. That is the basis for our insistence on the structural and cohesion funds element of the budget being kept well below 0.46 per cent. of EU gross national product to avoid the possibility, pointed out quite correctly by the Select Committee, of more money for fewer people. We must absolutely avoid that outcome.

Conceivably, there could be a case for objective 1 if we had to accept a position where two thirds of the structural funds' coverage—and possibly the money—went to objective 1 areas or if, following the Select Committee's suggestion, objective 1 was limited to the poorest 20 per cent. of regions. If it meant that the budget was reduced commensurately, that would be welcome, but we could not support a situation that led to increased intensities of support.

The Government support the Select Committee's view that strict application of the 75 per cent. GDP criterion might cause the UK some difficulties, but that is not what the Commission proposes. The draft regulations already specify some exceptions, such as ultra-peripheral regions and objective 6 sparsely populated areas whether or not they meet the 75 per cent. GDP criterion. In our view, that shows that GDP is not the only indicator of genuine need, and we need to look very carefully at the totality of objective 1 and its eligibility criteria. This is our basis for arguing, as we have done consistently, for a sparsity of population criterion to address the needs of areas such as the highland and islands. We welcome the Committee's support for them to be treated on a par with member states in a similar position, such as Finland and Sweden. We heard powerful speeches in this regard from my hon. Friend the Member for Inverness, East, Nairn and Lochaber (Mr. Stewart) and from the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Morgan).

We welcomed the Cardiff Council's commitment to assisting the peace process in Northern Ireland, particularly its recognition that the European Union

"should continue to play an active part in promoting lasting peace and prosperity in Northern Ireland".

Much of the discussion this evening has been on objective 2. The Committee identified correctly the difficulties in interpreting the Commission's proposals for objective 2. Unifying the industrial, rural, urban and fisheries areas within a single objective 2 would advance the aim of simplification. That point has been made. Unfortunately, however, it could also impose complex and apparently artificial distinctions that would automatically exclude from consideration some areas of need. We are working hard to ensure that all strands are dealt with properly. The rural strand was rightly discussed by the hon. Members for Vale of York (Miss McIntosh), for North Norfolk (Mr. Prior) and for Daventry. The fisheries strand was mentioned by the hon. Member for North Norfolk and by my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Blizzard), who both made important points.

In the negotiations, the Government continue to emphasise the importance of flexibility to target areas of need, even if those are concealed within relatively prosperous areas. That was a recurrent theme of this evening's debate, powerfully expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Burton (Mrs. Dean). The need for flexibility was emphasised by hon. Members on both sides of the House, including my hon. Friends the Members for Eccles, for Brighton, Kemptown (Dr. Turner), for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Foster), for Hemsworth (Mr. Trickett), for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) and for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg). It is important that we make it clear that in the UK we need the flexibility to target funds where they are most needed.

I am grateful for the Committee's recognition of the value of the safety net. It limits the loss of coverage for objective 2 and 5b areas to no more than one third and is an important achievement for a number of UK areas. As we gain a better understanding of the process, the benefits of the Government's achievement in establishing the safety net will become apparent.

One of the strengths of the past few months has been the contribution of local partnerships and organisations in shaping the proposals and the negotiations. We have worked together to present a united and coherent case in Brussels. I thank all hon. Members, Members of the European Parliament and members of local authorities throughout the country who have worked so hard with me and my officials. I take this opportunity to thank all my officials too, who have worked tremendously hard in the Department and in our permanent representation in Brussels. I am grateful for all the work that they have done. The importance of delivering for the UK as a whole was pointed out by the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins).

In developing UK policy and the positions for the negotiations, we have held a number of local, regional and national consultations since the publication of the Commission's proposals and have sought to reflect the views gathered along the way in the on-going discussions. I am grateful for all the participation that has taken place. We must make sure that the united front continues.

The Government agree with the Committee that bureaucracy surrounding the funds should not be a bar to access for any organisation, however small. In the negotiations to date—initially this was under the United Kingdom presidency—we have been able to secure agreement to some of the general principles that support the universally agreed aim of simplification of the funds: making them more effective and, most important, better value for money. That was an important first step in a reform proposal as radical as the one that we are discussing. We should not underestimate the scale of the task and of this particular achievement, given the divergent views across member states on the detail of the proposed negotiation.

The focus of the presidency earlier this year was primarily to simplify the administration of the funds. In this, we achieved a high level of consensus among member states. The informal meeting of EU Regional Policy Ministers in Glasgow in June achieved several important levels of agreement on a number of principles: the importance of job creation and employability and of regional competitiveness; the values of effective partnership between the Commission, national Governments and regional and local organisations, and of a clear definition of role for all of them; and the need to bring decision making as close as possible to the people it affects—that was very much a recurring theme of our debate this evening—in other words, more regional and local control over the structural funds delivery.

All of us want to protect the good name of the structural funds. We want the system to operate as democratically as possible. That is why the negotiations and discussions on simplification are so important. All those involved in the funds want to develop a less burdensome and more efficient system for their administration from the year 2000 onwards. It is clear that everybody wants to do that.

It is clear also that complex negotiations are ahead if we are to reach agreement on a fair and transparent system. A great deal more work has to be done, particularly on objective criteria, eligibility issues and finance, if we are to get the system right. There has been discussion this evening about the Community initiatives, which we know have led to some useful partnerships and have provided funds outside the objective areas. However, they have proved complicated to administer and they are not always the best way to address strategic issues. We have supported a reduction in their numbers. The mainstream objectives should be sufficiently flexible to accommodate activities currently included under Community initiatives. At present, there is still very little detail from the Commission about the three initiatives that are proposed, but they clearly must add value to the main objectives in terms of the structural funds.

The Cardiff Council set a deadline of March 1999 for agreement to be reached in the Council on the Agenda 2000 package, which of course goes wider than the structural funds. The deadline is important. As I have said, we recognise that much work will need to be done to achieve it. We will need to make every effort to ensure that it is met.

I am grateful to the Select Committee for its work and to all hon. Members on both sides of the House who have lent their support in such a positive and constructive way. It is clear that, in the months that lie ahead, we need to continue to work together so that a strong UK voice is heard. In that way we can get the right result for the United Kingdom as a whole.

9.58 pm

Mr. Berry: With the leave of the House, I first thank my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry for her comments and for the evidence that she and her officials gave to the Select Committee during its hearings. That evidence was extremely helpful and useful. I am naturally grateful, on behalf of my colleagues, for the kind remarks that all hon. Members have made about the Select Committee's report. More important have been the comments that individual Members made on specific aspects of this important issue.

In the final sentence of the first paragraph of the report, we said that the report was the Committee's first, but not necessarily its final, word on reform of the European structural funds. Whether hon. Members regard that as a promise or a threat is entirely up to them. It was a brief inquiry following concerns that arose at a meeting in Brussels this February. We may well return to the issue.

I was encouraged by the unanimity of hon. Members. It was of some significance that no one argued that his or her constituency should get less resources. All argued that there should be more, or at least the same, because of important social needs and the need for regeneration and tackling poverty. I will mull over that observation as I go home, because when there is unanimity on such an important point—

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That for the remainder of the present Session of Parliament the House shall not sit on any Friday and the provision of paragraphs 3 and 4 of Standing Order No. 12 shall apply to all such Fridays.—[Mr. Allen.]

Disabled Access

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Allen.]

10 pm

Mr. Don Touhig (Islwyn): I welcome this debate because it is another chance to highlight the problems faced by people with a physical or learning disability. Since I became president of Caerphilly Access, I have been impressed by the commitment and innovation showed by disabled and able-bodied members determined to raise public awareness of the problems that disabled people face. Like most people, I can walk unaided and I am not impaired, but the fact is that in Wales one in six people are impaired in some way. In the United Kingdom, it is one in eight. Access for the disabled is thus a matter of considerable importance to a significant number of people.

Like many people who work with, and on behalf of, disabled people, I welcome the initiatives that the Government have taken so far, notably the setting up of the disability rights task force. Steps are being taken to create a disability rights commission; and there is the planned implementation of part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 next October. However, the fact remains that many of the rights that able-bodied people enjoy and take for granted are denied to those who have an impairment.

Access to trains for those confined to wheelchairs is woefully inadequate in many parts of the country. At my nearest railway station at Pengam on the Valleys line, only one platform is suitable for wheelchair access. A disabled passenger who wanted to go to Cardiff by train would have to join the train travelling north to Rhymney and stay on it when it travelled all the way back to Cardiff. At another station on the same line, there is a ramp leading to the platform but there are steps at its top and bottom. My two examples are all too commonplace. On that line, only one station has full facilities for disabled people. The situation is unacceptable to every disabled person and it should be unacceptable to every able-bodied person.

I do not want to limit my remarks to transport, important though that is, but I want to touch on the implementation of regulations that affect buses and coaches. The time scale means that existing single-decker buses will not have to be wheelchair accessible until 2015. The date for double-deckers is 2017. If bus and coach operators are not required to make their vehicles fully wheelchair accessible sooner, the emphasis that is being placed on park-and-ride schemes will have a damaging impact on disabled people. Similarly, the proposed two-mile parking exclusion zone around the millennium dome will make the experience inaccessible to disabled people unless the transport network is fully accessible to them.

Even in our schools, disabled pupils are caused further distress by the lack of proper access. Local education authorities have a responsibility to provide facilities for disabled staff, and even for parents with physical disabilities, but astonishingly, there is no requirement to ensure that schools are properly accessible for disabled pupils.

I am told that LEAs often say that they will provide facilities for disabled pupils when the need arises, but experience often shows that when need is established, the combination of a lack of funds and a lot of red tape means that very little is done.

Rightly, the education of our children is at the core of the Government's agenda, and I know that my hon. Friend the Minister will use her considerable influence to ensure that no child misses out on education because of a physical impairment.

Our disabled fellow citizens have conscientiously battled for years to gain the same rights as able-bodied citizens take for granted, but they have been, and continue to be, denied that equality because of lack of access—to transport, to education, to buildings, to public parks, to open spaces and in some cases to basic services.

For example, access to a telephone box may be denied because the telephone is out of reach or the booth is too narrow for a wheelchair. Access to buildings is denied because there are too many steps, no ramps, narrow doorways or no toilet facilities suitable for disabled people. Access to democracy too—access to the vote itself—is denied because of inaccessible polling booths and lack of adequate facilities in polling stations.

The disabled groups whose members I have talked to recognise that improving access is often a technical issue, and that technical solutions and financial resources are needed to put things right. Those solutions will be achieved only if local authorities become more proactive in devising and developing policies that will improve and promote greater access.

It is because local councils are the major providers of services in the community that they must not be allowed to ignore the crucial role that they have to play. I do not suggest for one moment that councils willingly ignore the problems faced by physically disabled people and those with learning difficulties. However, because of the many demands on them, unless we in the House and as a Government place responsibilities on them by statute, we will have only piecemeal solutions, different in different parts of the country.

For that reason I argue that it should be the duty of each local authority to enter into a contract with disabled people—a form of citizens charter that will guarantee that disabled people's needs are recognised and addressed. Local authorities must work in partnership with voluntary organisations and local disability groups.

A good example of that partnership approach—indeed, a role model for others—is the access group in my borough that I have already mentioned. Caerphilly Access, which has been working on behalf of disabled people for the past 10 years, has been innovative in bringing home to planners, engineers and architects the impact that their work can have on people with a physical disability. It has encouraged able-bodied people from local authorities' highways, planning and architects departments to sit in wheelchairs and try to get from, say, a major supermarket to a local bus or railway station.

The people involved have gained first-hand experience of how to negotiate all the obstacles that disabled people alone have to contend with when they try to journey through a busy town centre. That approach has helped those who have the responsibility for designing and constructing new buildings and for maintaining and developing our infrastructure to see the impact of their decisions on someone confined to a wheelchair.

Those people now have a better understanding of some of the problems that plague disabled people every day of their lives, which the able-bodied usually do not even realise exist. More importantly, the objective of such an exercise is to ensure that access issues are taken into account by local authorities when policy decisions are made.

Caerphilly Access members regularly arrange site meetings with officials from the local council's highways department to look at such things as high kerbs, poorly installed dropped kerbs, and lamp standards set in the middle of pavements which prevent anyone in a wheelchair from passing by with safety.

Those initiatives underline the importance of partnership between voluntary groups campaigning for disabled people's rights and their local authorities. I therefore hope that my hon. Friend will examine ways in which all local authorities might be required to appoint an officer working in partnership with the voluntary sector, whose brief would be to ensure that the issues vital to the quality of life of disabled people were recognised and tackled. Additionally, all councils should be required to have a mission statement setting out their vision, and making it clear that improving the quality of life for disabled people in their community is as important as providing nursery education or caring for the elderly. That mission statement would underpin a council's contract with its disabled citizens.

When I was a councillor, and chairman of my local authority's finance committee, we ensured that every report from every committee had a paragraph setting out the financial implications of every recommendation in the report. Why cannot we have exactly the same, but covering the impact of recommendations on disabled people?

Mr. Tom Levitt (High Peak): My hon. Friend is making a positive and valuable contribution. I am sure that in talking about the needs of physically and learning-impaired people, he does not wish to exclude visually and hearing-impaired people, because everything he has said applies to them as well.

Does my hon. Friend agree that the major barrier that disabled people face is in the perception and awareness of other people as to their needs? Central and local government therefore have an obligation to set a good example, and my hon. Friend has cited a good case from his area. He may not be aware that I was in the United States last week, but I can assure him that a change in culture and attitude can and does happen, and that there is evidence from that country that it can be done.

Mr. Touhig: There is much that we can learn from the United States, which has been progressive and encouraging in showing the pattern that we can follow.

I have stressed the role of local councils because, most often, they are the first point of contact a disabled person turns to for help, and here a one-stop-shop approach would be welcomed. Local councils are taking part in best practice initiatives sponsored by the Government, but the needs of disabled people are being ignored in this exercise. Why are we not covering the important needs of disabled people?

One invaluable aid to identifying the problems of disabled people is the access audit. Recently an audit of every library in my borough revealed that all the fire alarms gave an audible warning of danger, but not a visual one. That is not much use if one is deaf or has a hearing impairment. That example demonstrates that the need to improve access goes much further than simply improving the physical access to buildings. Experience has shown that many access audits conducted by local councils are often carried out in a hurry and without the person responsible possessing any relevant experience.

Following the general election, many councils carried out access audits of their polling stations, and I very much welcome that. However, there is no statutory requirement on local authorities to carry out access audits for parks, open spaces and buildings. I took my twin granddaughters to a park last Sunday. They had a wonderful time, and I enjoyed the quality time that I spent with them. However, if I had been in a wheelchair, I would not have been able to get into the park because the only access was up a large flight of steps. I hope that the Government will consider making it a duty for local authorities to carry out access audits for parks and open spaces.

I said at the outset that the Government's decision to implement part III of the Disability Discrimination Act was very welcome, but it is essential for every local authority to meet the target for 2004, when they and all other service providers will have to make reasonable adjustments to the way in which they provide their services. So far as local councils are concerned, they should be instituting a rolling programme of work to meet the deadline—they should not come up to the deadline and then try to do the work in a short period of time.

I recognise that many authorities are taking action, but many are not. Improving access is not just about removing physical barriers. The problem facing people with learning disabilities stems not from physical barriers or the absence of reasonable adjustments, but rather from an unwillingness on behalf of providers of services to treat disabled people on equal terms. Mencap told me recently that 10 adults with learning disabilities were refused admission to a pre-booked party in a pub because the landlady considered that they would constitute a breach of the fire regulations and disturb the comfort of her regular customers.

Access for people with learning disabilities depends on much more than providing ramps. In another case, a Mencap employee with a learning disability who travelled to work daily by bus found that the bus turned into a garage one morning. Passengers were asked to disembark and find their own way out. The person with the learning disability was left abandoned on the bus, feeling confused and lost.

Often people with learning difficulties need no more specialised help than a positive and enlightened attitude on the part of those working in the public sector, the service industries and, yes, from us, their fellow citizens. Access for a person with a learning disability can be improved in a number of relatively straightforward ways. For example, transport can be made more accessible, not merely for the disabled but also for the elderly, by the use of large-print timetables, clearer signs at stations and bus stops, and clearer spoken announcements. Too often, a person with a learning disability will be confused by a sign reading, "Please use another route", when it should read, "Please use another bus". If service providers—in short, staff—receive the necessary training to enable them to respond to a person's specific needs, significant strides will be made towards improving access.

In health care, we must guarantee that a learning disability will not be a barrier. Worryingly, Mencap's recent report "Health for All" revealed that health authority inequality is very much a reality for people with learning difficulties. Despite the high incidence of hearing and visual impairment, Mencap's survey showed that few of them have regular hearing and eye tests. To access the health service, people with learning disabilities need information that they can understand and services that can understand them—in terms of knowing how to communicate and being able to work in a way that accommodates the extra time that it might take to deal with the problems of a person with a learning disability.

We must ensure that people with learning disabilities do not miss out, by providing health promotion information that they can understand. All our citizens must be given the chance to make the most of their lives. The new deal for the disabled is a good example of how partnership between Government, local authorities and the voluntary sector can significantly help to break down barriers to employment for disabled people.

Members of Parliament have a duty to enable all people with impairments to take a full and active part in their communities and in society as a whole. Only by removing the barriers that restrict access, both physical and conditional, can we make equality of opportunity not merely a dream for people with disabilities, but a reality.

In this House, we are privileged. We can make things happen. We have an opportunity to help to build a Britain in which all our people feel equally valued, involved and included, instead of ignored, isolated and excluded. For me, that is the true meaning of inclusivity.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Islwyn (Mr. Touhig) on securing this debate on a topic that is not only of particular importance but that, as his contribution illustrated, is so wide ranging, affecting every aspect of our national life. I also thank him for his generosity in affording our hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Levitt) an opportunity to contribute to the debate. This Government are committed to achieving comprehensive and enforceable civil rights for disabled people in both the workplace and society at large.

In October 1997, we announced our strategy. First, we set up the disability rights task force to consider how best to secure comprehensive, enforceable civil rights for disabled people and to make recommendations on the role and functions of a disability rights commission—a major strand in our strategy. The task force, chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Disabled People, is due to report on its wider considerations no later than July 1999 and submitted its recommendations on the commission before Easter. We hope to legislate for the establishment of a DRC at an early opportunity. Finally, we announced our commitment to implement fully part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, which deals with rights of access to goods and services.

Since 2 December 1995, part III has placed duties on those providing goods, facilities and services—defined as "service providers"—not to discriminate against disabled people. From 1 October 1999, service providers will be required to make reasonable adjustments to policies, procedures or practices that exclude disabled people and to provide auxiliary aids and services to facilitate access. From 2004, where there is a physical barrier to service, service providers will have to take reasonable steps to remove, alter or avoid it.

On 30 July, the Department for Education and Employment, which leads in this area, launched a public consultation covering new requirements to make goods, services and facilities more accessible to disabled people. Access to transport is not only a civil rights issue, but a matter of social justice. We want high-quality transport designed for everyone—that means transport that is not only affordable but accessible.

A recent audit carried out by the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation on disabled people's perception of the Government's achievements had transport ranked very high in the list of priorities. It is, of course, a priority for us all—our daily lives depend so much on our ability to get from place to place.

Some improvements—which have been based on research carried out by my Department and advocated by our statutory advisers, the disabled persons transport advisory committee—have already been made, including the introduction of low-floor buses, which offer step-free access. Many of those buses also have facilities for wheelchair users. All inter-city trains are accessible to wheelchair users, and many other services are now able to offer that facility. Accessible taxis, too, are more generally available, particularly in the larger towns and cities.

My hon. Friend the Member for Islwyn was concerned about access to the millennium dome site. I reassure him that there will be dedicated parking spaces for orange badge holders. Indeed, the Jubilee line extension, which we expect to carry the bulk of visitors, will be fully accessible.

We have the opportunity with the Disability Discrimination Act to create a fully accessible public transport system that will significantly improve the independent mobility of millions of disabled people. Specific technical standards will be set in regulations covering buses, coaches, trains—including underground, light rail and tramways—and licensed taxis. The technical standards will include means to travel in a wheelchair and facilities for those with low vision, hearing impairment, walking difficulties, poor balance and so on. I have been privileged to witness several innovative schemes that deal with the problems that people with learning difficulties frequently experience in their attempts to use public transport.

Discussions with DPTAC and relevant transport industries have developed the framework for the regulations. Consultation documents on our draft proposals for taxis, buses and coaches were circulated for wide public consultation last year. They included detailed technical standards and proposed implementation dates. For full-size single-deck buses, we proposed a start date of 1 January 2000, with an end date of 1 January 2015 for all such vehicles to meet the requirements. On taxis, we consulted on the basis of a start date of 1 January 2002 and an end date of 1 January 2012. For double-deck buses, we proposed a start date of 2002 and an end date of 2017, but I am happy to inform the House that the industry has told us that all new double-deck buses may meet the requirements by 2001.

The next stage for buses and coaches, as for taxis, will be to draw up draft regulations and carry out a further round of public consultation before the final regulations are introduced. An implementation date of 31 December 1998 for all rail vehicles was written into the primary legislation, but it became clear when we came into government that the consultation process would have to be accelerated if we were to provide industry with sufficient time to meet the requirements.

Consultation on draft regulations was carried out in the late spring of this year and the final regulations have been laid before Parliament. Subject to completion of the parliamentary procedures, the regulations will come into force on 1 November.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Islwyn pointed out, accessibility is not only about having the right vehicle. We must also ensure that the whole journey is seamless, which means that the infrastructure must be right. The provisions of part III of the Disability Discrimination Act, which deals with access to goods, services and facilities, will apply to railway and bus stations as to any other building to which the public have access.

In the meantime, we will be issuing guidance to transport operators and local authorities on the steps that they should be taking now—in advance of part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995—to examine every aspect of their service provision. That also includes pavements, roads and so on and I hope that my hon. Friend will take some reassurance from that.

My hon. Friend also touched on the issue of access to buildings. That is dealt with by part M of the building regulations, "Access and Facilities for Disabled People", which covers new buildings and extensions including a ground floor. At present, part M covers non-domestic buildings, but later this month regulations will be laid before the House extending the requirements to all new housing.

The statutory requirements require reasonable provision to be made for disabled people to gain access to and to be able to use the building. The provisions cover facilities for people with mobility difficulties, sight and hearing difficulties, areas to which both my hon. Friends the Members for Islwyn and for High Peak referred. Guidance on how the requirements may be met are set out in an approved document. This guidance is not prescriptive and alternative ways of satisfying the statutory requirements may also be acceptable.

The extension to new housing will require access to the principal entrance storey of the dwelling, movement within the principal living storey, and accessible toilet facilities. The object of these requirements is to enable disabled people to visit the homes of friends and relatives and to enable older people to remain in their own homes longer. The requirements do not expect to provide full living conditions for disabled people as these will vary according to the nature of the disability. The approved document for part M will be republished in early November. Separate guidance is also being prepared on how to meet the technical aspects of providing an accessible threshold to the entrance of new dwellings.

[Ms Glenda Jackson]

The requirements for access to new housing will take effect 12 months after the laying of the regulations, affording time for housebuilders to adjust to the new requirements.

Part M of the building regulations does not apply to existing buildings, but the duties on employers and service providers in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 require reasonable steps to be taken to remove physical obstacles to access. Those duties already apply in the case of employers and will apply to service providers from 2004.

My hon. Friend the Member for Islwyn referred to access audits. They are one way in which employers and service providers may assess what alterations may be required to their premises. There is no statutory obligation to carry out such audits, nor do we believe it reasonable to impose one. We believe that access audits are best advocated as good practice. Both the Access Committee for England and the Centre for Accessible Environments offer guidance on how such audits may be carried out, and the Centre for Accessible Environments has a panel of experts for carrying out such work.

I am sure that we all agree that, regrettably, this is still a developing scene. The form that an audit takes needs to be tailored to the particular circumstances of each case and building. A broad-brush statutory requirement for such audits could well be, in the present emerging state of the art, a charter for cowboy practices in an area where it is overwhelmingly important to establish confidence in the credibility and realism of such audits and those who perform them.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Islwyn pointed out, most local authorities have appointed an access officer and there is an Access Officers Association which affords support for its members. However, it is possible to combine that role with other duties, normally within the building control or planning departments. We believe that this matter should be left to the discretion of individual local authorities.

I hope that I have been able to demonstrate to my hon. Friends that the Government are fully committed to ensuring that disabled people do not face discrimination in accessing employment, housing, transport and the built environment. We have already made progress towards that and the plans that I have outlined this evening will take us further towards that goal, which, as my hon. Friend the Member for Islwyn pointed out, will be achieved only be everyone working in the closest and most detailed, sympathetic and sensitive of partnerships.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-nine minutes past Ten o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

India

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list recipient projects of the United Kingdom aid budget to India in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and if she will make a statement. [52468]

Mr. Foulkes: A list of UK development projects for India in 1997–98 and 1998–99 follows. (Where a project was supported in only one of these years, the appropriate date is indicated). Total expenditure on the India bilateral programme in 1997–98 was £68.9 million. A new Country Strategy Paper for India is under preparation. This will reflect the priorities set out in the White Paper on International Development. It will also consider the implications, including the economic and financial implications, of the recent nuclear tests when assessing prospects for partnerships and poverty reduction.

China

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her visit to Lanzhou during her official tour of China. [52349]

Mr. Foulkes: Gansu province is one of China's poorest. During her visit in June, the Secretary of State held constructive discussions with representatives of local government (at county and provincial levels) about a proposed basic education project, the emphasis of which will be on access to and the quality of education for minorities and children, especially girls, in the poorer counties. The Secretary of State also took the opportunity to visit an EU-assisted irrigation project in the province.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the environment agreements with China, entered into during her recent official visit. [52350]

Mr. Foulkes: During her visit in June, the Secretary of State signed a memorandum of understanding on environmental cooperation with the Chinese State Environment Protection Administration (SEPA). The memorandum provides a framework for cooperation between Britain and China on a number of China's highest environmental priorities including water pollution, urban air pollution and toxic and hazardous wastes. The Secretary of State also left with SEPA an outline proposal for a substantial new project to assist the local authorities in Yunnan Province with planning for environmentally-sustainable development. SEPA have welcomed the continued emphasis on the environment within the Department for International Development's new country strategy for China and the introduction of a strong poverty focus.

PRIME MINISTER

Lobbyists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what is his role in determining who will participate at meetings arranged by lobbying organisations where members of his Policy Unit speak under Chatham House rules. [50463]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 July 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 16 July 1998, Official Report, column 254. I have today published guidance for all civil servants setting out the basic principles which should be followed in any contacts with people outside Government including lobbyists. Wherever and whenever such contacts take place they should be conducted in accordance with the Civil Service Code and the principles of public life set out by the Nolan Committee. I have placed a copy of the guidance in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions on 25 June telephone calls were made from No 10 Downing Street to the mobile phone number supplied to him in the letter from the hon. Member for Pendle of 22 July. [52479]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 624.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to give a substantive answer to the question from the hon. Member for Pendle concerning the business relationships notified to him by Mr. Roger Liddle (Ref. 49655). [52395]

The Prime Minister: Shortly.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Housing (Rateable Value)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many residential properties, by number and percentage per region, have a rateable value. [50441]

Angela Eagle: No rateable values have been set or updated for residential properties since 31 March 1990 when the domestic rating system was abolished. The following table estimates the dwelling stock in each region at the end of December 1997, less the number of those dwellings built since 31 March 1990.

Government office region	Dwellings (000)	Percentage of dwelling stock
North East	1,047	95
Yorkshire and the Humber	1,999	95
East Midlands	1,614	93

Airports (South-east England)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of slots at Heathrow Airport are used for regional air services. [51150]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government do not collect this information themselves, but according to a report prepared by Airport Coordination Ltd. for the current summer season about 15 per cent. of slots are allocated to domestic services (plus Isle of Man and Channel Islands). This compares with 17 per cent. for the winter 1997–98 season.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the slots at Gatwick Airport are used for (a) regional air services and (b) charter services. [51151]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department does not collect this information itself, but according to a report prepared by Airport Coordination Ltd., for the current Summer season at Gatwick Airport approximately 11 per cent. of slots are used by regional air services (including Isle of Man and Channel Islands) and approximately 26 per cent. of slots are used for charter services. For the previous, Winter 1997–98 season, the comparable figures were 15 per cent. and 18 per cent. respectively.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentage of slots (i) used for regional services at Heathrow airport and (ii) used for charter services at Gatwick airport in each of the last five years. [51152]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information is readily available only for the last three years. The following figures have been provided by Airport Coordination Limited:

Percentage of slots at Heathrow airport used for regional (i.e. domestic, plus Isle of Man and Channel Islands) services

	Percentage
Summer 1995	17

Road Safety and Congestion

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will discuss with the Home Secretary the inclusion within the objectives for the police service of new targets for (a) reducing road accidents and (b) improving the operation of buses in congested areas. [51812]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We regularly discuss the full range of road safety and road policing issues with Home Office Ministers. We have given a commitment in the White paper, A New Deal for Transport: Better for everyone, to set a new target for the reduction of road casualties by 2010 (para 3.219) and the police are ready to play their role in helping meet that target. We have also said (para 3.101) that a different approach to traffic management would be adopted whereby more space would be given to pedestrians, cyclists and public transport. Local authorities will set out their proposals for delivering integrated transport in the new 'local transport plans' (paras 4.73–4.77). Local authorities will need actively to involve a wide range of organisations—including the police—in drawing up these plans.

Southern Water

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will instruct Ofwat to review Southern Water's site selection procedures for sewage-treatment plants; and if he will make a statement. [51874]

Angela Eagle: No. The location of sewage treatment plants and other development by water companies is regulated through the development control system.

Mesothelioma

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of deaths from mesothelioma in each of the last 10 years by health authority, region and nationality. [51898]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive maintains registers of deaths in Great Britain for which mesothelioma is mentioned on the death certificate. The number of mesothelioma deaths in each of the last ten years by region is shown in Table 1. The latest year for which data are available is 1996. Although information mesothelioma deaths is not available by health authority or nationality, an analysis by country district based on deaths in the period 1976 to 1991 was published in Health and Safety Statistics 1995–1996. More recent figures for the years 1993 to 1995 by country district were given in a reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham) on 12 February 1998, Official Report, column 318.

Combined Universities (Cornwall)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the co-operation between his Department and the Department for Education and Employment on the combined universities in Cornwall. [52206]

Mr. Caborn: I welcome the close cooperation between my Department and the Department for Education and Employment that has helped to foster the new joint approach to the development of higher education in Cornwall through the Combined Universities in Cornwall initiative.

Workplace Parking Charges

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if local authorities will be able to levy the proposed new parking charge on workplace parking on employees of (a) Government departments, (b) non-departmental public bodies, (c) executive agencies, (d) NHS health authorities and trusts, (e) local authorities and (f) TECs. [52231]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" (Cm 3950), the Government said that it proposed to legislate to enable the parking charge to apply to all types of workplace parking. We shall consult in due course on any possible exemptions.

Road Construction and Maintenance

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department has spent or will spend on road construction and maintenance in each of the years from 1997–98 to 2005–06; and if he will break down the total for each year to account for (i) strategic motorway and trunk road construction, (ii) bypass schemes and (iii) motorway and trunk road maintenance. [51948]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: In 1997–98 the Highways Agency spent £1,457 million on national road expenditure of which some £528 million was spent on strategic motorway and trunk road construction, £157 million was spent on bypass schemes and £582 million was spent on maintenance. We plan to spend £1,349 million in 1998–99 of which £363 million is for strategic motorway and trunk road construction, £82 million is for bypass schemes and £651 million is for maintenance.

Future resources for expenditure on motorway and trunk roads are being determined in the light of the Chancellor's announcements of 14 July. We shall announce figures in due course.

Quarrying

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals his Department has to improve the environmental performance of the quarrying industry. [52051]

Mr. Caborn: The quarrying industry itself has an essential part to play in improving its environmental performance and demonstrating its commitment to sustainable development in its current operations and in framing proposals for new or extended quarries. It is for planning authorities to determine individual application, attaching appropriate conditions, within the framework of national planning policy and guidance issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The Department commissions research and issues guidance on a range of issues associated with minerals extraction eg noise, dust, traffic and blasting to ensure that new planning permissions are implemented and operated in accordance with the latest standards. In addition, legislative procedures and guidance are in place to ensure the updating of old mineral permissions to modern standards.

Looking ahead, the Department is proposing further research in the environmental costs and benefits of quarrying in order to inform the decision to be taken by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on whether or not to introduce an aggregates tax. This would benefit the environment by reducing the demand for new materials and encouraging the use of recycled materials and quarrying waste. The position on the tax remains exactly as I made clear at a meeting I had with the Quarry Products Association on 29 April and at their seminar on 12 May. There are two options. Either the Government proceed to introduce a tax—subject always to the discretion my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has in matters of taxation—or they find that the industry collectively can offer a deliverable package of alternative measures which will secure equivalent or better environmental benefits when taken in the round.

Fair Rent Cases

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of pre-1988 protected tenants whose bi-annual rent reviews fall due in (a) 1 January to 31 March 1999 and (b) 1 April to 30 June 1999. [52125]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The Rent Officer Statistics published by my Department for the first and second quarters of 1997 suggest that the number of fair rent cases in England which would fall due for bi-annual review in the first 6 months of 1999, if the tenancies still exist, are as follows:

1 January 1999 to 31 March 1999—17,106 private regulated tenancies and 24,477 secure lettings by Registered Social Landlords

1 April 1999 to 30 June 1999—19,848 private regulated tenancies and 29,797 secure lettings by Registered Social Landlords

Garden Hedges

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to reach a decision on legislation to deal with the height of leylandii trees and other high garden hedges in domestic gardens. [52256]

Angela Eagle: We are considering whether there is a need for Government intervention in relation to leylandii trees and other high garden hedges. We will announce our conclusions in due course.

Gas-powered Vehicles

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will change the formula for standard spending assessments to encourage local authorities to operate vehicles powered by LPG. [52323]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are already providing financial assistance to local authorities to purchase vehicles operating on LPG through the Energy Saving Trust's Powershift programme. This refunds up to half of the additional capital cost of vehicles designed to run on alternative fuels such as LPG. Standard Spending Assessments are not a suitable mechanism for dealing with such a specific and detailed matter as this.

Area Cost Adjustments

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce further changes in area cost adjustments. [52336]

Ms Armstrong: We are examining with local government a wide range of possible changes in the way area cost adjustments are calculated. We expect to announce our conclusions early in December.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessments he has made of the SSA per head of population allocated to Norfolk relative to other counties in the eastern region in each year since 1992–93; and if he will publish them; [52331]

(2) if he will list (a) the SSA per head of population and (b) the annual percentage increase in SSAs for each of the counties in the Eastern Region for each year since 1992–93. [52356]

Ms Armstrong: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Table 1: SSA per head of population in the Eastern Region 1992–93—1998–99

Notes:

1. "Old" refers to the area served by the County Council before Local Government Reorganisation; "New" refers to the area after reorganisation.

2. The SSA per head of population is calculated using the mid-year population used in that year's SSA calculations adjusted for boundary changes.

3. Some of the differences between years reflect the changing range of activities for which local authorities have been responsible.

Notes:

1. "Old" refers to the area served by the County Council before Local Government Reorganisation; "New" refers to the area after reorganisation.
2. Adjusted SSAs are SSAs for the previous year, adjusted to allow like-with-like comparisons. They have been adjusted for changes in function and for Local Government Reorganisation.

The information supplied has been provided for those counties within the area of the Government Office for the Eastern Region.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those services provided by county councils which his Department denotes as incurring greater costs in sparsely populated areas. [52357]

Ms Armstrong: Standard Spending Assessments include a measure of sparsity of population in relation to all services provided by county councils, other than Personal Social Services, the Fire Service, and Highway Maintenance. In the case of Highway Maintenance, the formula takes account of the length of road which is the responsibility of the council, thereby reflecting the greater needs of rural authorities which have a greater length of road per head of population than urban authorities.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list in order of sparsity the counties of England and Wales using (a) the definition of settlement size used by the Scottish Office and (b) the definitions of sparsity and super-sparsity used in the SSA formula for England and Wales. [52354]

Ms Armstrong: A list based on the definition of sparsity and super-sparsity used in the SSA formula for England will be placed in the Library of the House. A list giving the information based on the definition of settlement size used by the Scottish Office will also be placed in the Library, if it proves practical to produce the figures.

Figures relating to Wales are a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that the 1999–2000 SSA settlement does not penalise counties which historically have spent at relatively low levels. [52337]

Ms Armstrong: We shall ensure that the SSAs are as fair as can be achieved for all types of authorities.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those indications of need in the standard spending assessment formula which measure (a) population characteristics indicating eligibility for benefits and (b) actual take-up of benefits. [52360]

Ms Armstrong: The following indicators in the Standard Spending Assessments formulae are either direct measures of actual take-up of benefits or are closely linked with take-up; children of income support claimants; elderly on income support; payments to those aged 18–64 on income support; all claimants on income support; claimants on attendance allowance; claimants of unemployment benefit; long-term claimants of unemployment benefit; young males claiming unemployment benefit; rent allowance payments; and housing benefit claimants.

The formulae include other measures of population characteristics which would tend to be associated with entitlement to benefits; but these measures are not defined in terms that indicate the numbers eligible for benefits.

A complete list of the indicators used in the Standard Spending assessment formulae is set out in the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1998–99, which the House approved on 5 February 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department will publish the results of further research into the specific cost approach to the area cost adjustment within the standard spending assessment. [52405]

Ms Armstrong: The research which the Department commissioned on a specific cost approach to the area cost adjustment was completed in May. Its reports have been discussed in detail with local government representatives reflecting the range of views on area cost adjustment. We expect to announce decisions on the SSA formulae early in December.

Rural Transport

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what definition of rural sparsity is currently applied by his Department for rural transport purposes. [52355]

Ms Glenda Jackson: "Rural Sparsity" has not been defined by my Department for rural transport purposes. However, the £32.5 million Rural Bus Special Grant recently approved by Parliament, will be distributed in proportion to the rural population in each eligible local authority area. 'Rural population' is defined as those living outside built-up areas of 3,000 people or more as shown by the 1991 census.

Air Pollution

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of his Department's audit entitled, "Local Authority Progress on Implementing the Local Air Pollution Control Regimes"; and what action he proposes to take based on the report's findings; [52530]

(2) what assessment he has made of his Department's audit entitled, "Remedying the failures of local air pollution"; and if he will make a statement. [52531]

Angela Eagle: My Department commissioned an independent audit of the Local Air Pollution Control regime earlier this year and a preliminary assessment has been made of the auditors' report: "Local Authority Progress on Implementing the Local Air Pollution Control Regime". The auditors were asked to take into account a report by the Environmental Industries Commission "Remedying the Failures of Local Air Pollution Control".

Our preliminary assessment was that the report showed that considerable progress had been made in reducing air pollution from the wide range of regulated sources, but that there were areas where improvements were needed. The report's 30 recommendations were addressed variously to the Government, local authorities and local authority organisations, and relevant professional bodies.

A detailed joint response and action plan covering all the recommendations is now being prepared.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy that the issues of Antarctic Ocean pollution and sanctions against heavy polluters of the atmosphere are put on the Buenos Aires Summit agenda; and if he will make a statement. [52489]

Angela Eagle: The Buenos Aires Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Climate Change will develop the rules and procedures for implementation of the Protocol to reduce greenhouse gases which was adopted at Kyoto. As such it will not cover pollution of the oceans or deal with other forms of atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he plans to take to ensure that local authorities publish the reasons for the non-enforcement of pollution control standards at particular industrial sites. [52532]

Angela Eagle: This is an issue we will be considering carefully when implementing EU Directive 96/61/EC concerning integrated pollution prevention and control.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the Government intend to achieve a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions. [52491]

Angela Eagle: We aim to issue a consultation paper this summer on policy options to deliver our legally binding commitment from Kyoto to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. over the period 2008 to 2012, and move towards our domestic aim of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010. We will be building on the outcome of other reviews and looking at the scope for savings from improved energy efficiency by business and in the home; lower transport emissions; and an increase in the electricity generated from renewables and combined heat and power.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the role of Nuclear Energy in the proposed reduction of carbon dioxide emissions. [52488]

Angela Eagle: Nuclear power currently contributes significantly to United Kingdom electricity supply needs and also plays an important part in helping the UK to meet its commitments on reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Provided the nuclear industry can maintain high standards of safety and environmental protection, the Government believe that existing nuclear power stations should continue to make this important contribution.

Figures published in the UK's second national communication on climate change, showed that nuclear power generation was projected to lead to savings in carbon emissions of about 3 million tonnes per year by 2000. The Department of Trade and Industry is working on a new set of energy and carbon dioxide emission projections which the Government hope to publish later this year.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the implications of Her Majesty's Government's policy on the future of the coal mining industry for future emissions of carbon dioxide; and if he will make a statement. [52486]

Angela Eagle: The preliminary conclusions of the Government's Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation reaffirm the Government's determination to meet their climate change targets and state that the proposals are consistent with a decline in carbon emissions from the electricity generating industry.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to ensure at the forthcoming Buenos Aires summit the implementation of the measures agreed on carbon dioxide production at the Kyoto Summit in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [52490]

Angela Eagle: The Kyoto Protocol established legally-binding targets for developed countries requiring an overall reduction in their emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases to 5.2 per cent. below 1990 levels in the period 2008 to 2012: but it left a number of matters to be further developed. It is indeed my right hon. Friend's policy to ensure that the Beunos Aires Conference in November makes substantive progress on these matters, with a view to maintaining the momentum of Kyoto and achieving early entry into force and implementation of the Protocol.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of local authorities do not have an inspection policy or do not routinely inspect polluting factories in connection with air pollution control laws; and what measures he proposes to improve enforcement of air pollution control laws by local authorities. [52535]

Angela Eagle: My Department issued guidance to local authorities in 1995 on types and frequency of inspection under the Local Air Pollution Control regime. Information is not obtained centrally on whether local authorities have an inspection policy, but data held by my Department show that 9,400 routine/programmed inspections were carried out by local authorities in 1996–97 in relation to this regime. The recent Local Air Pollution Control audit raised concerns about local authority inspection and action to address this and to improve enforcement of the Local Air Pollution Control system is being drawn up in response to the auditor's report.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to publish local authorities' enforcement policies with regard to the air pollution control laws. [52533]

Angela Eagle: Guidance issued in 1994 by the former Association of District Councils recommended that local authorities produce and publish an enforcement policy on air pollution control. My Department is in discussion with the Local Government Association concerning the re-issue of that guidance.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of local authority authorisations in respect of air pollution control laws have not been reviewed to take account of new pollution concerns or technologies. [52534]

Angela Eagle: The finding of the recent audit of the Local Air Pollution Control regime was that, from the sample of processes examined, upgrading had been completed in 90 per cent. of the authorisations by the relevant deadline contained in statutory guidance.

Rural Bus Challenge

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to consult rural bus customers about the Rural Bus Challenge; and if he will make a statement; [52484]

(2) if he will undertake to consult parish councils on the Rural Bus Challenge; and if he will make a statement. [52485]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The criteria and arrangements for the rural bus challenge have been the subject of recent consultation with the Local Government Association and other organisations. We will shortly be issuing guidance to local authorities which will suggest consultation with appropriate individuals and bodies, which could include parish councils, in preparing bids for the challenge competition.

Motor Cycle Licences

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend current arrangements for granting provisional motor cycle licences within a two year validity period. [52829]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has today issued a Consultation Paper about a range of possible options for amending the current two year rule. A copy of the paper has been placed in the House Library.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the annual cost of protecting sites of special scientific interest at risk from water abstraction, water pollution and groundwater contamination. [52403]

Angela Eagle: In its May 1998 submission to the Government entitled A Price Worth Paying the Environment Agency, in consultation with English Nature and the Countryside Council of Wales, identified sites of special scientific interest at risk due to water companies' abstractions and discharges. The cost of dealing with these sites, as estimated by the water companies, was given in the Director General of Water Services' open letter to the Secretaries of State of 30 April 1998. We shall take the costs into account together with the Agency's advice in determining the guidance we give the Director General later this summer on the environmental obligations which water companies will be expected to meet through the Periodic Review of water prices. Copies of A Price Worth Paying and the Director General's open letter are in the Library of the House.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what target he sets for the length of time he takes to reach a decision after receipt of an inspector's report on a planning inquiry. [52398]

Mr. Raynsford: Where the Secretary of State takes the decision on appeals, he aims to decide 80 per cent. of cases within eight weeks of receiving the Inspector's report. This is stated in paragraph 59 of Planning Policy Guidance Note 1, 'General Policy and Principles'. In those cases where the Secretary of State calls in applications for planning permission, he aims to issue 80 per cent. of decisions within 13 weeks of receipt of the Inspector's report.

Concessionary Fares (Pensioners)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations he will conduct with district and parish councils about the implementation of his proposals for nation-wide concessionary fares for pensioners; and if he will make a statement. [52648]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The matter will be considered when the necessary primary legislation is being prepared.

Water Extraction

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with representatives of the agricultural industries about his proposals for water extraction; and if he will make a statement. [52645]

Angela Eagle: The Government published a consultation paper on the Review of the Water Abstraction Licensing System in England and Wales on 19 June. The paper takes account of the wide range of submissions we received, including contributions from all the major bodies with an interest in agricultural issues. We are inviting responses to the detailed proposals contained in the consultation paper by 7 September. Representatives of the National Farmers Union discussed the Review when they met my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 2 July.

Building Regulations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he intends to take to ensure an effective transfer to the application to new dwellings of Part M of the Building Regulations (access and facilities for disabled people). [52764]

Mr. Raynsford: I am today issuing a consultation paper on the transitional arrangements for the Building Regulations amendments which I announced in March this year. These amendments will extend access requirements to new houses from October 1999.

I am proposing that the transitional provisions should ensure that new buildings where construction work starts on or after the coming into force date of the regulations will in general be subject to the new Part M requirements. However, new buildings begun after the coming into force date in accordance with full plans deposited with a local authority at least two months before that date, or in accordance with plans covered by an approved inspector's plans certificate accepted by a local authority before the coming into force date, will not have to comply with the new requirements.

In this way the transitional provisions will distinguish between cases where detailed design work has been completed and submitted to the relevant building control body before the coming into effect of the regulations, and other cases. This will prevent developers from giving premature building control notices simply in order to gain exemption from the new requirements for houses that have not been designed and could not be built until long after the coming into force date.

The Department's consultation letter sets Wednesday 9 September as the deadline for receipt of responses. After assessing the responses, and subject to the outcome of the separate process of notifying the technical changes to the European Commission, I intend to make and publish the new regulations, and a revised Approved Document, in October.

Copies of the consultation letter are being placed in the Library.

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to cover (i) domestic and (ii) international air travel. [52461]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our priority is to implement the provisions of Part V of the Act dealing with access to trains and trams, buses and coaches and to licensed taxis. These modes are fundamentally important to day to day mobility for many disabled people.

We will be considering whether it is appropriate to apply any of the requirements of the Act to air travel and other modes of transport not currently included.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 467, if he intends to seek further advice on the legality of already approved trials of genetically modified crops. [52475]

Mr. Meacher: My Department is considering whether there are any implications for consents for trials of genetically modified crops already issued under Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 as a result of the recent judgment in the case of R v the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, ex parte Watson.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures and precautions were taken to avoid genetic pollution through cross-pollination to adjacent crops when the ACRE committee was approving licences of all the GMO trial plots that are currently licensed. [52494]

Angela Eagle: Each application for consent to release GM plants for experimental trials must provide the information set out in the schedule to the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1995 and includes a detailed environmental risk assessment. This must address the potential for cross-pollination of adjacent crops and sexually compatible flora in the vicinity of the trial site. On the basis of this risk assessment the applicant must state what risk management procedures will be implemented to minimise cross-pollination. Examples of these procedures include specific isolation distances, borders of non-GM plants to act pollen traps and, in some cases, removing the flowers of the GM plants.

The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment reviews applications for release consent on a case by case basis to determine whether the proposed management procedures are sufficient. In each case where the Committee judge that the management procedures are inadequate they give advice on the additional precautions to be taken. These additional measures are then made on condition of the consent.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Servants

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women are employed in the Lord Chancellor's Department at each Civil Service grade. [52642]

Mr. Hoon: For the Lord Chancellor's Department, including the Court Service and the Public Trust Office, the information is set out in the table.

Grade	Number
Senior Civil Service	14
Grade 6	18
Grade 7	101
SEO	128
HEO	541
EO	1,429
AO	2,980
AA	201
Support Grade	1,275
Total	6,687

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women magistrates have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [52654]

Mr. Hoon: Of the 1,664 magisterial appointments made in the period between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998, 851 were women.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judicial appointments there have been since 1 May 1997 to (a) the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords of Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, (b) the Court of Appeal, (c) the High Court, (d) the County or Crown Court Bench, (e) the Queen's Bench Mastership, (f) the Chancery Division Mastership and (g) the District Judiciary. [52643]

Mr. Hoon: The table gives the numbers of judicial appointments in the categories mentioned since 1 May 1997:

Judicial appointments	Number
Lords of Appeal in Ordinary	1
Lords Justices of Appeal	5
High Court Judges	9
Circuit Judges	39
Masters of the Queen's Bench Division	0
Masters of the Chancery Division	3
District Judges (excluding District Judges of the Family Division)	37

Circuit Judges may sit in the county courts, the Crown Court or both. It is not therefore possible to provide separate figures.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many women have been appointed to the County and Crown Court bench since 1 May 1997. [52653]

Mr. Hoon: Eight women have been appointed as Circuit Judges since 1 May 1997.

Circuit Judges may sit in the county courts, the Crown Court or both. It is not therefore possible to provide separate figures.

Magistrates' Courts (Closures)

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates' courthouses were closed in each year between 31 March 1994 and 31 March 1998. [51622]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department did not collect information on the number of magistrates' courthouses prior to October 1995. The number of courthouses in use as reported by magistrates' courts was 525 in October 1995, 492 in April 1997 and 472 in April 1998.

TREASURY

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49818]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 13 July 1998]: HM Treasury is already able to correspond electronically with members of the public, with Government and non-Government organisations and with hon. Members, through its website on www.hm-treasury.gov.uk. All Treasury officials have their own e-mail addresses for corresponding over the Internet. The Department is looking carefully at ways to develop its use of electronic communication. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315.

Petroleum Products (Smuggling)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what resources are being deployed by Customs and Excise to counter the illegal importation of petroleum products into Northern Ireland. [51902]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Customs and Excise are currently deploying local anti-smuggling, intelligence, antifraud VAT audit staff, as well as national investigation officers, to tackle the problem of cross-border smuggling of duty paid fuel into Northern Ireland for resale. Customs are also working closely with other authorities, including the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

£2 Coin

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the significance of the symbol on the obverse of the new £2 coin; and for what reasons the phrase 'standing on the shoulders of giants' appears on the rim of the coin. [52434]

Mrs. Liddell: The design on the obverse of the new £2 coin traces the progress of technological development, with concentric circles representing the Iron Age, the Industrial Revolution, the Electronic Age and the Internet. The "circular" theme was inspired by the coin's two-colour appearance.

The inscription "Standing on the Shoulders of Giants" on the coin's milled edge comes from a letter written by Isaac Newton in which he acknowledged how much he owed to the work of others. It was chosen from several suggestions as best encapsulating how the progress of the present has only been possible because of the achievements of the past.

Travel Companies

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that (a) ferry companies, (b) scheduled and charter airlines and (c) hovercraft operators will be fully consulted before final decisions are agreed between United Kingdom and Commission officials on the successor regime for duty and tax-paid sales after 30 June 1999; and when the consultation process will begin. [52449]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Customs and Excise have been in discussion with UK trade interests on the possible nature of the successor regime and will continue to consult with interested parties on the implementation of the regime. Any interested persons who want to make representations should address them direct to Customs and Excise:

HM Customs and Excise,
Excise Policy Group Branch 4,
Third Floor, Ralli Quays West,
3 Stanley Street,
Salford M60 9LA

High Technology Companies

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 478, what recommendations have been made by the group established to examine the financing of high technology companies; and if he will make a statement. [52298]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I am grateful to the Working Group on the Financing of High Technology Businesses for their work in examining the financing issues faced by this important sector of the economy. The Government are now considering how to take this work forward.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the current sterling exchange rate on (a) employment and (b) manufacturing in the United Kingdom. [52594]

Mrs. Liddell: The economic effects of the exchange rate are difficult to isolate without assumptions about factors such as the strength of world trade growth and domestic demand. A full assessment of the economic situation including a forecast was given in the FSBR.

Alcohol and Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the estimated cost to the Exchequer of the smuggling of drink and tobacco from the mainland of Europe in the last year for which figures are available. [52290]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The table sets out Customs' most recent estimate of revenue losses (duty and VAT) to the Exchequer through cross-channel smuggling of alcoholic drinks and tobacco products in calendar year 1997.

Revenue lost to the Exchequer from smuggling in 1997

£ million

Product type	Excise duty	VAT	Total revenue lost
Beer	80	40	120
Wine	35	15	50
Spirits	20	5	25
Total alcohol	135	65	195
Hand-rolling tobacco	430	110	540
Cigarettes and other tobacco products	120	25	145
Total tobacco	550	135	690

Notes:

Figures have been independently rounded to £5 million. Components may not therefore sum to the totals given

Figures are given for the mid-point of the range of possible substitution effects. Customs assumes that 70–80 per cent. of smuggled alcohol (100 per cent. for tobacco products) substitutes for similar purchases in the UK

There are no official estimates for the revenue lost through smuggling in freight consignments or by air passengers, and the estimates given do not include any amounts for these types of supply.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the impact on UK wholesalers of the smuggling of (a) alcohol and (b) tobacco from the European mainland. [52293]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I have no information about the consequences of alcohol and tobacco smuggling relating to UK wholesalers in particular. However, the Government are very much aware of the illegal trade in alcohol and tobacco goods and its effect on the legitimate trade. In his July Budget last year my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced a review to examine the effects of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping. The Government will announce the outcome of the review shortly.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions about Non-Accelerating Inflation Rate of Unemployment are incorporated in (a) the Treasury and (b) the Bank of England model of the economy; and how they have been changed in the last 10 years. [52156]

Mrs. Liddell: The assumptions underlying the determination of the non-accelerating rate of unemployment in the Treasury model are set out in the "The New Treasury Model" by Chan, A., Savage, D., and Whittaker, R., (Government Economic Service Working Paper no. 128), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The underlying assumptions have changed little in recent years. The Bank of England model is the responsibility of Bank officials.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions about the relative shares of GDP going to (a) wages and (b) profits are incorporated into the Treasury model of the economy; what are the shares presently allocated; and how they have changed over the last 10 years. [52155]

Mrs. Liddell: The assumptions in the Treasury model yield approximately constant shares of GDP going to wages and profits in the long run. The long run shares will largely reflect historical averages.

Housing

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 463, from the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, if he will estimate the loss of revenue incurred by reducing VAT on the refurbishment of 415,000 dwellings to 5 per cent. [52157]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The average cost of bringing an empty dwelling into good order is £6,500. This figure was given to my hon. Friend in the answer of the 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 463, by the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The revenue cost of reducing the rate of VAT from 17.5 per cent. to 5 per cent. on refurbishment costing £6,500 on each of 415,000 dwellings would be approximately £300 million.

European Union

Dr. Vis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EU since British accession. [52232]

Mrs. Liddell: The total of the United Kingdom's net contributions to the EC Budget for the period 1973–74 to 1996–97 is £28.7 billion. The latest estimate of outturn for the financial year 1997–98 is £2.6 billion.

Insurance Brokers Registration Council

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 7 April 1998, Official Report, columns 151–52, what are the Government's plans for the Insurance Brokers' Registration Council. [53230]

Mrs. Liddell: Following my announcement on 7 April, the Treasury has consulted the insurance industry and its customers on insurance intermediary regulation and on the future of the Insurance Brokers Registration Council (IBRC). Most responses identified weaknesses in the present arrangements for general insurance intermediaries. The existing hybrid framework, using the Insurance Brokers (Registration) Act 1977 supplemented by the Association of British Insurers' General Business Code of Practice, was regarded as incomplete and outdated.

Set up under the 1977 Act, the Insurance Brokers Registration Council regulates the use of the title 'insurance broker' and maintains professional standards among those intermediaries who use it. While there was recognition that the Council had provided a valuable service, there was a consensus that circumstances have changed in such a way as to bring its existence in its current form into question. I have therefore decided that proposed legislation to reform the financial services regulatory structure should include power to repeal the Insurance Brokers (Registration) Act 1977. Repealing the 1977 Act will end the statutory basis of the Council.

I now look to the industry itself to put the desired standards on a soundly established footing from which they will command widespread support. The industry proposals for voluntary standards, initially made in response to the recent consultation, are at an early stage. They now require detailed development. The Treasury would support further consolidation of consensus support from insurers, from insurance brokers and other intermediaries, and from commercial and personal customers. They now need to build on the IBRC's work to generate constructive ideas for a modern flexible body to set standards for the insurance market and to meet the challenges it will face in the future.

Survey Holidays

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made by departments implementing survey holidays for small businesses. [53231]

Mrs. Liddell: The Office for National Statistics (ONS) introduced a guarantee in 1997 to firms employing fewer than ten people that, once included in a statistical survey, a business will not have to complete another ONS statistical form for a further three years. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has this year introduced a similar guarantee in respect of transport surveys. An inter-departmental report, which looks at how far the idea of survey holidays could be extended across government departments, has been produced in response to recommendations of the 1996 Osmotherly report "Statistical Surveys, Easing the Burden on Business". A copy of the report on survey holidays and an action plan agreed by department is available in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average prison population per 1,000 population in England and Wales (a) in each of the last five years and (b) on the last date for which figures are available. [51870]

Ms Quin: The information requested is given in the table. The rate quoted for 1998 is based on the prison population at 30 June—the most recent date for which information is available.

Average prison population per 1,000 population in England and Wales, 1993 to 1998

Defamation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to eliminate the criminalisation of defamation throughout Europe. [51933]

Mr. Michael: We are doubtful whether such steps are necessary. Freedom of expression is one of the rights guaranteed under the European Convention on Human Rights which all parties to the Convention are bound to respect. We are not aware of any Council of Europe proposals to decriminalise defamation.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49231]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information requested is given in the tables.

Prisons (Special Managerial Attention)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons are currently under special managerial attention; in each case, how long have such arrangements been in place and if he will give details of the arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [50593]

Ms Quin: Formal arrangements to support establishments requiring special managerial attention were established in August 1997 in a circular issued to governors by the Director General of the Prison Service. Eleven establishments are currently assessed as requiring special managerial attention. These are listed in the table.

The nature of the special managerial arrangements vary according to the circumstances of each establishment. The decision to add or remove an establishment from the list of those requiring closer managerial attention is taken by the Director General, in discussion with the relevant area manager and operational director, and taking into account any view expressed by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons. Progress is routinely reviewed by the Prisons Board. In each case, an action plan is formulated to address identified difficulties.

Doncaster Council

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the estimated costs to date of the police investigation into alleged corruption at Doncaster Metropolitan Borough Council. [52339]

Mr. Michael: I understand from South Yorkshire Police that the estimated cost of the investigation to date is £161,417, including £42,030 in accommodation and miscellaneous services costs.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently serving a prison sentence of over five years having been charged with (a) violent and (b) non-violent offences. [52049]

Ms Quin: The available breakdown, by type of offence, of those prisoners serving sentences of over five years in prisons in England and Wales, is given in the table.

Number[1] of sentenced prisoners serving sentences of over five years,by type of offence England and Wales—30 June 1998

Crime (Care Homes)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, columns 383–84, concerning the British Crime Survey, what timescale has been set for the feasibility study being undertaken by the Office for National Statistics. [52278]

Mr. Michael: A feasibility study into a possible survey of communal establishments is being undertaken by the Social Survey Division of the Office for National Statistics (ONS). A cross-departmental steering group has been set up to address the structure and content of the survey. A final report of the findings from the consultation process will be presented by ONS to the steering group in autumn of this year. If the report is endorsed by the steering group, ONS will consult with departments about a possible funding partnership. At this point, the Home Office will consider whether the survey can viably cover victimisation and whether it justifies funding relative to other research priorities. If it is decided to proceed, the timing of the initial survey will then be agreed by the steering group and ONS.

Police Manpower (West Midlands)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the factors underlying the differences between the number of police officers per 1,000 population in Birmingham and Coventry. [52109]

Mr. Michael: I understand from the Chief Constable that there are 2.67 officers per 1,000 population in Birmingham and 2.51 officers per 1,000 population in Coventry. It is an operational matter for the Chief Constable to decide how to allocate officers to the territorial divisions of the West Midlands Police. Population would be only one of a number of factors which the Chief Constable would consider when decisions are taken about the deployment of resources.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to facilitate the further use of (a) computers and (b) other forms of information technology in the processing of asylum claims. [52061]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 28 April 1998, Official Report, columns 95–96, and to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Allan), on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 620.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of asylum seekers made in-country applications for asylum in each of the last 10 years. [52079]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, in-country 1988 to 1997

Principal applicants

Year	Number of in-country asylum applications	Per cent. of total asylum applications
1988	3,140	79
1989	5,440	47
1990	17,200	66
1991	35,815	80
1992	16,930	69
1993	15,050	67

Applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, in-country 1988 to 1997

Principal applicants

Year	Number of in-country asylum applications	Per cent. of total asylum applications
1995	29,555	67
1996[2]	17,205	58
1997	15,915	49

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest 5 with the exception of 1988

[2] Included revisions to the number of in-country applications lodged between September and December 1996

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has introduced revised targets for the length of time taken to complete different stages in the asylum process following the Comprehensive Spending Review; [52082]

(2) what financial support he proposes to make available to asylum applicants who (a) make an in country application for asylum and (b) appeal against a negative asylum decision; and at what rate of payment; [52066]

(3) what plans he has to change the rights of appeal for asylum seekers who have come through (a) EU member states, (b) the USA, (c) Switzerland and (d) Norway; [52065]

(4) what plans he has to introduce changes in the processing of asylum claims and the rights of appeal of asylum applicants from the White List countries; [52084]

(5) if additional benefits will be made available to asylum seekers presently in receipt of benefit as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review; [52086]

(6) if he will give a breakdown of the support costs for asylum seekers transferred to his Department under the Comprehensive Spending Review; [52087]

(7) what plans he has to change the eligibility of in-country asylum applicants for housing. [52085]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: These and other matters are addressed in the White Paper "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—a modern approach to Immigration and Asylum" (Cm 4018) which is to be published today.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (i) asylum caseworkers and (ii) special adjudicators are currently employed in the processing of asylum claims and the determination of asylum appeals; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the Comprehensive Spending Review on these numbers. [52083]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 1 June 1998, there were 486 officers in the Asylum Directorate processing asylum claims. There are currently 37 full-time and 118 part-time special adjudicators determining asylum appeals. The impact of the Comprehensive Spending Review on staff numbers will be known when more detailed plans have been drawn up.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average length of time currently taken to determine an appeal against an asylum refusal; [52093]

(2) how many asylum applicants have appealed against a negative asylum decision in each of the last five years; and what proportion of asylum applicants receiving a negative decision appealed. [52081]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested regarding appeals against refusal of asylum, 1994 to 1997, is given in the table. I regret that equivalent information for years prior to 1994 is not available.

On average, asylum appeals to the Adjudicator of the Immigration Appellate Authority are taking twelve and a half months to reach a determination.

Appeals against refusal of asylum received by the Home Office, 1994 to 1997

Principal appellants

Year of appeal	Appeals received by the Hone Office	The proportion of those refused asylum lodging an appeal[1] (per cent.)
1997	20,950	83
1996	22,985	78
1994	10,580	78

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken to determine an asylum application from (a) a port of entry asylum applicant and (b) an in-country asylum applicant, according to the most recent figures available. [52153]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested in given in the table.

[1] Estimated from available data

Holloway Remand Pilot Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the Holloway remand pilot scheme for women prisoners. [52639]

Ms Quin: The Holloway remand scheme is not run by the Prison Service. It is run by the independent voluntary organisation, Women in Prison, which is undertaking an evaluation of the scheme's effectiveness.

Prisoners (Mandatory Drug Testing)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost per prisoner of mandatory drug testing; and what impact the programme has had on expenditure on the drug rehabilitation service. [52637]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997–98, approximately £1.5 million was spent on the processing of mandatory drug tests (MDTs). The precise staffing costs involved in the taking of samples for analysis could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but we estimate that around £4.5 million is spent annually on this. Based on an average prisoner population through the year of 62,000, the average cost per prisoner of mandatory drug testing through the 1997–98 year is therefore around £96.

The cost of funding the mandatory drug testing programme has had no impact on expenditure on the drug rehabilitation service. While both are important parts of the overall Prison Service Drug Strategy, the costs of MDT and of the provision of treatment services have been met through separate budgeting arrangements.

Women's Prisons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that the induction processes for new prisoners in women's prisons distinguishes first offenders from repeat offenders. [52638]

Ms Quin: The induction arrangements for women prisoners are tailored to their individual needs, taking account of any available relevant information, including previous criminal history.

Prisoners (Counselling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of ex-drug addicts and ex-prisoners in Downview, Pentonville and Coldingley for counselling prisoners; and what plans he has to extend the system to women's prisons. [52659]

Ms Quin: Work with prisoners addicted to drugs and/or alcohol is currently being undertaken by outside agencies in a number of prisons. In the prisons mentioned, treatment is carried out by the Rehabilitation for Addicted Prisoners trust (RAPt), which has a policy of seeking to employ staff with personal experience of addiction. In many cases, these individuals have also experienced custody. RAPt believes that such individuals are particularly able to understand and motivate imprisoned addicts towards treatment. All of the counselling staff are fully trained counsellors and have to adhere to stringent professional guidelines. It is also a condition of their employment that they do not use illegal drugs or alcohol whilst working for RAPt, and have to submit themselves to security checks by the Prison Service.

The RAPt programmes at Coldingley and Downview have recently been evaluated by independent consultants employed by the Prison Service, and that evaluation indicated that the programmes were among the most effective currently operating in the British prison system.

The Prison Service is considering the use of peer support in its development of programmes for female prisoners.

Prisons (Neuroleptic Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons his Department does not collect the totals of neuroleptic drugs used in prisons; and if he will make a statement. [52241]

Ms Quin: Pharmaceuticals are purchased locally and records about drugs prescribed are also kept within Prison Service establishments using a variety of systems. This makes it difficult to aggregate the information about total usage of neuroleptic or other drugs in a meaningful way.

The Prison Service, in deciding on the range of management information about health care activity that is collected from prisons, tries to strike a balance between the costs involved, including the administrative burden on prison staff, and the possible benefits. However, increasing use of information technology offers the opportunity to broaden the range of statistics that can be readily available and the matter is kept under review.

Women Prisoners (Deaths)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) suicides and (b) deaths from other causes of women prisoners in each of the last five years have been associated with (i) illegal drugs and (ii) medicinal drugs. [52640]

Ms Quin: There have been no deaths of women prisoners over the last five years where it has been confirmed that the death was related to drugs, either legal or illegal.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often the Criminal Cases Review Commission reviews the order of priority of cases referred. [51478]

Mr. Michael: I understand that the Criminal Cases Review Commission assesses applications for priority at receipt and at ten-weekly intervals thereafter.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department of cases so far referred to the Criminal Cases Review Commission, how many (a) have been reviewed and concluded, (b) are currently under active review and (c) are still be to investigated. [51480]

Mr. Michael: I understand that, at the end of June, the Criminal Cases Review Commission had completed 422 cases, 281 were subject to detailed review at that time, and 997 were awaiting such review.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual budget for the Criminal Cases Review Commission in 1998–99; and how many staff are employed to carry out its work. [51481]

Mr. Michael: The currently agreed budget for the Criminal Cases Review Commission for 1998–99 is £4.017m. The Commission has 14 members, and presently employs 51 staff, of whom 27 are case review managers.

Crime Reduction Measures

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department has taken to reduce the incidence of crime against (a) property and (b) the person since 1 May. [51914]

Mr. Michael: Since 1 May this year, the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] has been completing its passage through Parliament and should receive Royal Assent shortly.

Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, my right hon. Friend announced on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 913 that £250 million will be spent over the next three years on a new Crime Reduction Strategy and that significant extra money would be made available for the police, probation and prison services.

The Crime and Disorder Bill's provisions add to other measures taken since the Government came to office, including implementation of Part IV of the Family Law Act 1996, the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 and the Sex Offenders Act 1997.

We have also announced our intention to reform the Offences against the Person legislation and we are currently considering responses to consultation which builds on the work of the Law Commission.

Immigration

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many over-aged children from Bangladesh who had previously been refused an entry clearance visa on the grounds of not being related as claimed but whose relationship has now been established by DNA testing have since been granted entry clearance under the policy change of June 1989; and in how many cases refusal has been maintained. [52714]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Statistics have not been kept on the total numbers of grants and refusals made under the over-age re-applicant concession of June 1989. However, we know that, by July 1991, some 550 cases had been considered under this concession, of which 115 were conceded.

Lancaster Castle

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to renew the lease for the prison at Lancaster Castle when it expires in 2001; and if he will make a statement. [52476]

Ms Quin: The latest prisoner population trends indicate that it will be necessary to keep the prison accommodation at Lancaster Castle in use beyond 2001. However, the final decision will not be made until nearer the time.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take measures to allow the public to visit those dungeons at Lancaster Castle which held the Pendle Witches. [52478]

Ms Quin: There are no plans to allow members of the public to visit these particular dungeons, which are within the perimeter of Lancaster prison. It would not be possible to open the dungeons to visitors without undermining the security of the prison. However, members of the public may visit other dungeon cells in the castle which are outside the prison perimeter.

Bahraini Refugees

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries were made in respect of criminal convictions in Bahraini courts before the decision was taken to grant refugee status to Sheikh Ali Salman, Hamaz Ali Jasim Kadhem and Sayed Haider Hasan Ali; with what result; and if he will make a statement. [52558]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: When considering the cases of the named individuals, the Home Office was aware of their convictions in absentia by the Bahraini courts for a variety of offences.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision was made to grant refugee status to Sheikh Ali Salman, Hamaz Ali Jasim Kadhem and Sayed Haider Hasan Ali; what were the grounds for their applications; what supporting evidence was produced; and what information was sought from the Bahraini authorities. [52557]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Refugee status was granted to the named individuals on 15 July 1998. As information provided by asylum applicants in support of their applications is confidential, I cannot disclose any details of the basis of the claims they made or the consideration which was given to those claims.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Investment Portfolio

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what changes have recently been made to the Commissioners' investment portfolio. [50809]

Mr. Stuart Bell: During 1997 the Church Commissioners conducted a comprehensive review of their investment and asset allocation strategy, which aims to provide stable long-term support for the Church's ministry. As a result they are rebalancing their assets in favour of securities, primarily UK equities whilst reducing their property exposure. Changes to individual holdings frequently occur in the day to day management of a large and diverse investment portfolio.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Gender Impact Assessments

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, columns 557–58, prior to 18 May, what mechanisms were used to determine how legislation passed in the current session would affect women; what consultation she had with women's organisations; and if she will make a statement. [49093]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Guidance on Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment (PAFT) was issued in December 1993 to Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office. Under this guidance policy proposals, including new legislation, are subject to PAFT appraisal to explore: the potential for differential impact on any particular group; and the justification for any differential impact identified.

Eight different groupings are considered as part of PAFT appraisals, including impacts on women.

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland announced on 10 July 1998 that a new statutory obligation on the public sector would replace existing PAFT guidelines.

Consultations with women's organisations were as follows:—

		Organisation
DED	Deregulation (NI) Order 1997	Women's Forum (NI)
DENI	Activity Centres (Young Persons' Safety) (NI) Order	NI Women's Coalition
	Education (NI) Order 1998	Women's Forum (NI) NI Women's Coalition
	Museums and Galleries (NI) Order	NI Women's Coalition
DFP	Occupation of the Family Homes and Domestic Violence (NI) Order 1998	Women's Aid
		Rape Crisis Centre Women's Support Groups
NIO	The Police (NI) Bill	NI Women's Coalition

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 329, if she will list the names of all the Lord-Lieutenants in Northern Ireland and the date when each was appointed. [52012]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is as follows:

Lord-Lieutenants	Date of appointment	Lieutenancy area
Colonel James Eliott Wilson OBE JP	25 April 1991	Belfast
Mr. James Thompson Eaton CBE TD JP	15 April 1986	City of Londonderry
The Right Hon. the Earl of Caledon	15 May 1989	County Armagh
The Right Hon. the Lord O'Neill TD	19 April 1994	County Antrim
Mr. William J. Hall JP	10 October 1996	County Down
The Right hon. the Earl of Erne	20 August 1986	County Fermanagh
His Grace the Duke of Abercorn	20 March 1987	County Tyrone
Sir Michael William McCorkell KCVO OBE TD	13 June 1975	County Londonderry

Integrated Schools

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to allow students with statements of special educational needs to have their statements met with appropriate funding in integrated schools in Northern Ireland. [51833]

Mr. Worthington: The needs of those pupils with statements of special educational needs who are placed in grant aided integrated schools are funded in full by either the Education and Library Board or the Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to allow students with assessed needs to be allowed free school meals whilst attending integrated schools. [51834]

Mr. Worthington: Where entitlement exists, free school meals are provided to pupils attending grant aided integrated schools, i.e., controlled and grant maintained integrated schools. There is no entitlement to free school meals in the independent sector and decisions as to whether certain pupils in independent integrated schools may be offered free meals is a matter for the school authorities. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for the further development of the integrated schools sector in Northern Ireland. [51837]

Mr. Worthington: Government will continue to respond to parental demand for integrated education by supporting robust proposals for new Grant Maintained Integrated schools or for the transformation of existing schools to integrated status. I have also established a working group to examine ways of encouraging and promoting the further development of integrated education.

Springvale Project

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial support her Department plans to offer the University of Ulster to support the Springvale Project. [51835]

Mr. Worthington: On 16 April my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced Government support of £40 million for the Springvale Project (total costs approx. £70 million).

WALES

Sterile Services

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact which the provisions made between the University Hospital of Wales Healthcare NHS Trust and Sterile Services International Limited will have on the provision of sterile services and jobs in that sector in other NHS trusts in Wales. [50715]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The agreement with Sterile Services International will provide better value for money for the Trust in obtaining sterile services and enable it to provide a better service for its 43 other customers who are mainly from the primary care sector in Cardiff. I do not expect there to be an impact on jobs in other NHS Trusts.

Women's Aid

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of funding was provided by his Department to Women's Aid in Wales in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [52249]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Welsh Office provided grant support to Women's Aid in Wales from several sources, including the Children and Families Services Grant Scheme, Housing core grants, and support for local voluntary organisations in Wales. In the years in question the funding provided was as follows:

Year	Amount
1997–98	£386,496
1998–99	£380,611

M4 Traffic Flows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes have been made over the past 10 years in the predictions of traffic flows in the years 2000 to 2010 on the M4 between Tredegar Park interchange and the Coldra. [52196]

Mr. Hain: Traffic predictions made in 1988 were based on the National Road Traffic Forecasts (NRTF) (Great Britain) 1984. From 1989 to 1997 they were based on the 1989 version of NRTF. Predictions from 1997 are based on the 1997 NRTF.

Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Milk Marque

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the decision by major dairy companies not to submit bids in the Milk Marque July 1998 selling round. [52554]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food today, Official Report, column 78.

National Assembly

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to make appointments which will be the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales for periods substantially beyond its establishment. [52397]

Mr. Ron Davies: The policy which I shall continue to exercise this year is to make appointments on the normal basis, including advertisement and open competition, to ensure that the public bodies concerned can be led effectively. However I am also reviewing those appointments which fall due next year with a view to ensuring that the Assembly has the opportunity to exercise its powers of appointment as soon as possible. This will mean the extension of some appointments for a short term, rather than my conducting further appointments exercises after the New Year, in order to allow the Assembly itself to conduct the full appointments procedure for the posts concerned.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to postpone whenever possible taking decisions on matters which will be the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales. [52396]

Mr. Ron Davies: No, this would not be appropriate as Wales needs an active government, making progress with delivering its commitments and taking prompt decisions, between now and the time when the Assembly assumes its responsibilities. At the same time there are some decisions where it would not be appropriate to pre-empt the Assembly and I will have that in mind.

DEFENCE

Professor Glyn Lewis

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 7, if he will make a statement on the medical career and research background of Professor Glyn Lewis. [52064]

Dr. Reid: Professor Glyn Lewis is the Professor of Epidemiological Psychiatry at University of Wales College of Medicine (UWCM), Cardiff. He is leading a project team which will conduct an independent systematic literature review of worldwide published research relating to Gulf veterans' illnesses. This study has been commissioned by the Medical Research Council (MRC) on behalf of the Ministry of Defence (MOD). The team which Professor Lewis has assembled to conduct the systematic literature review has a wide range of expertise. It comprises experts from both UWCM and other academic establishments, in a wide range of fields including epidemiology, toxicology, cancer research, occupational medicine and clinical statistics.

Professor Lewis holds five degrees. These are: a BA (Oxon) in Physiology and Psychology, an MSc (Oxon) in Neurophysiology, an MB BS (UCL) in Medicine, an MSc (LSHTM) in Epidemiology and a PhD (Institute of Psychiatry, London) in Medicine.

He was appointed to his position at UWCM in 1996. Before that he was a Lecturer and then a Senior Lecturer at the Institute of Psychiatry in London (1986–95). During this period he was also a Research Fellow at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (1991–95) and worked on secondment for the Department of Health (1991–94).

Professor Lewis is particularly interested in research methods and systematic reviews. This interest and his combined expertise in the fields of psychiatry and epidemiology are reflected in his work. For example, his recent publications include: 'Systematic review and Meta-analysis (Editorial)' in Psychological Medicine 27: pp 3–7 (with Hotopf, M. and Hardy, R.); 'Discontinuation rates of SSRIs and tricyclic and antidepressants: a meta-analysis and investigation of heterogeneity', British Journal of Psychiatry 170: pp 120–127 (with Hotopf, M. and Hardy, R.); and 'Putting trials on trial: the costs and consequences of small trials in depression', Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health 51, pp 354–358 (with Hotopf, M. and Hardy, R).

Ranges (Income)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the income achieved by the ranges at (i) Aberporth, (ii) Eskmeals, (iii) Kirkcudbright, (iv) Larkhill, (v) Pendine, (vi) West Freugh and (vii) Shoeburyness during the most recent annual period for which figures are available. [52338]

Mr. Spellar: The income achieved by the ranges in the financial year ended March 1998 was:

Range	£000
(i) Aberporth	37,286	—
(ii) Eskmeals	8,759	(Note 1)
(iii) Kirkcudbright	798	—
(iv) Larkhill	3,978	—
(v) Pendine	5,251	—
(vi) West Freugh	6,957	(Note 2)
(vii) Shoeburyness	14,223	(Note 3)

Note 1: Included in the Eskmeals figure is £600k from the Strategic Pricing Initiative which supported the costs incurred in maintaining the VJ Battery, Depleted Uranium Firing Area.

Note 2: The West Freugh income is for the range activities only and does not include income from the operation of the West Freugh Airfield.

Note 3: The income for Shoeburyness is for the range only. The income generated at the site included support under the Strategic Pricing Initiative towards the costs of the site. The income was generated as follows:

Range	£000
Shoeburyness Range	14,223
Environmental Test Centre	2,974
Demilitarisation Facility	3,699

Air Refuelling Tanker Fleet

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to replace the VC10s at Brize Norton with other aircraft; and over what timescale; [48959]

(2) what plans he has to convert the A310 into a multi-role tanker transport; and according to what timescale. [49000]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 8 July 1998]: Plans to replace the RAF's air-refuelling tanker fleet are at an early stage. However current planning assumptions are that we will start to replace the fleet early next century. Among other contenders, we would expect a solution based on the A310 to figure in any competition for this requirement.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long it is planned that VC10s will continue to use RAF Brize Norton. [48960]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 8 July 1998]: Under current plans, VC10s will continue to use RAF Brize Norton until they leave service. Plans to replace the RAF's air-refuelling tanker fleet, of which the VC10 is part, are at an early stage. Current planning assumptions are that we will start to replace the fleet early next century.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last visited the animal experimentation facilities at Porton Down; and what plans he has for future visits. [50637]

Mr. Spellar: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces visited Porton Down on 16 July and inspected animal facilities. I visited on 11 March and inspected new facilities in construction including those for animals. No further Ministerial visits are currently planned.

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on the use of animals in defence research. [53229]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence policy on animal experimentation is neither to conduct nor to sponsor experiments on animals for the development or evaluation of weapons for use by UK forces. The MOD research programme involving animals is concerned wholly with providing the UK's Armed Forces with safe and effective protection against hazards they may encounter while carrying out their duties.

Defence research accounts for only a small proportion of all animal experiments conducted in the UK. The MOD is committed to looking at the feasibility of alternatives to animal experimentation and sponsors studies aimed specially at finding other techniques. We also ensure that, as far as possible, research in the defence area that involves the use of animals is not being duplicated elsewhere. There is a rigorous scientific peer review system within MOD. Formal licensing arrangements with the Home Office seek to ensure that any experiments are fully justified and as humane as possible. The MOD complies fully with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

In addition, an independent panel of experts, the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee, monitors programmes of experimentation to ensure that standards are as high as possible. The Committee make a valuable contribution to increasing awareness of animal welfare issues within the MOD. Their second report is published today and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph 72 of the Strategic Defence Review, Cm. 3999, if details of nuclear materials withdrawn from safeguards for non-weapons uses will be made public prior to their withdrawal. [51419]

Mr. George Robertson: No. Details of withdrawals of nuclear materials from safeguards will be published on an annual basis.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a full copy of the 1986 National Audit Office report into AWE Aldermaston. [51292]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Neither the National Audit Office nor the Ministry of Defence can trace any such report.

Tri-service Appointments

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to alter the current system for joint two, three and four star appointments by rotation of service to one of the best qualified officer. [51301]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 20 July 1998]: My Department does not have a system of rotation by Service for tri-Service appointments at 2-star rank and above. The current system aims to identify the best individual for the job by selection on merit whilst maintaining a broad balance of appointments between the Services.

Defence Statistics

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Defence Statistics 1998 will be published. [51577]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 21 July 1998]: UK Defence Statistics 1998 is currently being printed and will be published on 28 July 1998.

Revolution in Military Affairs

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the discussions his Department is having with the United States authorities regarding the Revolution in Military Affairs. [51057]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The "Revolution in Military Affairs" is a term to describe the step change in military capabilities which may, in the future, result from a combination of long-range precision weapons and networks of advanced sensors and data processors. There are discussions between the military and scientific staffs of the UK, US and other allies in various related areas, notably the UK Joint Battlespace Digitisation initiative, which aims to improve operational effectiveness by integrating weapons platforms, sensors and command, control, intelligence and information systems.

Smart Procurement

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an appointment for the head of Smart Procurement. [51928]

Mr. George Robertson: Smart Procurement is an initiative to improve our structures and processes for equipping the Armed Forces, rather than an organisation. The Chief of Defence Procurement, as present head of the Procurement Executive and as its Chief Executive when it becomes a defence agency, will continue to be responsible for delivering the equipment programme efficiently and effectively.

Correspondence

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will reply to the letter of 5 June from the hon. Member for Christchurch on behalf of a Porton Down volunteer. [52608]

Dr. Reid: I expect to reply to the hon. Member's letter very shortly.

Defence Reviews

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how frequently he plans to undertake defence reviews; and if he will make a statement. [52387]

Mr. George Robertson: Building on the Strategic Defence Review, we are developing a strategic planning process that will enable us to ensure that our defence planning is kept up to date. There are no plans to hold defence reviews at regular intervals. We will, however, keep open the option of undertaking further reviews if there are major changes in the strategic environment or other circumstances affecting the security and defence of the United Kingdom.

Swiftsure Class Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will hold an investigation into HMS Vanguard's recent training exercise in the Celtic Deep; and if he will make a statement. [52215]

Dr. Reid: Nuclear safety is of paramount importance and it is essential that the Navy conduct realistic exercises to ensure that all submariners remain highly trained. At all times during the recent exercise the submarine operated within normal safety parameters and there was no risk to the reactor or the crew. It is therefore not necessary to conduct a formal investigation.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had during the period of the Strategic Defence Review, with local hon. Members concerning (a) submarine refit work at Rosyth and (b) the refit for HMS Spartan. [51957]

Mr. George Robertson: We had consultations on the Strategic Defence Review with many hundreds of people representing a wide range of interests, and the detailed outcome of the Review was the subject of discussion with Cabinet colleagues. In relation to Rosyth Dockyard and the refit programme, including that of HMS Spartan, I met mye hon. Friend the Member for Dunfermline, West (Ms Squire) with representatives of the Rosyth Royal Dockyard Trade Unions and Fife Council, and, separately, the Chairman of the Babcock International Group and the Managing Director of Babcock Facilities Management Limited.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) sent me representations from the Rosyth Royal Dockyard Trade Unions, and form an individual constituent.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the refit being undergone by HMS Sceptre. [51956]

Mr. George Robertson: The planned cost of HMS Sceptre's refit is £154 million. HMS Sceptre's refit is due to be completed in 2000 and it is not possible to say whether the need for additional, unforeseen work may emerge during this time which may affect the final cost of the refit.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated de-commissioning date for each Swiftsure class submarine. [51964]

Mr. George Robertson: HMS Swiftsure was operationally decommissioned in 1992. The scheduled operational decommissioning dates for the remainder of the Swiftsure class submarines are as follows:

Swiftsure class SSN	Planned operational decommissioning date
HMS Sovereign	2005
HMS Superb	2007
HMS Sceptre	2008
HMS Spartan	2006
HMS Splendid	2003

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Swiftsure class submarines have undergone refits in the past five years; how much each cost; and where and when each was undertaken. [51955]

Mr. George Robertson: Two Swiftsure class submarines have undergone refits in the past five years, both at Rosyth Royal Dockyard. The costs of the refits, excluding materials, and relevant dates are as follows:

Vessel	Cost/Estimate (£ million)	Dates of Refit
HMS Sovereign	192	Aug 92 to May 98
HMS Superb	200	Dec 94, due to complete Autumn 98

The scope and length of both refits were extended to include additional repair work on nuclear steam generators.

HMS Sceptre is currently undergoing a refit at Rosyth, the cost of which is currently estimated to be £154 million.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the refit planned for HMS Spartan. [51963]

Mr. George Robertson: HMS Spartan's refit package is still under consideration. It will be constrained to the minimum necessary to enable her to continue in service until 2006. It is too early in the planning process to say what the revised refit package will cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fiji

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK relations with Fiji. [52058]

Mr. Fatchett: The UK enjoys a warm relationship with Fiji. We welcomed the constitutional amendments implemented by the Government of Fiji in 1997 and Fiji's re-admission to the Commonwealth on 1 October 1997. 3 Fijian Government Ministers have visited the UK in 1998.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current budget for the British Consulate in Fiji; what is the proposed budget for the next financial year; and if he will make a statement. [52060]

Mr. Fatchett: The current local budget for the British High Commission in Suva is £351,351 and the estimated budget for the financial year 1999–2000 is £495,187. These figures exclude UK-based staff salaries.

Right of Abode

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors underlie the length of time taken to process the issue of a certificate of entitlement to the right of abode; what plans he has to reduce it; and if he will make a statement. [52641]

Mr. Fatchett: Applications at posts overseas for certificates of entitlement to the right of abode are given priority. They represent less than 1 per cent. of all applications received by entry clearance posts. Processing times vary according to the circumstances of each case, but the general aim is to decide certificate of entitlement cases as quickly as possible. Doubtful cases are referred to the Home Office Nationality Directorate in Liverpool. Some applicants are offered DNA testing in order to establish their rights to certificates of entitlement: the average time for this process is 6 weeks. We are satisfied that processing times are generally reasonable.

Civil and Political Rights Covenant

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the United Nations member states which have not ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. [52607]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: According to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), the following UN Member States were non-States Parties to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) at the end of June 1998:

Andorra; Antigua and Barbuda; Bahamas; Bahrain; Bangladesh; Bhutan; Botswana; Brunei Darussalam; Burkina Faso; China; Comoros; Cuba; Djibouti; Eritrea; Fiji; Ghana; Guinea-Bissau; Indonesia; Kazakhstan; Lao People's Democratic Republic; Liechtenstein; Malaysia; Maldives; Marshall Islands; Mauritania; Micronesia (Federated States of); Monaco; Myanmar (Burma); Oman; Pakistan; Palau; Papua New Guinea; Qatar; Saint Kitts and Nevis; Saint Lucia; Samoa; Saudi Arabia; Singapore; Solomon Islands; Swaziland; Tajikistan; Turkey; United Arab Emirates; Vanuatu.

The following UN Member States' signature of the Covenant had not yet been followed by ratification:

Honduras; Liberia; Sao Tome and Principe; South Africa

This information, which is updated regularly, is also available on the OHCHR's Treaty Bodies Database on the Internet (www.unhchr.ch).

Mr. Peter Bleach

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Peter Bleach first requested information of Her Majesty's Government, to clarify issues relating to his capital charge in Calcutta; and when the required information was sent. [51879]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 23 July 1998]: We have no record of a request from Mr. Bleach seeking clarification of his capital charge in Calcutta. The first mention of the capital charge was in the hon. Member's letter of 10 April 1996 to the then Foreign Secretary to which the Minister of State replied on 19 April 1996.

Cyprus

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what consultations he has held with EU Foreign Ministers over the ban imposed by the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community on meetings between members of both Cypriot communities on the island; [52383]

(2) what steps he is taking to encourage the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community to remove his ban on meetings between members of both Cypriot communities on the island; [52388]

(3) what consultations he has held with Turkey and Greece, as co-guarantor powers, over the ban imposed by the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community on meetings between members of both Cypriot communities on the island. [52389]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We have made clear to Mr. Denktash on numerous occasions that we greatly regret the current suspension on Turkish Cypriot participation in bicommunal activities on Cyprus, and have urged him to lift the current suspension. Bicommunal activities make a valuable contribution to building a foundation of understanding between the two Cypriot communities, which will be essential for the success of a political settlement on the island.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Corporate Tax Bills

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the oral statement by the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) of 13 July 1998, Official Report, column 72, what was the basis of the calculation that the Government will cut corporate tax bills by £4.5 billion. [51415]

Mrs. Beckett: Over the lifetime of this Parliament, the impact of lower corporation tax rates and more generous capital allowances for small companies is to reduce companies' corporation tax bills by about £12 billion. Against this, the short-term impact of replacing advance corporation tax by quarterly instalment payments is to bring forward some of the tax paid by larger companies. The net effect, in cash terms, is to reduce companies' corporation tax bills by around £4.5 billion in total over the five-year period ending in 2001–02. Once the temporary timing effects have worked through, corporation tax bills will be about £4 billion a year lower as a result of this Government's reforms.

The windfall tax and changes to the tax treatment of dividend income do not have any direct effect on the yield of corporation tax.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of (a) corporation tax, (b) the windfall tax and (c) advance corporation tax changes made by the Government on British businesses. [51416]

Mrs. Beckett: The financial impact of each of these changes is set out in the Financial Statement and Budget Report. The cuts in corporation tax to the lowest rate ever in the UK and the lowest of any major EU economy, the Welfare to Work programme funded by the tax on the excess profits of the privatised utilities, and simplification of the tax system from the abolition of advance corporation tax, are all contributing to an environment in which businesses can thrive.

Dounreay

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of whether transfers of nuclear material from the UKAEA establishment at Dounreay can explain the historic material unaccounted for; and if she will make a statement. [51807]

Mrs. Beckett: In this context, the term "material unaccounted for" (MUF) refers to the difference between a theoretical book inventory and an inventory based on actual physical measurement. Experience shows that one of the main causes of any such difference is the error inherent in measurement, which is unavoidable. The existence of such a difference, whether negative or positive, is not evidence of an actual loss or gain of nuclear material. It is therefore wrong to suggest that the figure for MUF quoted in the UKAEA's document "The Dounreay Shaft Inventory" must correspond to an amount of material that is actually physically missing.

As previously announced, I have asked the DTI's Safeguards Office (which is responsible for ensuring that the UK complies with its international safeguards obligations) to study the nuclear material accountancy issues raised by the UKAEA document. We shall of course make public the conclusions of that study. It is already clear however what some of the physical causes of 170kg of MUF referred to in the UKAEA report were likely to have been. Some of the material was in fact burnt up in the Fast Reactor. Some was discharged from the site within the discharge authorisations that applied during that period. Exact figures have yet to be determined. They will form part of the published conclusions of the Safeguards Office study.

The existence of MUF at any nuclear site, or the detailed evaluation of the level of MUF, has properly never been regarded by the nuclear industry as the primary indicator of whether or not material is securely held at such a site. The safety and secure custody of nuclear materials are ensured by a range of separate measures, including physical barriers such as fences and robust buildings, systems to detect intruders, and controlled access.

Security is a top priority at Dounreay, and as was made clear on 3 June 1998, Official Report, columns 364–65, there is absolutely no evidence that any material has been stolen or fallen into the hands of terrorists or foreign governments.

I can also confirm that the MUF at Dounreay cannot be attributed to diversion of material to other sites for weapons purposes. Any transfers of material between Dounreay and other sites for whatever purpose are fully documented and accounted for. As a result of an audit of the records requested by this Government, however, it is clear that there were in the past documented transfers from Dounreay which related to UK military programmes. Prior to 1973 when AWRE at Aldermaston and Dounreay were both part of the UKAEA, it is probable that some material transferred from Dounreay to Aldermaston will have been used in the UK weapons programme. This is not the case for any transfers which occurred between 1973 and 1987—when all such transfers ceased—since these involved fuel for use in reactors only.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date she received the proposals prepared by the Atomic Energy Authority on the future of Dounreay. [45871]

Mr. Battle: On 17 March 1998, the UKAEA Board considered the future of reprocessing at Dounreay and recommended that no new commercial work be accepted as part of a phased rundown to a complete cessation of reprocessing. The Chief Executive of UKAEA advised officials in the Department of Trade and Industry of the Board's proposed course of action by letter on 19 March 1998. DTI officials then had a number of discussions with UKAEA to check points in the analysis, and they submitted advice to DTI Ministers on 1 May. The President of the Board of Trade consulted her colleagues by letter on 29 May. The Government made the announcement on 5 June that UKAEA would accept no new contracts for commercial reprocessing at Dounreay.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if there is an agreed international standard for year 2000 compliance for computer systems; and if she will make a statement. [51810]

Mrs. Beckett: An agreed international standard for Year 2000 compliance of computer systems has not yet been published. The International Organisation for Standardisation (ISO) has set up an informal working group, on which the British Standards Institution (BSI) is represented, to consider such a document.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers in her Department have a mobile phone paid for by her Department; and how much money has been spent by her Department in respect of each such mobile phone in the most recent quarter. [52559]

Mrs. Beckett: All DTI Ministers have had mobile phones in their cars for many years.

Office Hours

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what records are kept of the times at which Ministers start work in her Department each day. [52561]

Mrs. Beckett: None.

Key Holders

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers in her Department have keys to her Department's offices. [52560]

Mrs. Beckett: Keys are available if and as required.

Telephone Prize Winning Promotions

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will regulate telephone prize winning promotions; and if she will make a statement. [50946]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Premium rate telephone competitions and games with prizes are regulated by the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS), which is the self-regulatory body for the Premium Rate Services (PRS) industry. ICSTIS supervises the content and promotion of PRS competitions via its Code of Practice to which PRS service providers have to conform. PRS service providers' contracts with telecommunications companies require them to observe the code. This creates an effective enforcement mechanism and ICSTIS has, and frequently uses, powers to fine offenders or order disconnection from their services.

ICSTIS has a good reputation for enforcing its Code of Practice firmly and fairly. Consumers can address complaints to ICSTIS through its Freephone helpline.

Data Protection

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to implement the Telecom Data Protection Directive 97/66/EC; what assessment she has made of the likely effect on subscribers' privacy; what assessment she has made of the likely effect of the opt-out options for (a) political parties and (b) charities; and if she will list the types of organisations which she is considering under the opt-out scheme. [50365]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 22 July 1998]: The Telecoms Data Protection Directive 97/66/EC contains a number of useful measures which will serve to enhance subscribers' privacy. My Department has carried out a first-stage consultation seeking comments from over 900 telecoms operators and service providers, trade associations, small firms organisations, consumer bodies, direct marketing organisations, directory publishers, and individual subscribers on areas where the Directive allows some discretion on the detail of its implementation. The Directive requires Member States to introduce measures which would allow subscribers either to opt in to receive, or opt out from receiving, unsolicited direct marketing calls. Much of the activity undertaken by political parties and charities is likely to fall outside these provisions. As the next step in the consultation process, the Government will shortly seek comments on draft regulations to implement the Directive.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions during the last 12 months she has been consulted by the Secretary of State for the Home Department about the impact on the United Kingdom science base and the competitiveness of the United Kingdom's science-based industries of proposed measures relating to the regulation of research and development projects involving animals. [50702]

Mr. Battle: The President of the Board of Trade and DTI officials have contact with the Secretary of State for the Home Department and his officials on these issues as and when required.

Odometers and Speed Cameras (Blocking Devices)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to investigate advertisements for devices designed to circumvent (a) odometers and (b) speed cameras. [51288]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: The investigation of complaints about advertisements is a function of the Advertising Standards Authority, which administers the British Codes of Advertising and Sales Promotion. I have brought examples of advertisements relating to the alteration of odometers to the attention of the Authority, which has undertaken to investigate them. I have also asked the Advertising Standards Authority to consider whether action could be taken against anyone advertising devices designed to circumvent speed cameras.

Energy Review

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) to which environmental organisations she has sent requests for comments on the proposals in her energy review announced on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–85; [51281]

(2) which environmental organisations she has consulted on the proposals in the energy review which she announced to the House on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–85. [51283]

Mrs. Beckett: The consultation document was sent free to any organisation requesting a copy. A copy was also posted on the Internet. Copies were also sent to those who have outstanding applications or notifications under the Electricity or Energy Acts, and those who submitted representations in response to the original press notice of 22 December 1997, including English Nature, Friends of the Earth, and the Council for the Protection of Rural England.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings she held with Friends of the Earth during the preparation of her energy review which she announced on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–85. [51279]

Mrs. Beckett: Friends of the Earth submitted two representations to the Review but did not request a meeting.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the effect on CO_2 emission of the measures announced in her review of energy sources for power generation. [51286]

Mrs. Beckett: The consultation document setting out the preliminary conclusions of the Government's Review of Energy Sources for Power Generation reaffirms (Chapter 5, paragraph 19) the Government's commitment to meet its climate change targets, and states that the proposals in the consultation document are consistent with a decline in carbon emissions from the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which schemes for non-coal fired power generation she has refused during the course of the review of energy sources for power generation; and what is her estimate of the number of such applications refused during that period. [51278]

Mrs. Beckett: No schemes have been refused, either under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 or under section 14 of the Energy Act 1976. Consideration of a number of cases has been deferred pending the outcome of the review.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice she requested from (a) the Government's Panel on Sustainable Development and (b) the Round Table on Sustainable Development in the preparation of her energy review which she announced on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–72. [51280]

Mrs. Beckett: There was a wide and open consultation on the Review, with representations being received from many different parties. In common with other parties, the two bodies mentioned were not specifically approached for advice. They did not make any representations.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her oral statement of 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–72, on the Government's review of energy sources for power generation, how many of the independent advisers to which she referred had environmental qualifications; if she will list them; and which of them gave advice on the environmental effects of her proposals. [51284]

Mrs. Beckett: The advice received by my Department from external consultants in the Review was in relation to various technical and market-related matters (as set out in paragraph 4 on page 1 of the consultation document) rather than environmental matters.

London Art Market

Mr. Gibb: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the future of the London art market. [50789]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The London art market is a highly successful international market. However, the Government are aware of concerns about its future. Ministers have met representatives of the art trade and understand their fears about the impact of existing, and proposed, European Union legislation. We have established a close liaison with the trade and maintain a regular dialogue with them. It is central to our policies that we should develop partnerships and work together.

We have always made it clear to the trade that the Government are committed to ensuring that London continues to prosper as a leading international art centre and that we will oppose proposals that could damage the international competitiveness of our art market in relation to third country markets. We will continue to ensure that the trade's views are taken account of in Brussels.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were employed by the United Kingdom aerospace industry each year for the past five years. [51932]

Mr. Battle: On the basis used by the Office for National Statistics, the number of people employed in the UK aerospace industry in each of the five years from 1992 are as follows:

Year	Number
1992	149,000
1993	126,000
1994	115,000
1995	109,000
1996	104,000

Source:
Office for National Statistics (Annual Census of Production)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people within the Portsmouth area were employed by the United Kingdom aerospace industry in each of the last five years. [51930]

Mr. Battle: This information is not available. Although the Office for National Statistics collects data on employment in aerospace businesses in Portsmouth as part of the Annual Employment Survey and Annual Census of Production, the figures cannot be released because they would identify particulars of an individual undertaking, which are confidential under Section 9 of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947.

Directors' Salaries

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has evaluated into the proportion of output costs represented by the salaries of company directors in (a) the UK, (b) other EU countries, (c) Japan and (d) the USA. [52393]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Department has not carried out any such comparative research; nor is it aware of any such research carried out by others.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will state the Government's policy towards substantially above the inflation rate salary increases for senior directors, managing directors and chairmen in the private sector. [52466]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It is essential for Britain's competitiveness that companies pay full regard to the fundamental Greenbury principles of accountability, transparency, and performance in setting directors' remuneration. The Government believe that a best practice approach to boardroom pay is preferable to one enshrined in legislation, provided best practice is seen to be working. The President made it clear in her speech on corporate governance in March that she believed that many listed companies were failing to comply with the spirit of the best practice framework. She said that the Government would consider a range of options, including legislation, if there was no evidence of a more positive and responsible approach from companies.

Post Office

Mr. Lansley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will limit the negative external financing limit of the Post Office to a maximum of a figure equivalent to 50 per cent. of the Post Office's post-tax profits. [52404]

Mr. Ian McCartney: As indicated in the Government's memorandum to the Trade and Industry Committee (paragraph 20 of fifth special report published by the Committee on 14 April 1998), the arrangements for setting the Government's financial return from the Post Office are being addressed during the review which was announced by my right hon. Friend on 6 April. We hope to announce our proposals in the Autumn.

Small and Medium Enterprises

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps her Department is taking to encourage management and employee training and development in SMEs. [51829]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The Department encourages management and employee training and development in SMEs through its network of Business Links which provide companies with information and advice on management development and other training issues.

In addition, DTI programmes, such as Connect for Better Business, Inside UK Enterprise, and the United Kingdom Benchmarking Index, encourage companies to focus on key business management and training issues. DTI publications, such as Partnerships With People, and Small Business Action Update, also help in this area by disseminating best practice and/or by signposting companies to sources of assistance, such as TECs and other organisations.

Mobile Telephones (Recycling Schemes)

Mr. Levitt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the recycling schemes for mobile telephones which have been notified to her Department. [51401]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: A number of companies, including Alcatel, Ericsson, Motorola, Nokia, and Panasonic are involved in the European Trade Organisation for the Telecommunications and Professional Electronics Industry (ECTEL).

Under the ECTEL take-back scheme, owners of mobile phones can return them to their nearest BT communication centre, where they will be disposed of in an environmentally friendly way.

There are also several companies in the UK which are recovering and recycling mobile telephones.

Utility Regulation

Gillian Merron: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response the Government have made to representations received during the consultation period on the Green Paper on utility regulation. [52692]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government have received over 250 written representations on the Green Paper, and held discussions with a wide range of interested parties. These indicate strong support for the approach set out in the Green Paper.

In taking the Green Paper proposals forward, I have had three concerns: first, to create a long term, stable regulatory framework which looks ahead to the next decade, in a world where competition and convergence are growing, and multi-utility companies are emerging; second, to secure a fair deal for all consumers, including the disadvantaged; third, to create a climate in which regulated industries can innovate and improve efficiency, and so become increasingly competitive, by ensuring regulation is consistent, transparent and accountable.

Full details of our proposals for the new framework of regulation are set out in the Government response published today. We intend to introduce legislation to implement these proposals as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

We need a regulatory framework which will serve the interests of consumers not only now but over the next decade. Multi-utilities are already a reality. This development has the potential to offer new benefits for consumers. But it also presents new challenges for regulators. We will encourage the regulators to build on the multi-utilities study they prepared in response to the Green Paper. We look to the regulators to set out their priorities and timetable for dealing with the regulatory challenges related to multi-utilities. In addition, the Government will consider further whether legislation is needed to give regulators powers to transfer licences within a group structure to the company which exercises effective control of the regulated activity, and to allow or require joint decision-making for multi-utilities.

It is also vital that the regulation of gas and electricity reflects growing convergence in the market and encourages competition. We intend to merge OFFER and OFGAS under a single energy regulator, and to provide for separate licences for the supply and distribution of electricity. There will be further consultation in the autumn on the options for legislation to achieve this.

We need to ensure that the framework for each sector delivers clear benefits for consumers. We will introduce a new primary duty on regulators to protect the interests of consumers. We intend to establish independent consumer councils to promote the interests of all consumers, including the disadvantaged; and to give all regulators powers to impose monetary penalties if companies breach the service standards set by the regulators.

On the key issue of price regulation, we endorse the three principles set out in the Green Paper that regulators should distinguish between earned and unearned income, that companies should keep profits earned through efficiency savings, and that benefits should flow promptly to consumers when companies benefit from factors outside their control, or have deliberately misled the regulators. On price setting mechanisms, regulators should be able to retain RPI-X as the fundamental system of price regulation. But we look to the regulators to consider the exceptional circumstances where it may be appropriate to refine RPI-X to reflect these principles.

We intend to require regulators to co-operate in developing best practice in this area and to explain publicly how they have applied these three key principles.

On directors' pay, the Government's message is clear. It is not the Government's job to set the pay of utility company executives. However, the Government believe that there should be a clearer link between the prices utilities can charge their customers and the service standards they achieve. And they believe full information should be available on companies' performance in meeting service standards, and on the links between this performance and the remuneration of senior executives.

It is important that regulation takes account of the Government's social and environmental objectives, including energy efficiency. We intend to issue statutory guidance to the regulators on these, following full consultation, including consultation with Parliament.

We also welcome measures in hand by the energy regulators and companies to drive down costs and improve efficiency and choice in gas and electricity, which should benefit disadvantaged consumers. In addition, we are considering the case for further action through the regulatory system to assist disadvantaged energy consumers, such as requiring the distribution networks to make differential charges to supply companies in favour of pre-payment customers. We will act if market developments do not deliver a fair deal for all consumers.

We intend to introduce legislation to build confidence in regulation by making it open, accountable and consistent. For the energy sector and telecommunications, this will replace individual regulators with full time executive boards composed of a chairman and two others. It will give regulators a new duty to address matters of common interest in an open and accountable way. Regulators will be required to give reasons for key decisions, and to consult on and publish a code of practice so that their consultation and decision making processes are clearer. Regulators will have powers to publish information held by them on the utilities in the interest of consumers, subject to tests in line with the general principles set out in the Freedom of Information White Paper.

Further consultation is now required in some areas. We intend to get the detail right. But I am confident our proposed changes will create a truly modern regulatory framework, capable of serving consumers well and taking these industries successfully into the next millennium.

Fiji

Mr. Öpik: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals she has to increase trade between Britain and Fiji; and if she will make a statement. [52059]

Mrs. Beckett: UK exports to Fiji grew by more than 43% in 1997 to £10.56 million. The Government's Overseas Trade Services promote UK trade with Fiji, and plan to run two Australasia Showcases in October 1998 and February 1999 in the UK to promote trade with the Australasian and South Pacific markets, including Fiji. Several promotional events in Fiji itself are also planned.

Margaret Beckett Research and Administration Trust

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she has now closed the Margaret Beckett Research and Administration Trust. [52335]

Mrs. Beckett: Yes.

Pharmaceutical Pricing Scheme

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the pharmaceutical pricing scheme for the NHS will be exempted from her proposed competition legislation. [51048]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The Government are not acting as an undertaking in respect of the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme, and therefore the Competition Bill is inapplicable.

Ministerial Leave

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she plans to take leave during the summer adjournment; and who will be in charge in her absence. [52190]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 24 July 1998]: Normal arrangements for ensuring cover by duty Ministers over the recess will apply.

Gas Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps she is planning to promote competition for gas customers. [52600]

Mrs. Beckett: The domestic market is now fully open to competition. In addition, the Government's response to the consultation on the utilities review Green Paper "A Fair Deal for Consumers" puts the consumer at the heart of our plans for change.

Cycling

Mr. Robathan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade following the Government's announcement of 20 July on measures to promote cycling in the White Paper, A New Deal for Transport, what plans she has to order the removal of the signs on the railings around her Department which forbid the leaving of bicycles. [51935]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Secure racks are provided for all my Department's staff who come to work in the Victoria area by bicycle—some 4 per cent. of them do, I am glad to report.

The prohibition on leaving bicycles outside 1 Victoria Street is in place for security reasons—among which is the proximity of the building to this House.

Strategic Exports

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she will make a statement on the measures she has proposed to impose controls on the trafficking and brokering of strategic goods from the UK; [50696]

(2) if she will make a statement on the suggested measures put forward in the White Paper, Strategic Export Controls, concerning the prior publication of export goods control orders; [50697]

(3) what estimate her Department has made of the costs of the enforcement of controls on trafficking and brokering in the UK. [50695]

Mrs. Roche: The Government's proposals to control trafficking and brokering and to introduce parliamentary scrutiny of Export of Goods Control Orders are clearly set out in the White Paper on Strategic Export Control which was published on 1 July. The hon. Lady will see that the consultation period is underway and is due to be completed on 30 September.

Section 6 of the provisional Regulatory Appraisal, which was published as part of the White Paper, contains an estimate of the cost of enforcing the proposals on transfers of technology by intangible means and trafficking and brokering.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations her Department has received from companies or individuals who engage in trafficking and brokering activities in respect of strategic goods in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [50714]

Mrs. Roche: In drawing up the proposals contained in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls, the DTI has received no representations from companies or individuals understood to be engaged in such trafficking and brokering activities.

Export Credit

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when her Department plans to publish the comprehensive review of the procedures by which export credit licence applications are processed. [50698]

Mrs. Beckett: The review to which the hon. Lady refers is an internal review of management and business procedures, leading to a Business Plan for the Export Control Organisation's day-to-day licence processing operations. As this is not a review of export control policy, but concerns details of internal management and efficiency, we do not intend to publish it.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism Strategy

13. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Employment about his proposed tourism strategy. [50779]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My Department hosted a conference on the New Deal with the Department for Education and Employment in November of last year. A breakfast meeting was held with representatives of the tourism industry at No. 11 Downing street only last week involving both Departments. Those present heard of the excellent achievements of the tourism industry in the intervening period in implementing the New Deal and aspirations of the future.

25. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what account his Department's tourism strategy takes of sustainable development issues. [50793]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Government are committed to enabling tourism growth which is economically, socially and environmentally sustainable and our tourism strategy will reflect that commitment. We have recently undertaken a nationwide consultation exercise on sustainable tourism. The responses to the consultation are currently being analysed and will feed into the development of the tourism strategy which we shall publish later this year.

27. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the promotion of tourism in England. [50795]

Mr. Tom Clarke: My right hon. Friend and I have been working very closely, for some months now, with members of the Tourism Forum and its Working Groups on the development of a new tourism strategy. The strategy, which will be published later this year, will set out our plans for promoting tourism development which is economically, environmentally and socially sustainable.

National Lottery

14. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the total amount of prize money which has been unclaimed from the national lottery since it began its operation. [50780]

Mr. Chris Smith: To date, some £226 million in prize money has been unclaimed. After 180 days prizes still unclaimed, together with the interest earned, are paid to the good causes. £180 million of the unclaimed prize money has been given to good causes.

26. Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps the Lottery distributors are taking to make the grant application process easier for small organisations. [50794]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Lottery Act 1998 will help to ensure that more Lottery money reaches small scale projects in local communities. Distributors in Scotland are working together on a scheme which provides a one-stop shop service to community organisations. Distributors in England plan to pilot a similar scheme in the East Midlands this autumn.

Museums (Access)

15. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how the Government will extend access to national and designated museums. [50781]

Mr. Chris Smith: Last Friday I announced the biggest increase in cultural funding ever seen in this country. This included £100 million for museums and galleries. Subject to achieving clear targets for efficiency and reform, this will enable Trustees of the major national collections—including those which currently charge—to introduce free access for children from next year, for pensioners in the following year, and universal free entry in 2001.

A £15 million challenge fund will be established to fund new investment in the 43 designated museums around the country which are officially recognised as housing collections of pre-eminent importance.

Arts Funding (London)

16. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the funding of the arts in London. [50782]

Mr. Fisher: Central Government support for the arts in London is channelled through the Arts Council, and London Arts Board. In 1998/99 the arts in London will receive £12.7 million from the London Arts Board. In addition, national London-based organisations will receive £51.1 million and non-national organisations based in London will receive £14.4 million direct from the Arts Council.

From March 1995 to May 1998 1,352 projects in London totalling over £405 million received National Lottery arts funding.

Galleries Funding

17. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received on the allocation of funding to galleries. [50783]

Mr. Fisher: Representations have been received from both national, designated and local museums and galleries and others, including the Museums and Galleries Commission, the Museums Association, the Association of Independent Museums, and many other interested organisations and individuals. All of these representations have been carefully considered as part of our Departmental Spending Review.

Many of these submissions point out the continually eroding levels of funding under the last few years of the previous administration, a trend which this Government are finally reversing.

Royal Parks

18. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to introduce an entrepreneurial approach to running The Royal Parks. [50784]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Royal Parks are a great national asset. I am keen that the Royal Parks Agency makes the most of opportunities to increase its income, for example from events, licences and merchandise, in ways sympathetic to the amenity of the Parks and for the benefit of their upkeep.

Paralympic Sports

19. Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how his Department is supporting Britain's paralympic sportsmen and women. [50785]

Mr. Banks: Our Paralympic sportsmen and women who compete at the highest international levels will be able to benefit from the Lottery funded World Class Performance Programme. The programme has so far awarded grants worth a total of £3,267,253 to support 200 elite athletes with disabilities.

The United Kingdom Sports Institute will also provide first class training and support services for our elite athletes covering a range of Olympic and other non-commercial sports.

Musical Instrument Teaching

20. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will publish his proposals for encouraging musical instrument tuition in schools. [50786]

Mr. Chris Smith: In response to widespread and longstanding concerns about the state of instrumental tuition available to young people, on 24 June I announced the creation of a new Youth Music Trust. The Trust will receive £10 million of Lottery funding a year from the Arts Council of England and will also seek to raise additional funds from the private sector. It will have three key objectives; to champion the cause of music for young people; to attract and distribute funds; and to offer strategic advice.

Performing Arts Audiences

21. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to broaden the audience range for the performing arts. [50788]

22. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he is taking to make the arts available to a wider audience. [50790]

Mr. Fisher: It is a core objective of my Department to create access to excellence for the many, not just the few. We are currently doing this through the New Audiences Fund; and on Friday I announced a major injection of new funds for the arts over the next three years which will enable a new contract with the arts sector to deliver our key objectives of access, education and excellence and strengthen the position of the arts as a key part of the creative industries.

Professional Football Clubs

23. Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will assess the advantages of appointing an industry regulator to monitor and regulate the activities of professional football clubs in the United Kingdom. [50791]

Mr. Banks: My personal preference is for the football authorities to get their own house in order. I have been heartened by the positive response The Football Association has made to Sir John Smith's report on the way football regulates its financial affairs and I will be watching how this is taken forward. I will be considering carefully the forthcoming Task Force report on the commercial aspects of the game.

Arts Councils (Liaison)

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Scottish Office in respect of liaison between arts councils following the establishment of the Scottish Parliament. [50792]

Mr. Fisher: Arts funding has been devolved to national country level since 1 April 1994. The four arts councils of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland liaise regularly on any issues of common interest. I expect that process to continue following the establishment of the Scottish Parliament.

Channel Four

28. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received concerning Channel Four; and if he will make a statement. [50796]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received no such representations.

Minimum Wage

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact of the minimum wage on employment in the tourism industry. [50772]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The Government are confident that the National Minimum Wage will improve the quality of service in the tourism and hospitality industry. We share the views of the independent Low Pay Commission; and the Chief Executive of the British Hospitality Association who said that the initial rate recommended by the Commission is "broadly within the range acceptable to the industry".

BBC Board of Governors

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will give a breakdown of the total cost of the application process for the BBC Board of Governors; [51521]

(2) how many structured telephone interviews were conducted for the BBC Board of Governors; and for which posts; [51517]

(3) who was on the interviewing panel for the BBC Board of Governors; and what criteria were used to establish membership; [51522]

(4) how many people applied for each of the vacant positions on the BBC Board of Governors; [51520]

(5) how many personal interviews for the BBC Board of Governors were conducted; and for which posts; [51523]

(6) how many (a) women and (b) ethnic minority applicants there were for the BBC Board of Governors as a percentage of the total number of applicants; [51516]

(7) where and on how many occasions the application process for the BBC Board of Governors was advertised; [51515]

(8) what interviews were held for the BBC Board of Governors; and for which posts; [51518]

(9) how the final decision in the selection for the BBC Board of Governors was reached; and who was responsible; [51514]

(10) what qualifications were sought for successful applicants for the BBC Board of Governors. [51519]

Mr. Chris Smith: The process for appointing the BBC Vice-Chairman and two Governors was based on the principles set down by the independent Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Advertisements for the position of Vice-Chairman of the BBC and for two Governor positions, one to chair the English National Forum, appeared in The Sunday Times on 1 March, The Times on 5 March, The Guardian on 2 and 7 March, The Glasgow Herald on 6 March, The Western Mail on 4 March and The Belfast Telegraph on 6 March.

Candidates had to have, or be able to acquire quickly, the ability to represent the interests of BBC viewers and listeners and of the public at large; an appreciation of the requirements of operating as a board and the management of a large and complex public service and commercial undertaking; sensitivity to and the ability to keep in touch with public opinion on broadcasting issues; and the ability to work in an effective and collegiate manner with other Governors and the senior management of the BBC. Candidates for the position of Vice-Chairman were, in addition, expected to have the qualifications and experience to deputise for the Chairman and possess sufficient influence, experience and weight to act as an effective bridge between the BBC and Parliament. Candidates for the position of the Governor who chairs the English National Forum were expected to have knowledge of the English Regions and be willing to travel extensively within England.

The recruitment process cost £54,246.23. This comprised £40,486.98 for the advertisements and £13,759.25 for the recruitment consultants.

388 individuals applied following the recruitment campaign, but a significant number of applicants applied for more than one position. 66 applied for the Vice-Chairman position, 80 for the chair of the English National Forum and 371 for the third Governor position. 31 per cent. of applicants were female and 10 per cent. were from ethnic minorities (though only 55 per cent. of applicants completed the ethnic minority section of the questionnaire).

The Department's recruitment consultants, Capita RAS, carried out an initial sift of the applications and ranked each candidate against criteria based on the role specifications for the positions. The shortlists of candidates were arrived at following consideration by myself. There were no structured telephone interviews.

The four shortlisted candidates for the Vice-Chairmanship were interviewed by a selection panel chaired by Robin Young (the Department's Permanent Secretary). The panel also included, in accordance with normal practice, two independent member (Sir Christopher Hogg and Sir Dennis Stevenson), as well as Sir Christopher Bland.

The shortlisted candidates for the two Governor positions were considered by an advisory panel for public appointments which included independent membership. A final shortlist of candidates, agreed by me was seen by Sir Christopher Bland and the head of the Department's Broadcasting and Media Group.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I decided, in the light of the advice of the interview panel that Baroness Young of Old Scone should be recommended for appointment as the Vice-Chairman. In the light of interviews for the other positions, they decided that Ranjit Sondhi and Anthony Young should be recommended for appointment to the other Governor positions.

The final decision on all three appointments was taken by Her Majesty The Queen in Council on 21 July.

Regional Theatres

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the subsidy, per person attending, that Southern Arts provides to each of the producing theatres in their region. [50607]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 14 July 1998]: Precise figures are not available. The following figures are taken from the data received as part of the Arts Council of England's Annual Survey of Regularly Funded Organisations for 1996–97: Southern Arts provided the following subsidy per person attending each of the producing theatres in their region.

Theatres	Subsidy per person
Southampton Nuffield Theatre	5.64
Salisbury Playhouse	3.13
Basingstoke Haymarket Theatre	1.88
Newbury Watermill Theatre	0.37

'Attendance' includes actual and estimated attendance at all performances and educational events.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49833]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I and all my Ministers have e-mail addresses through which hon. Members and the public can contact us. These addresses are published on DCMS' website (www.culture.gov.uk). Around 60 members of my staff can also be contacted in the same way.

Millennium Funds

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of Millennium Commission money has been allocated to (a) Staffordshire and (b) the West Midlands. [51916]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to my hon. Friend in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Library of the House.

Listed Buildings (Staffordshire)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many listed buildings there are in Staffordshire (a) in total and (b) by grade. [51913]

Mr. Banks: The information requested is as follows

Grade	Number
Grade I	75
Grade II*	347
Grade II	4,697
Total	5,119

SCOTLAND

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49233]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information requested from my Department (excluding the Agencies and Non-Departmental Bodies) is:

(a) (i) Vehicles owned—168

(b) (ii) Vehicles leased—Nil

(A) fuel types: petrol, diesel and LPG

(B) Engine cubic capacities from 1600cc to 2500cc

The vehicles expected to fall due for replacement are:

Year	Number
1998–99	40
1999–2000	46
2000–01	49

Sheep Annual Premium Scheme

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (i) farmers and (ii) crofters have been found in breach of maintaining adequate stock level records following the introduction of the revised guidelines and associated penalties in respect of the application of the Sheep Annual Premium Scheme and the Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance Scheme; what is the total amount of subsidy clawed back and penalties imposed to date; and if he will make a statement. [51185]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The requirement to maintain an accurate, up to date and continuous flock record has been a fundamental condition of these schemes since 1992. The Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996 imposed further record keeping requirements on all sheep producers. Administration of these schemes is subject to regular EC scrutiny and successive EC audits have been highly critical of the standard of flock record keeping in the UK generally. The inadequate standards of record keeping displayed by our sheep producers was a major factor in the EC decision to disallow £30.8m of Sheep Annual Premium (SAP) expenditure in the UK in 1994 and additional disallowance on subsequent years' expenditure is anticipated. A further consequence of the audit criticism was the decision to double the number of sheep and records inspections conducted during the schemes' retention period each year. It is essential, therefore, that the schemes' record keeping requirements are strictly enforced if disallowance on current and future schemes' expenditure is to be avoided.

To date, in processing claims received under the 1996, 1997 and 1998 SAP and Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances (HLCA) schemes (and as a result of our inspection visits in a sample of cases), 116 SAP claims and 126 HLCA (Sheep) claims have been rejected because of inadequate flock records; of those claims identified, recovery action has been necessary in 62 SAP cases and 102 HLCA cases, the amounts involved totalling approximately £98,400 and £61,600 respectively. Under the rules of the schemes no differentiation can be made between crofters and farmers.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of outstanding debt owed by each local authority in Scotland and the annual cost of servicing this debt. [51756]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 21 July 1998]: Table 1 shows, for each local authority in Scotland, the total amount of debt outstanding at 31 March 1997 on each of the main groups of accounts.

Authorities record the cost of servicing debt on relevant general fund services as loan charges within the general fund account. The cost of servicing debt on the trading and Direct Labour Organisation/Direct Service Organisation accounts is met from charges on the services provided.

Table 2 shows authorities' provisional estimates of the amount of loan charge payments on the general fund and on the housing revenue account for 1997–98.

Provisional Outturn 1997–98 statistical return from local authorities

Scottish Environment Protection Agency

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what submission he received from the Scottish Environment Protection Agency in advance of the Comprehensive Spending Review for Scotland; what level of grant-in-aid was sought for (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02; what grant-in-aid provision there will be for each year under his proposals; and what assessment he has made of the level of grant-in-aid requested by the agency. [51873]

Mr. Macdonald: Officials in the Scottish Office regularly receive information from SEPA concerning current and future levels of funding, and my noble Friend Lord Sewel has recently met SEPA's Chairman and Chief Executive to discuss the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. The detailed allocation of resources to SEPA and the other parts of the Other Environmental Services programme is currently being finalised and will be announced in due course.

Council Tax

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many second homes in Scotland are subject to council tax discount in each council area. [52063]

Mr. Macdonald: The information requested is not held centrally.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of the Comprehensive Spending Review on provision for Scotland's schools and hospitals. [50526]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Additional investment of £1.8 billion is being made in the NHS in Scotland over the next three years. This extra investment will meet the growing demand for emergency treatment, cut hospital waiting lists well below the inherited levels to 75,000 by the end of this Parliament, reduce the time patients have to wait to be treated and allow the key recommendations to modernise the NHS, set out in the Acute Services Review, to be implemented.

Additional funding for specific initiatives in schools totals £629 million over the next three years on top of other provision also being made through the Local Government Settlement. The new resources will back our initiative to set stretching targets for improvement for all schools by 2001. They will contribute to the tackling of the backlog of school repairs; class sizes will be reduced in the first three years of Primary School and there will be an Excellence Fund which will target support on projects critical to raising attainment throughout Scotland. The Excellence Fund represents the equivalent of £100 for every school pupil in 1999–2000 rising to more than £150 per pupil in 2000–01.

River Tweed

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Tweed Commissioners' report on the operation of the River Tweed Protection Order on the River Tweed; [52284]

(2) when he expects to make a final announcement about the proposed revocation of the River Tweed Protection Order; and if he will make a statement. [52285]

Mr. Macdonald: A copy of the report by the River Tweed Commissioners and Borders Angling Federation on the operation of the Tweed and Eye Protection Order will be placed in the Library. The report confirms the steps that have been taken, since my noble Friend Lord Sewel's announcement on 24 April, to restore the areas of access lost to anglers and contains a commitment by the authors of the report, riparian owners, and Tweed Foundation to satisfy the various objectives of the Protection Order (access, management, conservation).

My noble Friend welcomes the steps that have been taken and the recognition within the report of the obligations and responsibility which the Protection Order bestows. The Protection Order for the Tweed and Eye, in common with those elsewhere, will continue to be monitored but, in the light of the progress that has been made, no further revocation action is intended at this time.

Agricultural Schemes

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if local department officials administering the revised guidelines and associated penalties pertaining to the sheep annual premium scheme and the hill livestock compensatory allowances are eligible for bonus/performance-related payments based on savings achieved; and if he will make a statement. [52551]

Mr. Macdonald: No they are not.

Milk Marque

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the decision by major dairy companies not to submit bids in the Milk Marque July 1998 selling round. [52556]

Mr. Macdonald: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food today, Official Report, column 79.

Fisheries Task Force

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the terms of reference of the task force appointed to review aspects of the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries Act 1976 and list its members. [52901]

Mr. Macdonald: The terms of reference are:

"Having regard to the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 and in particular section 1 to:

a. review arrangements for applications for Protection Orders. This to include contents of applications, consultation arrangements, advertising etc.;

b. examine practical arrangements for ensuring that the proposed additional angling opportunities are delivered;

c. consider what arrangements should be put in place for monitoring and reporting on the operation of POs".

Members of the Task force have been appointed on the basis of the experience and expertise which it is believed they, individually, can bring to the task rather than as representatives. The names are:

G. Thomson (Chairman—SOAEFD

Dr. J. Balfour, CBE, DSc, FRSE

Mr. D. Dunkley—Inspector of Salmon & Freshwater Fisheries

Mr. A. D. Forgan—(Scottish Anglers National Association)

Mr. G. Glen—(Scottish Federation of Coarse Anglers)

Mr. D. Jamieson—(Institute of Fisheries Management)

Mr. D. Keith—(Scottish Campaign for Public Angling)

Mr. B. Davidson (Secretary)—SOAEFD

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the reviews his Department and its predecessors, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48516]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Information about reviews for 1974–75 and 1979–80 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

According to published information, the following reviews were initiated by this Department in 1992–93:

Pension Law Review.

Review of National Insurance liability on loan and current accounts.

Deregulation review of earnings and expenses for national insurance and tax purposes.

Women

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the new policy initiatives she has taken since 1 June 1997 to aid women. [47273]

Ms Ruddock: The Ministers for Women have three policy priorities—family-friendly employment, childcare and tackling violence against women. We have also identified three further areas for priority action—putting women's concerns at the heart of Government, dialogue and representation.

We have taken a range of initiatives to aid women, including:

The first ever National Childcare Strategy, launched on 19 May, to help parents, especially mothers, balance work and family life by providing high quality, affordable and accessible childcare.

Work on a national strategy to tackle all forms of violence against women, to be published in the Autumn.

Support for the family through a commitment to promote family-friendly initiatives, including through the Fairness at Work White Paper and our commitment to implement the Working Time Directive, the Part-time Work Directive and the Parental Leave Directive.

A new initiative to mainstream the women's perspective into policy-making, launched on 18 May.

Opening up a dialogue with women, launching our own Website, running two pilot women's juries and commissioning a survey of 1,000 women to seek their views on childcare, family-friendly employment and maternity rights.

An agreement across Whitehall to the principle that 50 per cent. of public appointments should be filled by women, to ensure their voice is included in decision-making.

We have also established a powerful Cabinet sub-Committee on women, drawing together Ministers from across all major Government departments to put women's priorities at the centre of Government.

We have introduced the New Deal for Lone Parents to help lone mothers move from welfare to work; forthcoming increases in Child Benefit and income-related benefits will help families with children; and we have published draft legislation to allow pensions to be shared on divorce.

Pension Rights (Former German Citizens)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations the Government have made to the German Government concerning the issue of pension rights for United Kingdom pensioners who as children were stripped of German nationality and transported to the United Kingdom prior to World War II. [49751]

Mr. Denham: The Government have not made any representations to the German Government about the level of the German retirement pensions paid to this group of UK retirement pensioners. However, the matter has been raised at official level on several occasions.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what conditions must apply before people receiving home care are entitled to an attendance allowance; and what is the value of the allowance. [52220]

Mr. Denham: A severely disabled person receiving care in their own home may qualify for Attendance Allowance if they are 65 or over and require help from another person with attention in connection with bodily functions, or they require supervision or watching over. The need for help must have existed for six months prior to the claim. There are two rates of benefit the lower rate, £34.30 and the higher rate £51.30. Detailed conditions of entitlement are set out in the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 Section 64.

SERPS

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of administering SERPS in the last year for which figures are available. [52378]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Islington North (Mr. Corbyn) on 24 July 1998, Official Report, columns 725–26.

Pensioners

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) single male pensioners, (b) single female pensioners, (c) married pensioners and (d) all pensioners who are aged (i) 60–64, (ii) 65–69, (iii) 70–74, (iv) 75–79 and (v) 80 years or older are in a household with income below half the national average where income is measured (1) before housing costs and (2) after housing costs. [52386]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table, and should be read as, for example, of all single female pensioners aged 80 or over, 28 per cent. live in households with income below half the national average before housing costs.

Percentage

	Single male pensioners	Single female pensioners	Married pensioners	All pensioners
Before housing costs
Age 60–64	n/a	(15)	n/a	(15)
Age 65–69	*14	23	17	18
Age 70–74	(16)	22	20	20
Age 75–79	*17	27	28	27
Age 80+	(21)	28	30	27
After housing costs
Age 60–64	n/a	24	n/a	24
Age 65–69	(21)	33	18	21
Age 70–74	(29)	35	24	28
Age 75–79	(27)	38	30	33
Age 80+	(22)	28	37	30

Notes:

1. Figures in brackets relate to fewer than 100 adults in the sample; cells where the sample size is fewer than 50 adults are marked by *.
2. Figures are for 1995–96.
3. The data come from the Department's Household Below Average Income (HBAI) series, based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS) which covers Great Britain. The FRS data were used to achieve a large enough sample size to provide robust information.
4. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised income. The definition of income used follows that in the published HBAI series for FRS based results. The figures may be sensitive to the choice of equivalisation scale used.
5. A single pensioner is defined as a single adult of state pension age or over. There are therefore no single male pensioners aged 60–64.
6. Married pensioners are defined as couples where the man of the benefit unit is of State pension age or over. The age of the man in the couple has been used in the table to define the age of the couple and there are therefore no married pensioners classified as aged 60–64.

NIRS2

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the NIRS2 system started operations on 13 July; and what compensation her Department has (a) sought and (b) received for delays involved. [52341]

Mr. Denham: Controlled operational usage of NIRS2 began on 13 July 1998. The Department has sought and received compensation totalling £3.732 million for delays in implementing the NIRS2 system.

Automated Benefit Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what progress has been made in automating Social Security benefit payments at post offices by ICL; [52384]

(2) if she will make a statement on the future of the benefit smart card scheme. [52385]

Mr. Denham: At present 204 post offices in the North-East and South-West of England have been automated and are paying Child Benefit by Payment Card as part of a limited trial.

The benefit Payment Card is a magnetic stripe card and not a smartcard. The Department of Social Security, Post Office Counters Ltd. and ICL Pathway continue to work together to plan the next stages of the project to introduce the benefit Payment Card.

Council Tax Relief

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 23 June 1998, Official Report, column 493, if she will list the specific amounts she calculated for individual elements in computing the total amount of personal allowance for council tax relief. [52527]

Mr. Denham: The amount of Council Tax Benefit depends on the level of council tax liability, less the amount which the individual is expected to contribute. The rates of personal allowance for Council Tax Benefit are based on those for Income Support, which are intended to cover day to day living expenses. However, the Income Support rates are not set on the basis of a "basket of goods", and there are no separate amounts for specific items.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the impact on the housing benefit budget over each of the next five years if registered rent increases were limited to (a) the RPI, (b) the RPI plus one per cent., (c) the RPI plus five per cent. and (d) the RPI plus 10 per cent. relative to existing spending plans. [52496]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is restricted to the next three years because Departmental spending plans only exist for those years and is set out in the table.

The spending plans assumed that these rents will not increase as quickly as they did in the recent past. However, it is possible that Housing Benefit expenditure on registered rents may actually reduce if the Government proposals on limiting fair rent increases are implemented.

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
RPI	−15	−25	−25
RPI+1 per cent.	−10	−20	−25
RPI+5 per cent.	−5	−10	−10
RPI+10 per cent.	+5	+10	+20

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the figure of fraud in Disability Living Allowance set out in the Annexe to her report, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business", she estimates to result from errors by recipients. [52566]

Mr. Denham: As we have explained in the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future", estimating fraud in Disability Living Allowance (DLA) presents particular difficulties. This is because entitlement depends on care and mobility needs which are not easily estimated other than through the formal adjudication process. As a result the estimates of confirmed and strongly suspected fraud for DLA will include errors by customers. It is not possible to quantify these.

Lone Parents (Staffordshire)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in Staffordshire, listed by Benefits Agency district, were in receipt of income support on the most recent date for which figures are available; and how many dependants were in lone parent families on that date. [51911]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Government are taking action to improve the lives of lone parents on Income Support and their families. The New Deal for Lone Parents is designed to give lone parents the same choice of improving their families' lives through paid work that parents in couples enjoy. All parents will benefit from the increase from April 1999 in Child Benefit and the corresponding increase in family premium in income-related benefits. Parents on income-related benefits with children under the age of 11 will also receive extra help through the increase in the child allowance in those benefits from November 1998.

The administration of Income Support is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Brian Jenkins, dated 24 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for information relating to the number of lone parents and their dependants in receipt of Income Support (IS) in Staffordshire by Benefits Agency District.

The information requested is contained in the attached annex. It is the latest available and is provisional and may be subject to change.

I hope that this is helpful.

Number of lone parents and dependants (in thousands) by Benefits Agency (BA) Districts in Staffordshire—November 1997

BA district	Number of Income Support customers in receipt of the family premium (lone parent rate)	Number of dependants whose parents receive the family premium (lone parent rate)
North Staffordshire (which includes the offices of Hanley, Longton and Newcastle)	7,000	13,000
Central Staffordshire (which includes the offices of Cannock, Lichfield and Stafford)	5,000	9,000
Derwent and Trent (which includes the offices of Burton on Trent, Derby Beckett Street, Derby London Road and Ilkeston)	9,000	19,000

Number of lone parents and dependants (in thousands) by Benefits Agency (BA) Districts in Staffordshire—November 1997

BA district	Number of Income Support customers in receipt of the family premium (lone parent rate)	Number of dependants whose parents receive the family premium (lone parent rate)
Wolverhampton (which includes the office of Wolverhampton Temple Street)	6,000	12,000
Total	27,000	53,000

Notes:

1. Numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand and may not sum
2. Data are based on a 5 per cent. sample
3. Lone parents are defined as claimants receiving the family premium (lone parent rate) and will exclude some single parents who receive a higher value premium, such as the disability or pensioner premium
4. Dependants are aged 0–18 years

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the problems faced by small and medium sized companies in the administration of pension schemes in respect of the millennium bug. [52340]

Mr. Denham: Information about pension scheme administration systems is not collected centrally. Many of the smaller occupational pension schemes are, of course, administered by insurance companies or specialist firms of pensions consultants. My hon. Friend the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry is responsible for the Action 2000 programme which is actively promoting awareness among small and medium sized enterprises about year 2000 compliance in the operation of their businesses.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide updated details of the commercial and non-commercial interests of the members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee which would potentially conflict with responsibilities incumbent on a member of the Committee. [53226]

Dr. John Cunningham: Members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) are not required by law to declare their commercial and non-commercial interests as this is a scientific advisory committee with no trading or financial objectives. However, in the interests of open government, the members of SEAC provide such information and the interests declared by members are listed in the following table.

Fisheries Research

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of the fisheries research laboratory at Conwy. [53227]

Dr. John Cunningham: The laboratory at Conwy is part of the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS), an Executive Agency of MAFF. Consistent with the Agency's obligation to provide an efficient and effective scientific service, CEFAS has been reviewing the future requirements for this laboratory. Conwy is the smallest CEFAS laboratory and currently has spare capacity. The Agency has explored whether it is realistic for this to be taken up by new work or whether it would be more efficient to relocate the existing functions to another CEFAS site.

The review has concluded that, in the interests of adapting CEFAS's structure to the longer term needs of its customers in an increasingly competitive market, the programme of work currently carried out at Conwy should be transferred to other CEFAS sites. As a result, the Agency plans to vacate the Conwy laboratory by March 2000. It is intended to move the shellfish and fish cultivation work programme and the majority of staff presently based at Conwy to the CEFAS Weymouth laboratory, and the work on coastal zone management and the environmental effects of fishing to the Agency's laboratory at Lowestoft. CEFAS has initiated a resettlement programme that will allow as many as possible of the science specialists at Conwy to continue their work at the new locations. Redundancies will be kept to a minimum. Recognising local concerns, in disposing of the Conwy site we will be sympathetic to bids that propose to make use of the facilities to support the Welsh fishing industry.

The consolidation of work at CEFAS's laboratories at Weymouth and Lowestoft will improve the utilisation of existing facilities. It will enable the Agency to provide a more cost effective service to its customers and enhance its position as a world leader in the areas of environment, fisheries and aquaculture science.

Milk Marque

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the decision by major dairy companies not to submit bids in the Milk Marque July 1998 selling round. [52553]

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will refer to the Office of Fair Trading the latest round of milk sales by Milk Marque and the decision by major milk processors not to enter bids. [52473]

Mr. Rooker: The supply of raw milk in Great Britain is currently the subject of an inquiry by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC), which will be able to take into account the latest round of milk sales during its investigations. The MMC is due to report to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in the Autumn.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the latest round of milk sales by Milk Marque. [52472]

Mr. Rooker: We have received representations from various milk industry interests.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to intervene in the current dispute between the dairy industry and Milk Marque. [52647]

Mr. Rooker: None. This is a matter for the competition authorities.

Action with Communities in Rural England

Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 399, on his address to Action with Communities in Rural England, what other titles for the address were discussed (a) by Ministers and (b) with officials. [52401]

Mr. Rooker: Earlier this year my right hon. Friend accepted an invitation to address the annual ACRE conference. At that time no final decision had been made by ACRE about the title of the conference. ACRE considered entitling their conference "Towards a Ministry of Rural Affairs" but finally decided to entitle it "Towards a new Government strategy for Rural Affairs". The speech which I delivered was entitled 'An Integrated Strategy for Rural Affairs'; alternative titles for the speech were not discussed with Ministers or officials.

Seeds Regulations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he intends to take following appeal court judgment (Regina v Secretary of State for the Environment and MAFF ex parte Watson) in respect of current national seed listing trials deemed to be in breach of current regulation; [52492]

(2) following the Appeal Court judgment (Regina v Secretary of State for the Environment and MAFF ex parte Watson), what is the earliest date he expects genetically modified plant varieties to be available for commercial planting. [52493]

Mr. Rooker: I do not expect genetically modified plant varieties to be commercially available in the UK before the 1999 growing season at the earliest. As regards the action I propose to take in respect of varieties currently in trials, the Court of Appeal took the view that the position ought to be resolved speedily across the board. I am therefore seeking urgent legal advice as to how this can be done most effectively for all plant varieties currently in National List tests and trials, where those varieties are of a species to which Regulation 11(3) of the Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) Regulations 1982 (as amended) applies.

Rural England White Paper

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 628, if he will list where the (a) seminars and (b) other meetings on the Rural England White Paper took place; and which organisations and individuals attended on each occasion. [51477]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Attendance at the seminars on the Rural England White Paper was by invitation only. A list showing the dates and locations of the seminars, along with lists of delegates invited, including details of the organisations they represented, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Numerous other meetings were held in relation to the White Paper, "Rural England". These were attended by a range of organisations representing a cross section of rural interests. It is not possible to provide the detailed information requested about the attendance and location of these meetings without disproportionate cost.

Pig Offal

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take measures to prevent the import of pig meat produced using rendered pig offal. [52013]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis) on 16 July 1998, Official Report, column 307.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to make each of the three payments under the sheep annual premium scheme; and for what reasons no first payments have yet been made of the premium for 1998. [51926]

Dr. John Cunningham: Payment of the first advance of the 1998 Sheep Annual Premium is underway (in line with the normal timetable of recent years) and will be completed next month. The second advance should be paid during November and the final balances in April 1999. The European Commission sets the rates for each of the three payments and individual payments to farmers cannot be made until those rates have been published in EU Regulations.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total acreage of land in set-aside in the United Kingdom on 1 July 1998. [51852]

Mr. Rooker: The total acreage of land set aside in the United Kingdom under the Arable Area Payments Scheme for 1998 will not be known until all the applications under the Scheme have been checked and collated. I will write to my hon. Friend when the information is available.

Correspondence

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's average response time to correspondence from members of the public; and how such response times are monitored. [48635]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 159. The Ministry and its agencies monitor all relevant correspondence from the public, but keep records only of the number of letters received and whether they were answered within published targets. Information on average response times is therefore not available.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome (Employment)

32. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what assessment he has made of the effects of the Millennium Dome on employment in the London area. [50800]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company has provided £1 million to establish the Greenwich Local Labour and Business scheme to provide training and employment for local people. The latest figures show that through this scheme more than 550 people have found employment, including over 200 people working on the Dome site. More than 650 people have taken up training courses.

The economic benefits of building the Millennium Dome reach far beyond Greenwich and London. Specialist construction contractors throughout the country are creating and protecting jobs as a direct result of their work on the Dome. In all more than 2,000 jobs have been created in the construction phase of the project.

Millennium Dome (Architects' Fees)

33. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on the cost to date of the architects' fees for the Millennium Dome. [50801]

Mr. Mandelson: The architects' fees are calculated on the basis of a percentage of the construction costs which are very tightly controlled. The contractual arrangement regarding the fees is commercial in confidence.

Millennium Experience (Young People)

34. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on his estimate of the level of involvement by young people in the planning of the Millennium Experience. [50802]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has established 12 Youth Councils for the English regions, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales to consult young people throughout the UK on the Millennium Experience. Members were nominated by headteachers, local authority education directors and youth organisations from around the UK. The Company has also set up a UK wide Youth Council to advise the Company on how the Dome and its associated Learning Experience will impact upon young people. The first meeting of the UK Millennium Youth Council was held in London on 16 July.

Millennium Experience (Regions)

35. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what recent representations he has received about replicating the experience of the Millennium Dome in the regions. [50803]

Mr. Mandelson: I have received no representations about replicating the experience of the Millennium Dome in the regions. The Dome is the centrepiece of a UK wide celebration of the Millennium. There will be projects, events and activities all round the country in the year 2000. For example in my hon. Friend's region there will be the National Discovery Park in Liverpool and the National Wildflower Centre on Merseyside. There will also be a wide range of sporting events which will form part of the Millennium Festival.

38. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to link the Millennium Experience with Millennium events in other parts of the country. [50806]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is organising a dedicated national programme of events and activities throughout the country related to the Dome. The NMEC is also discussing with the Millennium Commission the possibility of collaboration between the Dome and the flagship projects funded by the Commission.

Millennium Dome (Sponsors)

37. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will make a statement on progress in attracting private sector sponsorship for the Millennium Dome. [50805]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) earlier today.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what undertakings he has given to sponsors of the Millennium Dome. [50804]

Mr. Mandelson: As shareholder of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) I have offered no undertakings to sponsors. Whilst retaining overall editorial control to ensure the integrity of the Millennium Experience the NMEC are offering sponsors a range of benefits depending on the level of sponsorship involved.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what ethical criteria he applies in selecting potential sponsors for the Millennium Dome. [49152]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: In identifying potential sponsors, the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) are determined to maintain the integrity of the project as the focus for the nation's millennium celebrations, and to ensure that any sponsorship arrangement does not diminish the inclusive nature of the Experience. These broad considerations underpin the Company's decisions in respect of its commercial income target.

Millennium Experience (Budget)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the current budget for each of the zones in the Millennium Experience. [45132]

Mr. Mandelson: The budget for each zone is commercially confidential. To reveal it would damage the New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC) negotiating position with designers, sponsors and contractors.

Millennium Experience (Logo)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to make a large-scale model of the figure in the New Millennium Experience logo. [45563]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is currently considering this idea.

Millennium Dome (Power Supply)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what contingency plans have been made to maintain the supply of power to the Millennium Dome in the event of a collapse of the power supply system. [46457]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has designed a degree of resilience into the supply to the Dome site and the site infrastructure such that minor power failures would not disrupt the running and operation of the Millennium Experience. In the event of a total and sustained power failure, the NMEC will be able to maintain safety systems.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister without Portfolio (1) what will be inside the giant human figure in the Millennium Dome; [47278]

(2) what is the estimated cost of the giant human figure in the Millennium Dome; [47277]

(3) if he will publish the tender document for the giant human figure in the Millennium Dome; [47281]

(4) if he will make a statement on the sex of the giant human figure in the Millennium Dome; [47282]

(5) which firms will be responsible for creating the giant human figure in the Millennium Dome; [47279]

(6) if he will make a statement on the proposals for a giant human figure in the Millennium Dome; [47283]

(7) how many giant human figures there will be in the Millennium Dome. [47276]

Mr. Mandelson: [holding answer 23 June 1998]: In order to ensure adequate visitor flow, proposals for the Body Zone now involve two large human figures, one male and one female, brought together as a single structure. Visitors will be able to walk inside the figures and explore and experience the wonders of the human body: how it works, how it has developed; and what the future holds. The overall Body Zone will also address wider issues such as genetics, lifestyles, and medical discoveries.

The designers of the Zone are HP:ICM. The cost of the figures within the Body Zone is commercially confidential at this stage. To reveal it would damage the New Millennium Experience Company's (NMEC's) negotiating position with potential sponsors and contractors. There will be a range of tenders for different works in all the exhibit zones such as heavy structural work, IT equipment, and sound and lighting systems.

Millennium Dome (@ Now Zone)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what changes he has made to plans for the @ Now Zone since May 1997. [48826]

Mr. Mandelson: Plans for all the exhibit zones within the Millennium Experience are a matter for the New Millennium Experience Company. The exhibits are the subject of ongoing development as part of an interactive creative process to ensure that come 31 December 1999 and throughout the year 2000, the Experience will excite, entertain and educate in a way which will be the envy of the world.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if the body deciding the contents of the @ Now Zone includes representatives from the Yorkshire and Humberside Region. [48831]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is responsible for deciding the content of all zones in close liaison with other relevant parties, including sponsors. The Company aims to ensure that views from across the country inform the development of the UK @ Now Zone.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio who will provide the exhibits and plan the theme of the @ Now Zone. [48823]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is responsible for the delivery of each zone and has editorial control over the content, story line and theme of each exhibit, including the UK @ Now Zone.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if the @ Now Zone will include exhibits relating to regional cultural identities. [48832]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is currently considering the nature and scope of the exhibits within the UK @ Now Zone. Regional cultural identity is one of the many issues which the Company, with the sponsors and other relevant groups, will address in taking forward the development of the zone.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if sponsors in the @ Now Zone will be exclusively British. [48824]

Mr. Mandelson: It is likely that the sponsors will be British based companies. As already announced, Marks and Spencer are part sponsoring this zone.

Millennium Dome (Fourteenth Zone)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what will be the theme of the fourteenth zone of the Millennium Dome. [49178]

Mr. Mandelson: The theme of the fourteenth zone will be "Mobility". This zone will examine how we will travel in the future, locally, nationally and internationally.

Millennium Dome (Air Conditioning)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 602, what special technical measures are being taken, at what extra cost, to ensure the proposed air-conditioning system for the Millennium Dome does not leak HFCs into the environment in excess of 1 per cent. [49240]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) will employ a number of methods and techniques in order to ensure that the target of less than 1 per cent. emission is met. These include regular inspections by technicians together with automated detection and alarm systems. All costs will be met from within the existing budget for the project.

Millennium Dome (Athletics Facilities)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what are the funding arrangements for the proposed athletics facilities in the Millennium Dome. [49653]

Mr. Mandelson: There are no proposed athletics facilities in the Millennium Dome.

London City Airport

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what insurance costs are being borne by the New Millennium Experience Company in respect of London City Airport. [50742]

Mr. Mandelson: The presence of the Dome structure has implications for the alternative take-off and landing routes for London City Airport in certain rare weather conditions. The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) reimburses London City Airport for the insurance policy which covers the cost of redirecting aircraft in those rare circumstances. The costs of that policy are £22,000 until the end of 1998 and £17,500 per year thereafter.

Millennium Dome (Serious Play Zone)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what consultations his Department has had regarding the content of the serious play zone of the Millennium Dome. [47394]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Officials in my Department provide support to the Minister without Portfolio in his capacity as sole shareholder of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) and are in regular contact on all issues relating to the Millennium Dome, including its content. My officials will continue to monitor the Dome's progress and will consult with other interested parties as and when necessary.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the reviews his Department and any predecessors, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48517]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information requested is not readily available. However a search of the Parliamentary Questions' database (which holds information from 1979 onwards) has revealed during 1979–80 (in the then Civil Service Department) a review of the Government statistical services; and during 1992–93 (in the then Office of Public Service and Science) a review of open government.

Government Staff

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of those in employment are employed by central Government or agencies of central Government in terms of (a) numbers and (b) percentages for (i) full-time and (ii) part-time employment. [50630]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The numbers and proportions of full and part time UK employees and Civil Servants at the start of 1998 are set out in the following table:

	All employees	Civil Servants
		Number	Per cent.
Full-time	17,564,000	446,000	2.5
Part-time	5,816,000	59,000	1.0
Total	23,380,000	505,000	2.2

Notes:
1. Civil Servant figures are on headcount basis and include both permanent and casual employees
2. Approximately 10,000 Civil Servants are located outside the United Kingdom. They are included in the Civil Service figures above
3. The Northern Ireland Civil Service is not included

Channel Tunnel

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the operations of the company managing the Channel Tunnel will be covered by the proposed Freedom of Information Act. [51213]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The proposed Freedom of Information Act is intended principally to cover the public sector but it will also extend to private sector companies where these companies are carrying out functions conferred on them by statute. The two companies which form Eurotunnel, the Channel Tunnel Group Ltd and France-Manche SA operating under the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement are commercial organisations whose management of the Channel Tunnel does not fall into this category. Eurotunnel itself will not therefore come within the scope of the proposed Freedom of Information Act, although information relating to Eurotunnel held by the relevant public authorities will be within scope.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the consistency of Clause 33.3 of the Treaty of Canterbury with the Government's policy of open Government. [51373]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Clause 33.3 of the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement signed in 1986 states that each of the parties to that Agreement and the Intergovernmental Commission and the Safety Authority,

"shall hold in confidence all Documents and other information whether technical or commercial supplied to them by or on behalf of any other party hereto relating to the Fixed Link and shall not save as required by law or procedural practices publish or otherwise disclose the same otherwise than for the purposes contemplated by [the Agreement]".

The reference to "law or procedural practices" ensures that the provision is consistent with the requirements of the current Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and, when it comes into force, our proposed Freedom of Information Act.

Departmental Insurance

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Government departments and agencies are self-insured and which have insurance cover through the insurance market in respect of compulsory employers' liability insurance. [50632]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Government departments and agencies are not bound by the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969. Therefore departments and agencies are not statutorily required to insure the risks which may arise under the Act. Departments and agencies may decide to insure or not to insure on value for money grounds. That is a decision for each department and agency and no central record is kept.

Departmental Claims (Injury and Illness)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total amount for each of the last three years paid by each Government department to Government staff in respect of claims brought by them for personal injury or occupational illness by way of (a) damages and (b) legal costs. [50629]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This information is not held centrally.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to minimise the bureaucratic burden on private sector employers participating in New Deal programmes, with particular reference to training contracts. [52346]

Mr. Andrew Smith: New Deal was designed following consultation with a wide range of organisations including private sector employers. The administrative arrangements for employers participating in the New Deal are straightforward. Their obligations and the level of service they can expect from New Deal are set out in the Employer Agreement. Employers are free to make their own arrangements for securing the training the young people they recruit under New Deal are entitled to. Alternatively that training can be arranged on behalf of the employer by the Employment Service (ES). No contract with the employer, beyond the Employer Agreement, is involved in either case.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what further support he will offer to New Deal trainees in support of their Gateway activities after their initial period has elapsed. [52347]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Throughout their time on New Deal young people will receive the support of a Personal Adviser. During Gateway, each young person will in addition have access to independent careers advice and specialist help to overcome the particular barriers to employment that they are facing. When a young person's difficulties are particularly serious or far-reaching or when a particular difficulty does not come to light until they have started on an option, then the young person can continue to have access to specialist Gateway services while they are on their chosen Option. The over-riding aim is to help young people into sustained employment through specialist services, counselling, advice, time on a New Deal Option, and, if necessary, further help as part of the Follow Through arrangements.

Schools (Extra-curricular Opportunities)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to instruct schools to incorporate in their prospectuses a statement of the extra-curricular opportunities offered by that school; and if he will make a statement. [52650]

Ms Estelle Morris: My Department has recently issued revised guidance to schools on the content of school prospectuses. All schools must include in their prospectus a statement on the ethos and values of the school. The guidance recommends that schools cover their main extra-curricular activities in the statement on ethos and values. The guidance also recommends that schools include in their prospectus a statement on the school's arts policy and provision.

Sex Education

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will issue advice to secondary schools about informing pupils of the dangers to health of unprotected sex. [52345]

Ms Estelle Morris: All maintained secondary schools are already statutorily required to provide sex education, including education about HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted infections. We intend to disseminate existing good practice more widely. We are, with the Department of Health, considering sex and relationships education in the context of the Government's health strategy.

Student Funding

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what level of per capita funding the Government plan for further education students in each year from 1998–99 to 2001–02. [51836]

Dr. Howells: The planned public funding per full-time equivalent student in Government-funded further education in 1998–99 is £2,840. The figure for 1999–2000 will reflect the planned one per cent. efficiency saving for that year announced in the White Paper "Comprehensive Spending Review: new public spending plans 1999–2000" (Cmnd 4011). Further details about our plans for 1999–2000, and the provision that we intend to make for 2000–2002, will be announced in the autumn.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what level of per capita funding the Government plan for higher education students in each year from 1998–99 to 2001–02. [51831]

Dr. Howells: Publicly planned provision for higher education for 1998–99, including contributions to tuition fees from public funds and from students, implies funding of £4,704 per student. In 1999–2000, there will be an extra £280 million for universities, colleges and students, a 5.7 per cent. cash increase for higher education. Further details of funding for 1999–2000, along with later years, will be announced in due course.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the level of per capita funding provided by the Government for students in higher education in each year from 1992–93 to 1997–98. [51830]

Dr. Howells: The level of public funding per student in higher education in each of the financial years 1992–93 to 1997–98 is shown in the following table:

1992–93	5,760
1993–94	5,422
1994–95	5,278
1995–96	5,027
1996–97	4,705

Note:

Figures are in real terms at 1997–98 prices. Research funds were transferred from DfEE to the Research Councils in 1992–93 and 1993–94 (leading to high unit costs in these two years), and they reflect changes in the way students were counted to include continuing education students from 1995–96

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the level of per capita funding provided by the Government for students in further education in each year from 1992–93 to 1997–98. [51832]

Dr. Howells: The public funding per full-time equivalent student in Government-funded further education from 1993–94 to 1997–98 is shown in the following table:

1993–94	3,080
1994–95	3,040
1995–96	2,930
1996–97	2,920
1997–98[1]	2,900

[1] Estimated

Notes:

1. The figures are given in cash terms and rounded to the nearest £10

2. No figure is available for 1992–93 on a comparable basis with the above series

Key Stage 1

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to publish Key Stage 1 results together with average class sizes for all primary schools. [52563]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have in hand an extensive programme of improvements to both the secondary and primary performance tables. We will continue to keep this matter under review.

Dance and Drama

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places at dance and drama schools are being supported by the interim funding scheme; and if he will make a statement. [52649]

Dr. Howells: 540 students in interim funding scheme places have so far received support during 1997–98.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce long-term arrangements for the funding of students of dance and drama; and if he will make a statement. [52651]

Dr. Howells: An announcement on the long-term arrangements for funding students of dance and drama is planned for the Autumn, subject to continued successful development work.

Information Technology

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding is provided for in-post IT training and updating for education professionals in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) further and higher education; and if he will make a statement. [52102]

Ms Estelle Morris:

IT training in primary and secondary schools

Content of in-service training for education professionals in primary and secondary schools is for schools and LEAs to decide. Separate figures are not available on amounts spent on IT training.

Funding for specific initiatives to ensure that all teachers are confident and competent in ICT use is as follows:

- £230 million to be available through National Lottery funding in the period up to 2002, to train 450,000 teachers in the effective use of ICT;
- £100m Standards Fund available 1998–99 to support the establishment of the National Grid for Learning (to cover networking; Internet connection; hard-and software, basic training not covered by the lottery initiative);
- £23 million this financial year for the Multimedia Laptop Portables Scheme, to enable teachers to gain hands-on experience of computers.

IT training in further and higher education

The Further Education Funding Council is promoting a new staff development initiative, the Quality in Information and Learning Technology (QUILT) programme, with an injection of £1.9m over a five-year period from 1997.

Colleges themselves invest considerable funds in developing their staff, but figures are not held for the amounts spent on IT training.

Higher education institutions are autonomous bodies responsible for the management of their own academic and financial affairs. They train their staff through internal development programmes. Figures are not held centrally for amounts spent on IT training.

Trainee Doctors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women are currently training at medical schools to become doctors. [51853]

Dr. Howells: In 1997–98, the latest year for which figures are available, the numbers of students studying medicine at undergraduate level in those universities in the UK with medical schools were 11,528 men and 12,457 women.

Alcohol and Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the impact on UK employment of the smuggling of (a) drink and (b) tobacco from the European mainland. [52294]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I have been asked to reply.

I have no information about the consequences of alcohol and tobacco smuggling relating to UK employment in particular. However, the Government are very much aware of the illegal trade in alcohol and tobacco and its effect on the legitimate trade. In his July Budget last year the Chancellor announced a review to examine the effects of alcohol and tobacco fraud, smuggling and cross-border shopping. The Government will announce the outcome of the review shortly.

HEALTH

Pharmaceuticals

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria will be taken into account in the re-negotiation of the Pharmaceutical Pricing Scheme. [49283]

Mr. Milburn: The approach taken in the negotiations on the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme is governed by the principles which drive all of our programme for the National Health Service—promoting the nation's health and providing comprehensive, high quality health care for patients. Within that framework we have a responsibility to see that public money is spent effectively, and to encourage the pharmaceutical industry to produce new and improved medicines at reasonable prices.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is proposing to take to ensure a fully competitive market in supplying drugs to the NHS. [51047]

Mr. Milburn: A number of factors impede the operation of a fully competitive market in some parts of the pharmaceutical sector. Intellectual property protection, necessary so that research and development can be carried out, means that there is often only one medicine appropriate to a particular condition. A competitive market flourishes where patents have expired and generic medicines are available; where this does not occur, alternative arrangements like the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme are needed.

Hospital Services (Vale of York)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional money was made available for (a) additional beds, (b) orthopaedic operations, (c) oral surgery operations and (d) cataract operations in the Vale of York area in 1996–97. [50756]

Mr. Milburn: The information is not available in the form requested.

Melanomas

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much Government funding has been provided for the Medical Research Council trial on the use of alpha-interferon in the treatment of melanomas. [50917]

Ms Jowell: None. This is not a Medical Research Council trial and no MRC funding goes towards it. As a commercial trial, no National Health Service funding would be used in support of the trial.

Artificial Resuscitation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage the education of the public in artificial resuscitation techniques. [50947]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: We are working across Government to promote awareness of the ABC of resuscitation—Airway, Breathing, Circulation. This includes for example the recent announcement that the Government are to extend Value Added Tax relief to resuscitation models used by charities for first aid training.

Medical Records

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that patients are not charged more than £10 to see their medical records. [51044]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The Access to Health Records Act 1990 already provides that an application fee of no more than £10 can be charged for sight of a patient's records. However, the Act also allows record-holders to recover the costs of producing copies of the records if these are required, but record-holders should not seek to make a profit when calculating these charges.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential for breaching of the confidentiality of patients' personal medical information if the Department of Trade and Industry's proposals on regulating the use of encryption on public networks lead to the escrow of encryption keys for clinical data. [51651]

Mr. Milburn: We are awaiting proposals from the Department of Trade and Industry on the conditions and procedures which would govern the escrow of encryption keys where personal medical information is involved. Our concern to safeguard patient confidentiality has been relayed to the Department of Trade and Industry, and an assessment of the impact of the detailed proposals will be made when they are received.

Cateracts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cataract operations were performed in NHS hospitals in the Greater London area in each of the last three years. [51539]

Mr. Milburn: The information for in-patient treatment in National Health Service trust hospitals is based on Finished Consultant Episodes (FCEs), which represent the number of episodes of care under individual consultants. The total number of FCEs recorded for cataract operations for Greater London trusts is as follows:

1996–97: not available

1994–95: 24,781

The data are grossed for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data.

Residential Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, columns 530–31, concerning backdating financial assistance for residential and nursing home placements, with which organisation his Department has consulted in drawing up the guidance to accompany the Community Care (Residential Accommodation) Act 1998. [52276]

Mr. Boateng: We consulted the Local Government Association, the Association of London Government, the National Association of Finance Officers, and these voluntary organisations: Age Concern, Help the Aged, Anchor Housing Trust, Abbeyfield, the Community Care Trust, Hanover Housing, the Alzheimers Disease Society, Mencap, the National Association of Citizen Advice Bureaux, Carer's National Association, the Relative's Association, the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, and MIND.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, columns 530–31, concerning his Department's guidance, LAC (98)B, if he will make it his policy to amend the National Assistance Act 1948 to allow a resident placed by a local authority to fund the difference between what the authority is able to pay and more expensive placement. [52277]

Mr. Boateng: The terms of reference of the Royal Commission on long-term care of elderly people ask them to look at how the cost of long term care should be apportioned between public funds and individuals. The commission is due to report by the end of the year.

Continence Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 529, concerning continence services, what advice or instructions he expects to issue to inform the next commissioning round. [52274]

Mr. Milburn: The guidance "Continence—an agenda for action for continence services" which was issued to the National Health Service in 1991 already provides advice on continence services.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 529, concerning continence services, when his Department commenced its review of continence policy; and when he will publish his conclusions. [52275]

Mr. Milburn: The work to develop the review of continence policy started in April 1998 and a research and development seminar was held on 12 June. It is envisaged that the results of the review will be reflected in guidance that will be issued in due course.

Asylum Seekers (Children)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children of asylum applicants were taken into care or otherwise became the responsibility of local authorities in the last year for which figures are available. [52062]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Transplant Surgery Waiting List

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the waiting list for transplant surgery exceeded 6,000. [52363]

Mr. Boateng: The total number of patients (active and suspended) awaiting solid organ transplants first exceeded 6,000 in December 1995 with the number standing at 6,003 on 31 December 1995. At 12 July 1998 the total (active and suspended) was 6,494.

An active patient refers to someone who is well and awaiting their transplant. A suspended patient is someone who is not well enough to have a transplant and has been temporarily removed from the waiting list.

Xenotransplantation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of the Committee on Dangerous Pathogens in relation to Xenotransplantation. [52352]

Ms Jowell: The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens (ACDP) considered the risks of infectious disease associated with xenotransplantation in 1996 and jointly hosted a workshop on 'Infectious Disease and Xenotransplantation' with the Advisory Group on Ethics of Xenotransplantation. The report of this workshop was published in January 1997 as part of the advisory group's report 'Animal Tissue into Humans'. Additionally the ACDP have advised the Medicines Control Agency and Gene Therapy Advisory Committee on the infection risks posed by a gene therapy trial.

The ACDP is currently convening a meeting of experts to assess the risks of various types of xenotransplant and will provide advice on these issues to the United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 526, regarding the cost of ensuring millennium computer compliance in the NHS, what factors underlay the length of time taken to answer the question tabled for answer on 22 June. [52562]

Mr. Milburn: Estimating the cost of Millennium compliance in the National Health Service is a complex issue and I wanted to be fully confident that the figures given in the reply were accurate and up to date before answering.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is supporting into the treatment of osteoporosis. [51959]

Ms Jowell: The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research. The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Trade and Industry. The total value of current MRC grants for research related to osteoporosis is £5.6 million. Work being carried out at the MRC's own establishments includes:

- a study currently being undertaken by the MRC Dunn Nutrition Unit entitled Micronutrient research: role of calcium and other factors in the development of peak bone mass and osteoporosis. The MRC Environmental Epidemiology Unit is undertaking a study into Risk Factors for cardiovascular disease, osteoporosis and cognitive decline in people born in the Jessop Hospital;
- the Department of Health/MRC Nutrition Programme (Phase II) is undertaking three studies linked to osteoporosis and diet. These are Dietary and other determinants of bone health and fracture in men and women. Assessment of nutritional, physical activity and genetic factors influencing perimenopausal bone health, and Interventions to maximise bone mineralisation in adolescents: benefits of calcium and exercise for 16–18 year olds.

Announced by the MRC in October 1996, the Women's International Study of long Duration Oestrogen after Menopause (WISDOM) will be co-ordinated in the United Kingdom by researchers at the MRC Epidemiology and Medical Care Unit, London. One of the main objectives of WISDOM is to establish how hormone replacement therapy (HRT) affects the incidence of bone fractures caused by osteoporosis.

The Department's Policy Research Programme (PRP) recently completed funding of a study entitled HRT in the menopause: a cost-effective analysis. The research was undertaken at the University of Oxford.

The National Health Service research and development programme's Standing Group on Health Technologies has identified research proposals for osteoporosis as a priority area and two projects have been commissioned: one on the treatment of established osteoporosis and the other on evaluation of methods for identifying and monitoring the treatment of osteoporosis.

There are also other projects being undertaken on a regional basis.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the health authorities in (a) Staffordshire and (b) the West Midlands which have an osteoporosis strategy in place; [51958]

(2) if he will estimate for the last year for which figures are available, how many NHS patients suffered from osteoporosis, the number of fractures attributable to osteoporosis and the number of beds being used for osteoporitic fractures in (a) Staffordshire and (b) the West Midlands. [51960]

Ms Jowell: Information on individual health authority strategies is not collected centrally. Data on neither the number of beds being used for osteoporosis nor all fractures specifically attributable to the condition are available. Specific numbers of sufferers are not available, but the table lists finished consultant episodes with a diagnosis of osteoporosis for National Health Service trusts in Staffordshire and the West Midlands region.

	Staffordshire	West Midlands
Number of first FCEs with diagnosis of osteoporosis (ICD10 M80-M82)	161	1,204
Number of first FCEs with diagnosis of osteoporosis with pathological fracture (ICD10 M80)	53	309

Health Services (Worcestershire)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received all papers relevant to the restructuring of health services in Worcestershire; and when he expects to reach a decision on the issue. [52646]

Mr. Milburn: The formal submission to Ministers on Worcestershire Health Authority's strategic review has been made by officials at the West Midlands Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive. Ministers will be making a final decision, based on that submission, in due course.

Social Services (Worcestershire)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from carers and their representatives in Worcestershire about funding for social services; and if he will make a statement. [52644]

Mr. Boateng: A number of representations have been received from carers and users of personal social services in Worcestershire about funding for social services. In recognition of the vital role carers fulfil in helping relatives or friends, I am leading a government-wide review of measures to help carers as part of a carers national strategy. The objective is to bring together a range of initiatives designed to address carers' concerns and give them support.

Primary Care Group

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from which budget the cost of employing the chief executives of the new Primary Care Group will be met. [51915]

Mr. Milburn: The costs of employing Primary Care Group staff will be met from health authority unified budget allocations.

NHS Funding Allocation

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account will be taken of rurality in the allocation of funds to the NHS. [51917]

Mr. Milburn: A weighted capitation formula is used to determine each health authority's fair share of available resources and to enable them to commission similar levels of health services for populations in similar need.

In 1998/99 we introduced a new adjustment to the formula for emergency ambulance services, which includes a rurality factor. This was on the advice of the Advisory Committee on Resource Allocation following a review of the cost of providing services in rural areas. The formula takes account of the health needs of populations, both rural and urban.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the implications of the Comprehensive Spending Review for health authorities which have in 1998–99 a significant deficit on their current account, with particular reference to West Hertfordshire. [51454]

Mr. Milburn: The extra resources of £21 billion (United Kingdom) announced as the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) for the years 1999–2000 to 2001–2002 will be used to modernise and reform services.

We have already made an additional £1.7 billion (UK) available for the National Health Service in 1998–99. The NHS Executive has issued firm guidance that the need for financial balance is critical; and the majority of health authorities in England with financial problems are expected to achieve a balanced financial position by the end of 1998–99. In certain specific cases, where there are deep seated structural problems, this may not be achievable by the end of the current year and a health authority may be allowed to regain financial balance over a number of years. The regional offices of the NHS Executive have developed recovery plans for those NHS bodies with significant deficits. The plan for West Hertfordshire aims to achieve financial balance as soon as possible.

Hepatitis B (Devon)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance to the Director of Education in Devon concerning the advice that should be given to those families affected by the current hepatitis B health alert at Paignton Community College, Devon. [52348]

Mr. Boateng: We understand that South and West Devon Health Authority and Torbay Council have already agreed a joint approach to the management of this incident.

A joint letter and hepatitis B factsheet was distributed to children from a local community college and their parents on Friday 17 July. The letter provided information about the means of transmission of the disease and its potential risk to health. Individuals who may have concerns that they had contact with an infected adult in the community were invited to contact a health authority advice line.

The health authority is offering testing and immunisation against hepatitis B to any individual who feels that they may have had high-risk contact with this person. This includes any child attending the local community college.

Ambulance Ages

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 July 1998, Official Report, column 570, regarding ambulance ages, (a) on what date he initiated his informal assessment of ambulance ages, (b) how many ambulance trusts were involved in his informal assessment and (c) what was the cost of conducting his informal assessment. [52529]

Mr. Boateng: The informal assessment of ambulance ages was initiated on 26 June 1998 and all 37 ambulance National Health Service trusts in England were contacted. The estimated cost was £2,267.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 May 1998, Official Report, column 149, regarding ambulance ages, what estimate he made of the cost of providing the information which was requested. [52571]

Mr. Boateng: It is estimated that the cost of providing the information requested would exceed the disproportionate threshold of £500.

Hospital Deaths

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients died in hospitals, and from what causes, in the latest year for which figures are available. [52248]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Christopher Gill, dated 27 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply, as Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), to your parliamentary question on deaths of patients in hospital.

The information requested is published in Table 36 in Mortality Statistics: general 1993, 1994 and 1995 Series DH1 no. 28 (Office for National Statistics, 1997), a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of women subjected to domestic violence in Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [52247]

Mr. Michael: Recorded crime statistics relate to offence type, not to the relationship between the victim and the offender. There are therefore no overall statistics for the number of violent crimes which are domestic in nature across the United Kingdom.

Currently, the most reliable nation-wide estimate is provided by the British Crime Survey (BCS). This suggested that in 1995 there were one million incidents of domestic violence in England and Wales. The BCS sample size does not permit a reliable estimate of the number for Wales alone.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of pilot schemes based on the Duluth model for dealing with domestic violence; and if a timetable has been set for reporting on the outcome of such pilot schemes. [52229]

Mr. Michael: The Duluth model for dealing with domestic violence provides a range of measures for addressing the issue and promotes a co-ordinated response from the interested agencies. We recognise the success achieved by this approach in the United States of America and welcome initiatives such as that in the London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham where the local Domestic Violence Forum is planning a pilot of the model. It is for the forum to decide how to report on the outcome of this work, but I would certainly read any report with interest.

Wrongful Convictions

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people whose convictions have been quashed over each of the last five years have (a) applied for and (b) received compensation. [52096]

Mr. Michael: Applications for compensation may be made by persons whose convictions have been quashed, but may also be made by persons who have spent time in custody following a criminal charge which is subsequently withdrawn or of which they are acquitted at trial. Information relating to the number of applications made is not available in respect of the full period requested. The information available (which does not distinguish between applications which arose from the reversal of a conviction and those which did not) is as follows:

	Applications	Decisions in principle to pay compensation
1993	...	9
1994	...	55
1995	...	39
1996	102	25

Figures include cases stemming from the quashing of a high number of drink-driving convictions in Greater Manchester, following the discovery that swabs contaminated with alcohol had been used to take blood samples for analysis.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid during each of the last five years in compensation to persons wrongly convicted; and what was (a) the highest, (b) the lowest and (c) the average sum awarded. [52099]

Mr. Michael: The total amount paid in compensation to persons who have been wrongly convicted or charged for each of the last five financial years is as follows:

	£ million
1993–94	1.506
1994–95	1.543
1995–96	1.549
1996–97	2.701

In the past, no central record has been maintained of the amount of compensation awarded in individual cases so that information concerning the highest, the lowest and the average sum awarded is not available. Arrangements have now been put in place for the information to be collected in future.

In the past, records have been kept of the number of cases each year where a decision in principle to pay compensation is taken, but the administrative procedures involved in determining the amount of an award and the time taken to complete them are such that there is little, if any, correlation between the number of decisions in principle and the total amount awarded in any given year. The Home Office still awaits the receipt of claims in some cases where a decision in principle to pay compensation was taken as long ago as 1991. Moreover, the total awarded in any given year will include interim payments made in cases where the final amount of the award has yet to be determined. Consequently, it would be misleading to calculate the average sum awarded by dividing the total amount awarded or paid in any year by the number of decisions in principle taken in the same year.

I have placed copies of a general guide to compensation for wrongful conviction and supporting papers in the Library.

Young People (National Recognition)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of introducing a central system of national recognition for young people; and what plans he has to introduce such a system. [52095]

Mr. George Howarth: The benefits and disadvantages of various national identity card schemes were discussed in the 1995 Green Paper "Identity Cards: A consultation document" (CM 2879) and the 1996 Home Affairs Committee Fourth Report on Identity Cards (HC 172). We are considering the options, but have no current plans for such a scheme, either generally or for particular age groups.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify the oldest (a) man and (b) woman, now held in prison in England and Wales; for how long they have been in prison; and for what offence were they convicted. [52296]

Ms Quin: As at 30 June 1998, the oldest male held in a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales was aged 87. He has currently served 28 months of his sentence after having been convicted of rape. The oldest woman was a 71 year old who has been in prison for 15 months following a conviction for cruelty to children.

Prisons (Drug-free Wings)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prisons that have drug-free wings: [52295]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government are committed to providing access to voluntary testing for all prisoners wishing to prove they are drug-free.

Prisoners in the following establishments currently have access in varying degrees to voluntary testing:

Altcourse

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used to determine the order of priority for cases referred to the Criminal Cases Review Commission. [51479]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 27 July 1998]: In determining the priority of the applications it receives, the Criminal Cases Review Commission (CCRC) takes into account the date of receipt and such factors as the age and health of the applicant and witnesses to the case; any evidential or operational considerations; whether or not the applicant is in custody, and the impact of the case on public confidence in the criminal justice system. The weight attached to each of these criteria will vary case to case. The decision in each case is an operational matter for the CCRC.

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of cases referred to date to the Criminal Cases Review Commission. [51482]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Cases reach the Criminal Cases Review Commission (CCRC) when an application is made to the Commission by, or on behalf of, an individual who claims that he or she has been the victim of a miscarriage of justice. In addition, some 284 cases which were pending when the CCRC was set up have been transferred to the Commission by the Home Office. The total number in both categories is now slightly over 1,700.

Police Authorities (East Midlands)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the per capita expenditure by the police authorities in East Midlands. [53079]

Mr. Michael: Information about police expenditure per head of population is published by the Audit Commission in their reports "Local Authority Performance Indicators". The most recent of these reports is for expenditure in 1996–97 and was published in January 1998. The per capita spend for police forces in the East Midlands is set out in the table.

Force	Expenditure (£) per head of population 1996–97
Derbyshire	94.12
Leicestershire	100.98
Lincolnshire	100.19
Northamptonshire	98.74
Nottinghamshire	107.65
National average (England and Wales)	109.11

Pepper Sprays

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions in the last year, police forces have used pepper sprays; [52464]

(2) what guidance is issued to police officers in respect of the use of pepper spray at close quarters. [52463]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Police officers in England and Wales do not carry pepper sprays, and no guidance has been issued to them on the subject.

Either-way Cases (Defendants)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the consultation paper on the question of whether defendants in either-way cases should continue to be able to elect Crown Court trial. [53552]

Mr. Straw: In the consultation exercise on the report of the Review of Delay in the Criminal Justice System last year, the responses to its recommendation that defendants in either-way should no longer be able to decide to elect Crown Court trial demonstrated sufficient support to warrant further consideration. I therefore announced that the Government would look at the proposal in longer time with a view to publishing a separate consultation paper on it.

I am publishing such a paper today. It describes the current arrangements whereby defendants can be tried summarily for indictable offences only with their consent, and discusses two possible options for change: the abolition of election, as recommended by both the Review of Delay and the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, and reclassification of minor theft, which is often put forward as an alternative. The paper is concerned not with the merits of jury trial, but only with whether defendants should be able to choose to be tried by a jury in cases which magistrates have indicated that they would be content to hear. In forming a view on this question, the Government will take account of responses to the paper, which are invited by the end of September.

Women's Prisons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of women who entered prison as non-users of illegal drugs and left as users in each of the last three years. [53107]

Mr. George Howarth: The report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs published in 1996 found that, although some misusers take drugs for the first time inside prison, the numbers leaving prison who misuse drugs is lower than the numbers entering.

No study has been conducted specifically concerning women prisoners.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the support infrastructure in women's prisons in cases where probation departments have been reduced. [53106]

Ms Quin: It is for individual governors to decide on the appropriate level of provision to meet the needs of the establishment and to enter into a contract with the local probation service to provide the necessary staff. Probation departments form one part of a multi-disciplinary team, and the needs of prisoners and the development of the regime will be the governor's main consideration in making any changes in the team. Over the last two years, most women's prisons have in fact increased their probation departments.

The Prisons and Probation review is looking at ways of improving working and contact between the two services, and the Prison Service's Assistant Director for Women is responsible for developing women's regimes.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52931]

Mr. Straw: The following Compliance Cost Assessments (recently renamed Regulatory Impact Assessments) were published by the Home Office between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998:

Date	Title
July 1997	The Fire Precautions (Workplace) Regulations 1997
August 1997	The Police and Firemen's Pension Act 1997; the Firemen's Pensions (Provision of Information) Regulations 1997; and the Police Pensions (Provision of Information) Regulations 1997
September 1997	The Lotteries (Gaming Board Fees) Order 1997
October 1997	The Licensing Fees (Variation) Order 1997
January 1998	The Data Protection Bill
January 1998	The Deregulation (Licence Transfers) Order 1998; The Licensing (Fees) Amendment Order 1998
March 1998	The Gambling (Bingo) Fees (Amendment) Order 1998; The Lotteries (Gaming Board Fees) Order 1998; The Gaming Act (Variation of Fees) Order 1998
June 1998	The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 (Amendment) Regulations 1998

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52973]

Mr. Straw: The following compliance cost assessments published between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 show a net estimated reduction in compliance costs totalling £4 million per annum:

The Deregulation (Licence Transfers) Order 1998

The Licensing (Fees) Amendment Order 1998.

There is at present no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or result in a saving to business.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52932]

Mr. Straw: The cumulative net increase in compliance costs estimated compliance cost assessments published by the Home Office between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 is as follows:

Non-recurring costs: £1,179,286,250

Annually recurring costs: £742,114,500.

Of this, the compliance costs assessment for the Data Protection Bill shows estimated non-recurring costs of £1,150 million and annually recurring costs of £742 million.

Visible Policing

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons he has not retained visible policing as a key policy objective. [52795]

Mr. Michael: The Government are committed to the effective use of police resources to cut crime and to keep the peace. Our major reforms, set out in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords], will create a new and dynamic partnership, led by the police and the local authority, to cut crime and disorder locally. Police activity can help to promote community safety and reassure the public. However, we also believe that high visibility policing, which is not targeted or intelligence-led, can lead to an inefficient deployment of resources.

In setting the national objectives for the police for 1998–99, the Home Secretary decided to reflect the Government's top law and order priorities of tackling youth crime and drug-related crime and reducing local problems of crime and disorder through a partnership approach. Tackling crime and disorder has a crucial role to play in promoting community safety and reassuring the public. Where appropriate, high visibility policing will form part of the response to local crime and disorder problems.

Performance indicators for the police published by the Audit Commission and reported on by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, include public satisfaction with the perceived level of foot and mobile patrol.

Witness Protection Programmes

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a review of the comparative effectiveness of witness protection programmes in the regional crime squads of England. [52927]

Mr. Michael: The regional crime squads amalgamated to form the National Crime Squad on 1 April 1998. The protection of witnesses involved in investigations carried out by the Squad is an operational matter for the Director General of the National Crime Squad.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in order of frequency the 20 towns and cities of residence given by those English football fans (a) arrested, (b) detained and (c) removed from France by the French authorities during the World Cup. [51997]

Mr. Michael: Full details of the places of residence of those arrested are not presently available. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as further inquiries to obtain the information are completed.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many football supporters were arrested or detained by police at each football ground for the last three years for which figures are available for the Premiership and each of the Nationwide League clubs. [51998]

Mr. Michael: The information on the number of arrests has been collated on a club-by-club basis only since season 1997–98. Collation of these figures is a matter for the Football Unit of the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) and it is expected that these figures will be available shortly.

For previous seasons, the data have been collated by NCIS on a divisional basis and the information for the past three years is as follows:

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
Premier League
Attendance (millions)	11.2	10.5	10.8
Arrests	1,713	1,697	1,759
Division One
Attendance (millions)	6.0	6.6	6.9
Arrests	1,[illegible]	945	891
Division Two
Attendance (millions)	3.0	2.8	3.2
Arrests	674	506	626
Division Three
Attendance (millions)	1.6	2.0	1.9
Arrests	226	289	301
FA Cup
Attendance (millions)	2.0	2.0	1.9
Arrests	914	549	509

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of each official English Premiership or Football League supporters clubs were (a) arrested, (b) detained and (c) removed by French authorities during the World Cup. [52000]

Mr. Michael: Information on how many of these individuals are members of official English Premiership or Football League Supporters Groups is not available.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many supporters of each participating nation were (a) detained and (b) arrested during Euro 96 in England. [52001]

Mr. Michael: The total number of people arrested for football-related offences during Euro '96 was 1,107. The country of origin is as follows:

Australia: 1
Croatia: 10
England: 916
Ireland: 6
Mexico: 1
Norway: 1
Scotland: 66
Switzerland: 7
Wales: 5
Bulgaria: 1
Czech Republic: 1
France: 17
Italy: 4
Netherlands: 17
Romania: 2
Spain: 2
Turkey: 7
Unknown: 10
Canada: 2
Denmark: 8
Germany: 13
Malta: 2
New Zealand: 1
Russia: 4
Sweden: 1
United States: 2.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent by each league club in England on policing of football grounds (a) on average per game and (b) for each of the last three years for which figures are available. [52004]

Mr. Michael: This information is not held centrally. I am placing in the Library copies of the tables, taken from a survey conducted by the Football League Limited, which show comparative policing costs of non-premiership football league clubs in seasons 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Muslim Women

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines have been issued to Customs officials in respect of the treatment of Muslim women wearing veils. [53080]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I have been asked to reply.

Guidance to Customs officials says that, where it is necessary to remove and examine head-dresses, the maximum tact should be exercised where the head-dress is of religious significance. This type of personal search would be conducted by an officer of the same sex as the person to be searched, and would be carried out only where there are reasonable goods to suspect that the person concerned is carrying smuggled goods.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Seat Belts

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when vehicle inspectors received full guidance on checking procedures under regulations 46, 47 and 48 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986, on seat belt installation standards in vehicles of eight or more passenger seats; when inspectors started checking such seat belt installations; and how many such vehicles have been inspected in line with the regulations since 1 July. [51872]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Monica Newey to Mr. Tom Brake, dated July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the training given to Vehicle Examiners on seat belt installations, when Examiners started checking seat belt installations, and how many vehicles have been inspected since 1 July.

Regulations drawing on the provision of section 100(1) of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 requiring the inspection of seat belt installations in addition to the mandatory requirements in the annual test for large passenger vehicles (that is with 9 or more passenger seats) come into force on 1 August. All Vehicle Inspectorate Testers and Vehicle Examiners received full guidance on the standards applicable to, and checking procedures for, seat belt installations in large passenger vehicles initially during February and March this year and again in May and June.

The Vehicle Inspectorate began providing advice on seat belt installation standards on vehicles presented on a voluntary basis from March. Up to the end of June, 722 vehicles had been seen. The number of vehicles seen since 1 July is not yet available.

Auto LPG and CNG

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the petrol companies to encourage the sale of Auto LPG and CNG in petrol station forecourts. [51862]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Ministers have regular discussions with the oil companies and the use of road fuel gases has featured in several of these. As detailed in my reply on 5 June 1998, Official Report, columns 629–30, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Taunton (Jackie Ballard), steps taken by the Government to encourage the use of gas powered vehicles are significantly reducing their operating costs and making them a viable alternative to conventional petrol and diesel fuelled vehicles. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force, which includes representatives from the oil and motor industries as well as Government, is also looking at ways of expanding their use. As a direct result of these initiatives, there are now about 12 CNG refuelling sites in the UK, the numbers of which are expected to increase significantly in the next few years, and one oil company has recently announced plans to establish a network of some 200 LPG sites on forecourts across the UK by 2001.

South West Trains (Bicycles)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make representations to South West Trains not to reduce the spaces available for passengers' bicycles. [52014]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Franchise Agreements require train operators to make appropriate facilities available on their services for bicycles so far as reasonably practicable and subject to the availability of space; they do not specify particular provisions. We gave the Franchising Director new Objectives, Instructions and Guidance in November last year which require him to discuss bicycle space with franchise operators ordering new rolling stock. I understand that South West Trains have refurbished their existing class 442 Wessex Electric trains. They have allowed five spaces per five car train for bicycles. The Franchising Director has accepted SWT's provision as striking a balance between the needs of bicycle users and other passengers. In his statement on transport policy on 20 July 1998, Official Report, columns 784–88, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced our plans to set up a Strategic Rail Authority which will have stronger powers and seek more demanding standards of performance by train operators.

Recycled Land

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the use of economic instruments to make it more attractive to develop new housing on recycled land. [52265]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has commissioned research from Oxford Brookes University to inform decisions about the possible reform of the planning obligations system. The research project involves a series of seminars with local planning authorities, the building industry, and others. These seminars have involved discussing some other options and mechanisms which might better meet the Department's objectives including the development of new housing on recycled land. Officials are also working in-house to examine alternative options for using economic instruments to help meet our planning objectives.

Household Projections

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into future trends in cohabitation; and how such trends will be taken into account in the next set of household projections. [52263]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's Actuary's Department (GAD) are responsible for producing marital status projections, both for legal marital status and for cohabitation status. GAD's 1992-based projections of marital status were used to compile the 1992-based household projections. GAD are currently developing 1996-based marital status projections to be used in the next set of household projections. In carrying out the revision to the marital status projections, GAD are consulting a number of other Government departments, including my Department, as well as a number of leading academics.

The effects of marriage, cohabitation and divorce are inter-related. Data on marriages and divorces are obtained from civil registration and the census. As well as the 1991 Census, data on cohabitation are collected by the General Household Survey, and the Labour Force Survey, both of which are undertaken by the Office for National Statistics. All this information is currently being considered by GAD in its work.

Aldermaston (Emissions)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued on the protection to be provided to sewage workers at Silchester in respect of emissions from Aldermaston. [52214]

Angela Eagle: I am not aware of any guidance specifically relating to Silchester, although Thames Water Utilities Ltd. would be expected to follow general guidance issued by the Health and Safety Executive which was relevant to their employees. The Environment Agency authorises Hunting-BRAE Limited to discharge low level radioactive waste to the sewer. The authorisation is currently being revised and as a normal part of its consideration of this revision the Environment Agency will specifically be considering the potential impact on sewerage workers. Thames Water will be consulted as part of this process.

Maritime Rescue Services

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the cover offered by the

Coastguard Maritime Rescue Centre at Liverpool in the event of a major emergency occurring off the Cumbrian Coast. [52224]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Contingency arrangements to deal with major emergencies which affect persons and/or the environment have been in place for many years, around the UK coastline.

The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA), through its Coastguard Co-ordination Centres, liaises very closely with the other Emergency Services, Local Authorities and those organisations both in the private and public sector which may be affected by any major emergency.

MCA is represented on the planning committee of the Cumbria General Emergency Plan and the Cumbria Pollution Plan which dovetail into the National Contingency Plan. The Plan is exercised regularly and there is no intention that these arrangements should change.

Water Quality

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the estimated cost up to 2002 of complying with water quality standards (a) which are required by United Kingdom and EU statutes and (b) which are outlined as desirable in the Environment Agency's paper, A Price Worth Paying; [52210]

(2) what assessment he has made of the Environment Agency's paper, A Price Worth Paying. [52211]

Angela Eagle: The price limits set by the Director General of Water Services in 1994 allowed for a capital expenditure programme of £24 billion by water companies in England and Wales over the period 1995–2005, £11 billion of which was for quality improvements to sewage treatment and drinking water quality. Most of those improvements are required under EC Directives. Figures for actual capital expenditure are contained in OFWAT's annual reports on the financial performance and capital Investment by water companies, copies of which are in the Library.

The price limits for 2000–2005 are currently under review by the Director General. As part of that process, he published on 30 April an open letter to the Secretaries of State, "Setting the Quality Framework", which includes cost information based on water company estimates for possible water quality improvements arising from European and domestic initiatives, many of which are discussed in "A Price Worth Paying". The Government are considering all the representations received in response to "Setting the Quality Framework, including the views expressed by the Environment Agency, in the light of cost information available through water company estimates. They plan to issue guidance to the Director General later in the summer.

A copy of "Setting the Quality Framework" is available in the Library of the House.

Cancelled DBFO Projects

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total compensation payments paid to construction consortia involved in Design, Build, Finance and Operate road schemes postponed as a result of the Integrated Transport Review. [52091]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Tenderers were invited to prepare claims for compensation for three Design, Build Finance and Operate projects which were cancelled following the accelerated roads review in July 1997. The projects are Weald and Downland, Cumbria to Bradford and South Midlands Network. The total of the on-account payments already made for the three projects is £6 million.

Weald and Downland DBFO Project

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, column 77, if he will list the consortiums involved in the Weald and Downland Design, Build, Finance and Operate Project indicating the nature of the compensation payments still under consideration. [52090]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The four tenderers (consortiums) are: the Modern Highways Group, Road Management Group, UK Highways and Express Route. Each tenderer has submitted a claim for his tender preparation costs to be reimbursed. However, there are a number of instances where the tenderers have not submitted sufficient information in support of their claims to explain/justify their costs, and this information is being sought before a final settlement can be reached.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total figure for compensation payments to the consortiums involved in the Weald and Downland Design, Build, Finance and Operate Project. [52092]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State will reimburse the tenderers their actual costs that were properly and reasonably incurred in preparing their tenders. It would be wrong for me to give an estimate of the likely total cost at this stage as it might prejudice the outstanding commercial negotiations with the tenderers.

Roadside Signs

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what statutory power a highway authority can grant licences for (a) advertising structures, (b) other structures and (c) private street signs, promoting (i) commercial and (ii) sectional interest (1) in, (2) on and (3) under land having (A) public highway and (B) trunk road status. [52233]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Part VIIA (section 115A to 115K) of the Highways Act 1980 (which was inserted by Schedule 5 to the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982) empowers a council to place objects or structures on, in or over highways of the kind listed in section 115A (mainly for use by non-vehicular traffic), and to grant a person permission to use such objects or structures for a purpose which will result in the production of income, or for the purpose of providing a centre for advice or information or for the purpose of advertising. A street authority may also grant a licence under section 50 of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 for the placing of apparatus, which may include structures bearing advertisements, in, or under, any street (defined in the 1991 Act as including any highway).

Surface and Groundwater Pollution

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the incidence of surface and groundwater pollution caused by (a) motorway and highways run-off and (b) agricultural activities; and if he will quantify the damage caused by both. [52208]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency, which is responsible for monitoring the aquatic environment in England and Wales, has recently published a report entitled 'The State of the Environment of England and Wales'. It shows that agricultural activity was responsible for 10 per cent. of the total pollution incidents and the transport sector, which includes motorway and highways run-off, was responsible for 9 per cent. of pollution incidents. While diffuse sources of pollution are difficult to quantify, the Environment Agency is aware of the significance of both these sources of diffuse pollution.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the advantage of using the settlement size definition in measuring the sparsity of rural populations for the standard spending assessment in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [52351]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 27 July 1998]: In our discussions with the Local Government Association on possible changes in the SSA formulae for next year, no proposals have been put to us that there should be a change from the way in which sparsity of population is measured currently. If, in future rounds of these discussions, such a case is put forward, we should be willing to discuss it with local government representatives.

Domiciliary Social Services

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the costs of providing domiciliary social services in sparse rural areas in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [52353]

Ms Armstrong [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Norfolk County Council, on behalf of the County Councils' Network, have put forward for discussion information on the costs of providing domiciliary social services in rural areas. In the light of this, they have proposed that the current measure of sparsity of population should be introduced under this part of the SSA formulae. This proposal has been discussed with representatives of local government. We will consider the arguments for and against this change, and expect to announce our conclusions early in December.

Rural Need

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the characteristics of rural need separately identifying that relating to rural poverty; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of such research. [52359]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Rural Development Commission is the Government's statutory adviser on the economic and social development of rural areas of England. As part of its national advisory work, it commissions research into rural needs, including rural poverty. The RDC has recently published reports on two major research projects on rural deprivation: Developing Indicators of Rural Disadvantage, and Rural Disadvantage—Understanding the Processes. My Department is discussing with the RDC the findings of these reports.

Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to monitor the subcontracting of services to operators from outside London, following the licensing of London's private hire vehicle industry. [52832]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is one of the matters which will be monitored by the Public Carriage Office.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to ensure that following the licensing of private hire vehicles in London, private hire vehicles licensed to different criteria outside of London do not work predominantly in London. [52833]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The matter will be considered as necessary in the light of circumstances as indicated by the Public Carriage Office's monitoring.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department spent on IT itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figure are available. [52875]

Angela Eagle: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Animal By-products

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to legislate to minimise the level of permitted odour during the transport of offal to the site of incineration. [52721]

Angela Eagle: The transport of animal by-products (animal waste) is controlled under the Animal By-Products Order 1992 (as amended) which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Among other matters, the 1992 Order requires that:

"1. Any animal by-product must be collected and transported in suitable containers or vehicles in such a way as to prevent leakage. The containers or vehicles must be adequately covered.

2. Vehicles, tarpaulin or other covers and reusable containers must be maintained in a clean condition."

Where necessary, local authorities may use the byelaw powers contained in section 82 of the Public Health Act 1936 and section 235 of the Local Government Act 1972 to prescribe times during which "noxious matter" may be carried through the streets in their area. These provisions also enable local authorities to require the vehicles used for the removal or carriage of "noxious matter" through their street to be properly constructed and covered.

We have received no evidence that these powers are not adequate and the Government have no plans to legislate further in relation to odour control in the context of the transport of animal waste.

Recycling Facilities

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to evaluate the effectiveness of the materials recycling facilities in use in the United Kingdom. [52821]

Angela Eagle: Our consultation paper, Less Waste More Value, invited views on whether the waste management industry has the necessary capabilities to develop the full range of facilities that will be required in the future (including materials recycling facilities). Consultees have until 25 September to respond. It is for the operators of these facilities themselves to reach a judgment of how effective they are.

Seed and Biotechnology Companies

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list, with dates, each meeting he or other members of his Department have had with (a) seed and (b) biotechnology companies since 9 July 1998, giving in each case the names of those met. [52852]

Angela Eagle: On 20 July 1998 officials for the Department met members from the British Society of Plant Breeders, including representatives from Monsanto and AgrEvo, and later at a separate meeting representatives from the British Society of Plant Breeders, Europabio and the Green Industry Biotechnology Platform.

Housing Corporation (Rural Programme)

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of Housing Corporation allocations in the current financial year for rural areas are targeted on settlements of less than 1,000. [53176]

Mr. Raynsford: A target is not set for Housing Corporation allocations in rural settlements of less than 1,000. However around 46 per cent. of the allocations for the rural programme in 1998–99 are in rural settlements of less than 1,000.

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what target has been set for approvals by the Housing Corporation in its Rural Programme for the current financial year. [53175]

Mr. Raynsford: For 1998–99 we have asked the Housing Corporation to aim for around 3.4 per cent of the new social lettings approved under the Approved Development Programme to be in small rural villages with a population of 3,000 or less.

In addition, local authorities can use the extra resources we have made available to them, under the Capital Receipts Initiative this year, to invest in the provision of new social housing in rural areas in partnership with Registered Social Landlords where such developments are seen as a high priority in their housing strategies.

Nene and Ouse Rivers

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he expects to make a statement concerning current and future statutory responsibilities for (a) flood, (b) ecological, (c) environmental and (d) navigational management of the rivers (i) Nene and (ii) Ouse; [52985]

(2) what representations he has received concerning the British Waterways Board consultation on its taking over responsibility from the Environment Agency for navigation on the Nene and Ouse rivers; and if he will place them in the Library. [52987]

Angela Eagle: The Department has received a number of letters, from Members of Parliament and the public, following British Waterways' (BW) public consultation on its report about the future management of navigation on the Rivers Nene and Great Ouse. There are no plans at this stage to make this correspondence available publicly.

BW is currently assessing the responses to its consultation and will be submitting a further report to me shortly. I imagine that this will include copies of all written submissions. The proposals in the report on which BW consulted present some complex issues relating to the management of the Nene and Great Ouse and to the impact on the environment, waterway users and other organisations connected with the two rivers. I will want to consider carefully all the responses and other comments on the report before deciding on how to proceed.

British Waterways Board

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the responsibilities of the British Waterways Board for its role in land drainage and flood relief; and what assessment he has made of the level of its annual grant in aid in respect of these functions. [52986]

Angela Eagle: In 1996 British Waterways (BW) and the Environment Agency submitted a joint report to the Department following a series of regional reviews of operational arrangements of the river navigations under their control. These reviews looked at emergency and contingency planning, including arrangements for flood defence. The report concluded that relationships at the local level between the two organisations were good and that BW and the Agency were working well together in many areas. A copy of the report was placed in the Library.

BW receives annual grant-in-aid to manage and operate the canal and river navigations for which it is responsible. No direct payments are made to BW in respect of its flood defence and land drainage responsibilities.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 683, concerning the activities of the Green Minister, if he will publish the guidance issued to green ministers on green transport plans. [53037]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Guide to Green Transport Plans—Advice to Government Departments has been published on the DETR website: http://www.environment.detr.gov.uk/greening/fleet/fleet.htm. A copy is also available in the Library of the House.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52624]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This information will be available when property managers have reviewed their replacement policy in preparing green transport plans. The first plans are to be completed by end March 1999.

Leaseholds

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's research, Flat Dwellers' Experiences of Leasehold Enfranchisement and Lease Renewal, will be published. [53235]

Mr. Raynsford: The results of the Department's study to monitor the implementation of the leasehold provisions of the 1993 Act have been published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the House Library. The findings support our proposals for a review of the enfranchisement process, which will be included in our forthcoming paper on leasehold reform.

Traffic Speed (London)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned on average traffic speeds in London and other cities during (a) peak periods and (b) off-peak periods. [51163]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has commissioned traffic speed surveys in London since 1986. The surveys, covering central, rest of inner, and outer London are conducted on a rotating basis, with each of these three areas surveyed every three to four years. Similar surveys in other cities were carried out in 1993 and 1996. These covered the 19 largest conurbations in England, as well as five randomly chosen smaller towns.

M25

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to widen the M25. [51229]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Details on our plans for the M25 will be set out in our strategic Roads Review document which will be published later this week.

Integrated Transport White Paper

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what discussions he has had with Her Majesty's Treasury on the likely impact on inflation of the measures contained in the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone"; and what guidelines he has issued on the maximum RPI increase which would be permitted as a consequence of (a) his Department's proposed measures and (b) measures taken as a consequence of reviews instigated under the White Paper; [51961]

(2) pursuant to the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone", what assessment he has made of the economic impact of his proposals, separately identifying their impact on the rate of inflation. [51962]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The measures set out in "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone" will help to support business and economic growth by encouraging more efficient use of transport infrastructure, improving reliability for journeys on all transport modes, improving transport links with international markets, enhancing the vitality of urban and rural areas and by promoting more efficient and sustainable transport industries.

My Department has considered the impact of the measures on inflation with Her Majesty's Treasury. The Government do not think it sensible to issue any guidelines on the maximum permitted RPI increase. The impact on inflation cannot be estimated with any degree of certainty. The impact on prices will, in particular, reflect both the beneficial effect on transport costs—e.g. fuel consumption and fleet and labour utilisation—of reduced congestion and the improved efficiency of the transport system, and the effect of the charging and taxation measures themselves. The details of many of these measures are subject to further consultation and/or future decisions by local authorities on whether to take up the charging powers for which the Government intends to introduce legislation.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of proposals set out in the Integrated Transport White Paper on his Department's policy towards settlements in the countryside. [52656]

Mr. Raynsford: The White Paper sets out proposals to improve the quality of life for people in all areas, both urban and rural. Addressing the transport needs of rural communities is an important part of the New Deal for transport.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52680]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A summary of the spaces available for parking cycles is as follows:

Department/Agency	Number of spaces
DETR (Central)	553
DETR Agencies	270
Government Offices for the Regions	281
A breakdown of the summarised information is as follows:
(1) DETR (Central)
Headquarters (Eland House)—(secure storage/racks)	258
Headquarters (Ashdown House)—(secure storage/racks)	106
Headquarters (Great Minster House)—(secure storage/racks)	60
ASD (Hemel Hempstead)—(no facilities, chain in covered car park)	9
Highwood Pavilions (Bristol)—(cycle racks share with HMC&E)	8
Traffic Area Network (various)—(spaces allocated to TANU)	55
Rent Assessment Panels (various)	13
Air Accident Investigation Branch—(no racks but space in hangars)	44
(2) Agencies
Marine and Coastguard Agency—(10 cycle racks)	61
Driving Standards Agency—(rack at Stanley House, others shared)	6+
Driving and Vehicle Licensing Agency—(covered sheds/dedicated spaces)	159
Highways Agency—(secure compounds/racks)	137
Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency—(secure compound)	45
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre	0
Vehicle Certification Agency—(secure spaces)	6
Vehicle Inspectorate—(secure spaces (12 Bristol, 25 Swansea)	37
(3) Government Offices for the Regions
[The Secretaries of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Trade and Industry, and Education and Employment share responsibility for Government Offices in England]

GO-Yorkshire and Humber	20
GO-West Midlands	5
GO-East Midlands	10
GO-Eastern	(approximately) 130
GO-South East	12+
GO-South West	20
GO-London	36

Note:
The figures do not include DETR NDPBs
1. The above information is in respect of DETR (Central), DETR Agencies, and Government Offices for the Regions. It does not include DETR NDPBs
2. The data in several instances are only indicative and variously include the number of spaces which could be occupied by bicycles (i.e. no attempt has been made to identify the number of cycles generally stored) and offices where the facilities are shared with other (non DETR) users and exclude sites where no obvious facilities exist but (e.g) where some staff park cycles in their office

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52691]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Comprehensive and reliable figures are not held centrally. Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will implement the conclusions of the review of the area cost adjustment in time for the 1999–2000 financial year. [52926]

Ms Armstrong: We shall examine carefully all the findings that have emerged from research on the area cost adjustment both this year and earlier. We shall want to take all of this into account when deciding on our proposals for Standard Spending Assessments for 1999–2000.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52938]

Angela Eagle: At present, in line with central guidance, my Department does not normally carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or yield a net saving to business. Of those compliance cost assessments published by the Department since 1 May, one—for the Civil Aviation (Navigation Services) Regulations 1998—has resulted in a net reduction of compliance costs for certain geographical areas.

Floods (Worcestershire)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to reach a decision on Worcestershire County Council's application for supplementary credit approvals to fund capital works resulting from the Easter floods. [52734]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Applications for additional supplementary credit approvals for transport capital expenditure are generally considered after the financial year to which they relate. Officials of my Department are investigating the extent to which there is immediate need for additional supplementary credit approvals from the Transport Policies and Programme system for reinstatement of transport infrastructure damaged by the flood. I will make a decision shortly.

Regional Development Agency (West Midlands)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce the members of the Regional Development Agency Board for the West Midlands; and if he will make a statement. [52731]

Mr. Caborn: We cannot formally make appointments to boards until the Regional Development Agencies Bill, currently before Parliament, has received Royal Assent. However, we hope to identify the prospective chairs of the RDAs before then and an announcement will be made as soon as possible. A further announcement on other board appointments will be made in the autumn.

Housing (Worcestershire)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the new house building targets for Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [52732]

Mr. Caborn: To date we have received 10 representations expressing concern about Worcestershire County Council's housing development options set out in their consultation document "Shaping the New Worcestershire". This is intended to inform preparations of the Structure Plan for the new county. It is very much in line with the Secretary of State's statement in the House on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25, when he said he wanted local people to be consulted as early as possible in the process so that they fully understand the consequences of decisions on releasing land for housing and can have a say in the choice of locations. My Department has chosen not to comment on the options at this stage but we expect to examine the Council's definitive proposals at the next stage of the Structure Plan process.

Social Housing Grants

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he received from the Housing Corporation with regard to social housing grant rates for 1999–2000, if he will publish that advice; and if he will make a statement. [52725]

Ms Armstrong: Policy advice of this nature is confidential.

I have recently written to the Housing Corporation asking them to set an average headline Social Housing Grant rate for 1999/2000 of 54 per cent., unchanged from last year despite continued reductions in long term interest rates. I have also asked the Corporation to put greater emphasis on rents in the bidding process and to change grant eligibility rules to disallow new high rent schemes, whether supported through the Approved Development Programme or Local Authority Social Housing Grant.

Best Practice Code (Telecommunication)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the conclusions of his Department's review of the Code of Best Practice for telecommunications prior approval procedures. [52804]

Mr. Raynsford: The working group of local authority and telecommunications industry representatives who have been considering the effectiveness of my Department's Code of Best Practice for telecommunications prior approval procedures as applied to mast/tower development have made representations on a variety of issues arising from the current telecommunications planning controls. We are giving careful consideration to the representations made by the working group, and to those received more generally, and expect to announce our conclusions this week.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to protect (a) organic farmers and (b) consumers of organic food from contamination by genetically modified organisms. [52851]

Mr. Meacher: There are no specific requirements under the current legislation controlling the release of genetically modified organisms to consider organic farming when field testing genetically modified crops. However, where needed, release consents have specific measures attached that are designed to limit cross-pollination of neighbouring crops whether they are organic or not.

I am aware of the concerns raised by organic farmers and their customers in connection with the planting of GM crops and my officials are exploring with MAFF, the farming community and organic standards representatives how these concerns can be addressed.

Building Control Standards

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to promote common standards across the public and private sectors of building control. [53361]

Mr. Raynsford: In March I welcomed the establishment by the Construction Industry Council, the Local Government Association and the Association of Corporate Approved Inspectors of a Steering Group to draw up recommended standards and monitoring arrangements for building control.

The Steering Group has had two preliminary meetings, and has adopted the following terms of reference which I am happy to endorse:

"To help achieve compliance with the regulations of the work supervised, the Steering Group shall:

1. draw up proposals for a common Building Control Performance Standard for compliance with the requirements of the Building Regulations;
2. draw up proposals for monitoring the compliance of both local authorities and approved inspectors with the Building Control Performance Standard;
3. draw up proposals and a time scale for implementing (1) and (2);
4. consider other relevant issues; and
5. submit proposals to the DETR for approval".

The Steering Group has set itself the target of submitting a report to me by the end of the year.

Pilotage Act

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the report of his Department's review of the Pilotage Act 1987; and if he will make a statement. [53547]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The report of this review has been published today and I will place a copy in the Library of the House.

We have concluded that harbour pilotage services should continue to be provided by harbour authorities but increasingly integrated into their overall safety systems. These systems need to be reviewed as a whole if the highest standards are to be achieved.

We therefore propose to develop with the industry and other interests a "Marine Operations Code for Ports". We aim to set a national safety standard, and to create a guide for harbour authorities to prepare detailed safety policies. We look to them to consult local users and other interests in this process and to publish the resulting plans.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Mike Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Planning Inspectorate's Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98. [53677]

Mr. Caborn: Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales I have today published the Planning Inspectorate's Annual Report and Accounts. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Inspectorate has just completed the second of a three year programme to restore appeal handling times to optimum levels. Although it has not yet met its timeliness targets, it has improved handling times significantly. We expect them to improve further during 1998/99.

The Agency has also maintained the programme of development plan inquiries to a high standard, helping to create a greater certainty for all involved in the planning process as more areas are covered by up to date development plans.

The Inspectorate's quality target was met and exceeded, with reduced numbers of justified complaints against decisions issued. Surveys have continued to show that its decisions are widely respected. It has also produced an outstanding financial performance during the last year. The Inspectorate is very much involved in initiatives to develop the Government's proposals for the modernisation of the planning system. In the climate of a rapidly changing environment it is always ready to take on new areas of work in dispute resolution.

In December 1997 the Inspectorate achieved Investors in People status—the first Agency within the merged Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to do so. I congratulate all its staff on the very substantial effort that this involved.

Right to Buy

Mrs. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he will ensure better value for money for the taxpayer on right to buy sales; and how he will help local authorities buy back ex-council housing from owners in financial difficulty. [53770]

Ms Armstrong: My Department issued two consultation papers today setting out our proposals.

We intend the Right to Buy scheme to continue, and that eligible tenants should continue to buy at substantial discounts. At present, however, tenants get up to £50,000 discount. The annual cost of Right to Buy is currently around £400 million a year.

We plan, therefore to introduce lower limits to discounts, which would take account of local authority property values in each Government Office region. Details are in our consultation paper "Secure tenants' right to buy; proposals to change the maximum discount limit on right to buy and other home ownership incentive schemes", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Subject to consultation, we propose later this year to substitute a new regulation for the Housing (Right to Buy) (Maximum Discount) Order 1989, SI 1989 513, to bring the new discount levels into effect.

Around 200,000 people in England have bought a council flat. These are mainly council tenants who bought under the Right to Buy scheme and research shows that the great majority see this as good value for money. But a small proportion of buyers are in difficulty with high service charges, and some are unable to resell their flat on the open market: either they cannot find a buyer, or mortgage lenders refuse to give a loan.

Local authorities have powers to buy housing, but their resources are limited and they have many other people needing help. So we propose to offer them a financial incentive. We plan to reduce the amount they have to set aside from their capital receipts from council house sales, by 25p for every £1 they spend on buying back an ex-council property. This would effectively cover 25 per cent. of the cost of the buy-back. They could use this incentive to buy back houses as well as flats.

In addition to this incentive, the authority would regain a capital asset which, sooner or later, would be available for reletting. Moreover, it would reduce the cost of managing its leasehold property—which, in the case of someone in arrears or unable to resell, could be considerable. And in some cases, e.g. an elderly or vulnerable person in mortgage arrears, it would be helping someone whom it might otherwise have to re-house.

Local authorities are best placed to judge who is in greatest need and how they should use their resources to help them. So they would be free to decide whom to help, and on what terms. This could include someone who had bought under a local authority voluntary sale scheme.

We propose to set just two conditions. These are designed to ensure that the concession is available only for buying back properties from individual occupants who want to re-sell. The concession would therefore apply only where the repurchase is from an individual, not an organisation: and it is not done under compulsory purchase powers.

Copies of the consultation paper "Buying back ex-council flats and houses" are in the Library of the House. Subject to consultation, we propose to implement the change later this year by substituting a new regulation for regulation 104 of the Local Authorities (Capital Finance) Regulations 1997.

Technetium-99

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements exist for the storage of technetium-99 concentrates at Sellafield; how many waste streams from reprocessing at Sellafield contain Tc-99; and what long-term plans there are for the disposal of Tc-99. [52776]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

Technetium-99(Tc-99) arises from both Magnox and Thorp reprocessing operations. The Tc-99 from Thorp is contained in the high-level waste stream and is immobilised in glass in the vitrification plant. Magnox operations lead to a discharge of Tc-99 to sea.

High integrity tanks provide long-term storage for the concentrate and solvent used in reprocessing operations prior to treatment.

The disposal of Tc-99 is subject to the limits and conditions in the authorisation to dispose of liquid radioactive waste, issued to BNFL under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. Over and above the requirements for BNFL to comply with the limits in the authorisation is a requirement to use best practicable means to limit the activity of discharges. BNFL is actively investigating potential technologies for reducing Tc-99 discharges and part of a development programme agreed with the Environment Agency.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Human Embryos

Mr. Amess: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years for experimenting on human embryos over 14 days old. [52978]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service holds no central records in respect of particular offences. Crown Prosecution Service officials who handle this type of case and might reasonably be expected to recall any such cases do not recall any within the last five years.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Attorney-General how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52617]

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 603.

Since that reply the Crown Prosecution Service have leased a further petrol engined vehicle making a total of 34 vehicles; 26 of which have diesel engines and 8 have unleaded petrol engines.

The dates for their replacement are:

(i) 1998–99: 13 vehicles (including 1 petrol)

(ii) 1999–2000: 12 vehicles (including 4 petrol)

(iii) 2000–01: 9 vehicles (including 3 petrol).

The planned replacements for 1998–99 will be one vehicle using unleaded petrol and 12 using diesel fuel. The Crown Prosecution Service is monitoring development of alternative fuels and, where these prove to be less harmful to the environment and as economical, staff will be encouraged to adopt them.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Venezuela (Imataca Reserve)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to encourage the Venezuelan Government to protect the Imataca Reserve. [51931]

Mr. Foulkes: Our Embassy in Caracas maintains a regular dialogue with the Venezuelan Government and the non-government sector on a range of environmental issues, including the important one of the Imataca Forest Reserve. The Imataca issue is now with the Venezuelan Supreme Court. In the meantime discussions between the Government, mining companies and local environmental groups are continuing in order to achieve a consensus on sustainable solutions. Our Embassy is in regular contact with these groups.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will set out the mechanisms used by the Commonwealth Development Corporation to guarantee their loans to subsidiaries of multinational companies. [51885]

Mr. Foulkes: For loans made to subsidiaries of multinationals, the Commonwealth Development Corporation takes appropriate security, depending on the individual circumstances of the investment. This may include a parent company guarantee.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the export of credit guarantees offered in respect of the loans made to Sierra Rutile by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. [51856]

Mr. Foulkes: The Commonwealth Development Corporation does not benefit from any export guarantees in relation to loans made to Sierra Rutile Ltd.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money is currently owed to the Commonwealth Development Corporation from the company Sierra Rutile. [51854]

Mr. Foulkes: At 30 June 1998 the Commonwealth Development Corporation was owed £2.4 million by Sierra Rutile. Once their rutile mine returns to production it is expected that the outstanding debt of £2.4 million will be repaid.

Zimbabwe (Asbestos)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Zimbabwe Government on the production of asbestos in that country and on their policy towards the protection of (a) workers employed in that industry and (b) the surrounding environment. [51866]

Mr. Foulkes: Asbestos production and its effect on workers or the environment have not been raised in the Department for International Development ministerial or officials' discussions with the Zimbabwe government. However, since 1996 the Department for International Development has been funding a research project in Zimbabwe to develop alternatives to asbestos sheets as roofing materials.

South Pacific (Natural Disasters)

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's contingency planning to assist in the aftermath of natural disasters in the South Pacific region. [52052]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department is ready to provide assistance to poorer countries in the aftermath of natural disasters where there are clear needs and we are asked to do so. In response to the initial appeal for assistance for those affected by the tidal wave that hit Papua New Guinea, we offered up to £250,000 for immediate relief and recovery needs. Over the last year we have also provided over £1 million in relief assistance to the Pacific region.

In addition, we are keen to help disaster-prone countries to make better use of their own emergency services and skilled personnel, as they are best placed to provide effective help when disaster strikes.

In the South Pacific, since 1994 we have provided £300,000 to the United Nations for the South Pacific Disaster Reduction Programme, which aims to mitigate the effect of natural disasters by building-up institutional capacity. We are currently considering further support for a new phase of the programme. We also provided nearly £60,000 to the International Red Cross last year for community-based disaster preparedness activities in the region.

Papua New Guinea

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance Her Majesty's Government will give to those affected by the tidal wave in Papua New Guinea. [52457]

Mr. Foulkes: We are in close contact with the Papua New Guinea authorities through the British High Commission in Port Moresby. In response to the initial appeal for assistance, we have offered up to £250,000 to meet the immediate relief and recovery needs of those affected by the tidal wave. Of this contribution, £75,000 has been allocated to the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies to provide family rehabilitation kits containing basic household items, and materials to rebuild houses. A further £44,944 has been channelled through the UK Foundation for the South Pacific, a non-governmental organisation, for the provision of medial supplies and temporary shelters. We have asked other humanitarian organisations active in the region to urgently submit proposals for the remaining funds.

We shall continue to monitor the situation closely through our High Commission and through the regular reports we receive from the United Nations and the Red Cross.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance she has sought from the United Kingdom armed forces for help in Papua New Guinea. [52456]

Mr. Foulkes: We have been in contact with the Ministry of Defence and have concluded that the services of the UK armed forces will not be required. We are assisting those affected by the tidal wave through the provision of funds to Non-Governmental Organisations for emergency rehabilitation and recovery efforts.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 8 July 1998, Official Report, column 533, concerning the 150/500 KV sub-stations project in Indonesia, what plans there are to reinstate the project; what assessment has been made of the project's (a) achievements and (b) value for money; and if she will place in the Library copies of the project appraisal, monitoring and evaluation reports completed to date. [53027]

Mr. Foulkes: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to her on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 637.

Belize

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to assist Belize with debt relief. [53363]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development has agreed with the Government of Belize the cancellation of repayments of aid debt due from Belize to the UK between April and October 1998, amounting to £1.146 million.

We were able to make the offer under the Commonwealth Debt Initiative in recognition of the Belize Government's commitment to reduce poverty and promote accountable government, and to put in place sustainable economic policies.

The funds which would otherwise have been used to repay aid debts will now be used for poverty focused projects in education and water supply, specifically:

rural water schemes in several villages;

classroom furniture, equipment and materials in schools in poorer areas; textbooks for primary schools in poorer areas, under the textbook loan scheme.

We will hold talks with the Government of Belize early in 1999 to consider further debt relief.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by her Department since 1 May 1997. [52953]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development has not published any compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997. There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or resulting in a saving to business.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the compliance cost assessments published by her Department since 1 May 1997. [52951]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development has not undertaken any compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52952]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development has not undertaken any compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) her Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52615]

Mr. Foulkes: Decisions on these questions are not taken centrally in DFID and this information would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Sudan

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Government of Sudan in the last four weeks about the situation in that country. [52999]

Mr. Foulkes: The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Minister for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), had discussions with the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement during his visit to Nairobi and Khartoum on 14–16 July. Our Ambassador in Khartoum has regular discussions with Government of Sudan representatives at all levels on the humanitarian situation and the political process. Following my hon. Friend's visit, we are in contact with regional governments and international organisations to take full advantage of the three-months' cease-fire agreed for Bahr el Ghazal.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which her Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52662]

Mr. Foulkes: 38 cycle racks are provided at the Department for International Development's two Headquarters buildings. The Department has no agencies.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of the employees of her Department and of the employees of each agency for which she is responsible cycle to work; and what measures she plans to increase that proportion. [52663]

Mr. Foulkes: This information is not recorded. Measures to increase the numbers cycling to work will be considered in the context of preparing a Green Transport Plan for the Department for International Development.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Registers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the public registers which her Department has responsibility for. [47349]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 29 June 1998]: The public registers for which the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments have responsibility for are as follows:

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people her Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52583]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Northern Ireland Civil Service Departments, like their GB counterparts, are "signing up" to participate as employers in New Deal. The programme does not, however, impose quotes, and it is expected that Departments and Agencies, like other participating employers, will recruit New Deal employers as and when appropriate vacancies arise.

PRIME MINISTER

Armed Forces

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces. [53364]

The Prime Minister: The Armed Forces Pay Review Body has made recommendations on the pay of Medical and Dental Officers in the Armed Forces. The Review Body recommends that all Medical and Dental Officers, in the ranks of Major and above, should receive a 5.2 per cent. increase, and Officers in the rank of Captain and below should receive a 4.2 per cent. increase, from 1 April 1998. The Review Body further recommends that the pay scales for qualified General Medical Practitioners and General Dental Practitioners in the rank of Major should be restructured to ensure broad comparability of earning with their civilian counterparts, particularly in the first half of a career. The Review Body also considers that the pay of Service General Dental Practitioners has fallen behind their NHS counterparts and recommend that those Officers should receive an additional £1,000 per annum.

The Government have decided to accept the Review Body's recommendations. In line with all awards to Pay Review Body remit groups, the award will be paid in two stages; 2 per cent. of the award will be payable from 1 April 1998 with the remainder payable from 1 December 1998.

Cabinet Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the future of the Cabinet Office. [53365]

The Prime Minister: The Government face many new challenges, and must be ready to operate in new ways to meet them. So, in January, I asked the Secretary of the Cabinet to review the effectiveness of the centre of Government.

The role of the Cabinet Office has traditionally been to help the Prime Minister and the Government as a whole to reach collective decisions on Government policy. Since the election, the three principal parts of the centre—my own office, the Cabinet Office and the Treasury—have worked closely and effectively together, and with other Departments, to take forward the Government's comprehensive and ambitious policy agenda.

However, Sir Richard Wilson identified a number of weaknesses that need to be addressed. He concluded that the linkage between policy formulation and implementation need further improvement. He found that cross-departmental issues of policy and service delivery are often not handled well. He diagnosed a weakness in looking ahead to future opportunities and threats, and in reviewing the outcome of Government policies and the achievement of Government objectives. Sir Richard confirmed one impression of my own: that, while the civil service has many outstanding staff, it has not always implemented the best systems to invest in their development. Sir Richard found that there was scope to improve the performance of the centre of Government in promulgating best practice and innovation in government and in the corporate management of personnel, IT, Government communications and scientific advice.

We have already taken some steps to address the weaknesses identified by Sir Richard. The Social Exclusion Unit is an example of our innovative approach to tackling cross-departmental issues. And the new Cabinet Committee on Public Expenditure, chaired by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, will play a key role in monitoring Departments' performance in meeting objectives. However, Sir Richard has identified an important agenda for reform. I can today announce key reforms to address the problems he has identified. Further details will be announced in the autumn.

First, I propose to merge the Office of Public Service with the rest of the Cabinet Office from today. The main purpose of the Cabinet Office is to help Departments formulate policy collectively. The main purpose of the Office of Public Service is to help Departments find ways to improve the implementation and delivery of policies and services on the ground. Yet policy formulation and delivery are two sides of the same coin. A unified organisation will help ensure that concerns about policy implementation are properly analysed in the process of developing policy, and help contribute to more effective follow-through when policies are agreed.

Second, a new Performance and Innovation Unit will be set up in the Cabinet Office. It will complement the Treasury's role in monitoring Departmental programmes and will have two principal functions. First, it will focus on selected issues that cross departmental boundaries and propose policy innovations to improve the delivery of the Government objectives. Second, drawing on the work of the successor to the Committee on Public Expenditure, and other sources, it will select aspects of government policy that require review, with an emphasis on the better co-ordination and practical delivery of policy and services which involve more than one public sector body. The Unit will be a resource for policy development for the whole of Government, building on the experience of the Social Exclusion Unit.

The new Unit will not carry out these roles in isolation from other departments. It will assemble teams from inside and outside the Civil Service to carry out studies of areas where cross-departmental working needs to be improved, or innovative approaches to delivery put in place, if the Government's objectives are to be delivered. The first group of projects to be carried out by the Unit will be announced in the Autumn. They will include studies of the Government's presence in Cities and the Regions, and of how older people can play a more active role in the community.

Third, I have decided to establish a new Centre for Management and Policy Studies in the Cabinet Office, incorporating a reshaped Civil Service College. If the modernisation of government is to be successful, and Ministers are to get the support they need in finding new approaches to policy and its delivery, we will need to ensure that the Civil Service continues to be a learning organisation, open to new ideas, and that staff at all levels get the training they need. The new Centre will also provide an entry point at the heart of Government for the best new thinking on current issues and new approaches to management. It will commission research into innovation in strategy and delivery. It will act as a repository for best practice in the public sector and elsewhere and be the focus for training the senior civil servants of the future.

Fourth, there needs to be more emphasis on the corporate management of the Civil Service as a whole. My objective is to meet the corporate objectives of the Government as a whole, rather than just the objectives of individual departments. The reorganisation of the Cabinet Office will give it a new focus as the corporate headquarters of the Civil Service. Ensuring that there is a coherent information technology strategy, and that personnel systems deliver the talent needed for modern government, are just two of the challenges. In order to involve departments in the work of the Cabinet Office as the corporate headquarters of the Civil Service, the Secretary of the Cabinet will establish a team, including a number of Permanent Secretaries, to act as a Management Board for the Civil Service. The Head of the Government Information and Communication Service will from now on be located in the Cabinet Office. The Chief Scientific Adviser to the Government will also work from the Cabinet Office as well as the Department of Trade and Industry.

So far as possible, the new Cabinet Office needs to be located together. Its main base will continue to be in 70 Whitehall. Plans are being drawn up to locate the rest of the Office, including the new Performance and Innovation Unit and the Centre for Management and Policy Studies, in the currently unoccupied accommodation in Admiralty Arch, Ripley House and Kirkland House.

The Cabinet Office will continue to report to me as Prime Minister and Minister for the Civil Service. I will continue to account to Parliament for matters of collective Cabinet responsibility; the Minister for the Cabinet Office will report to Parliament on the management of the Civil Service and allied matters and, in particular, will oversee the major programme of reform I am announcing today.

The aim of this programme is to create a focus for the drive to modernise government to tackle the new challenges it faces. The broad outline of the programme is clear. A lost of work, and consultation with staff, is now needed to put in place the detail and implement the measures I have described. Further details will be set out in the Government's White Paper on Better Government, which will be published in the Autumn.

Advisory Committee on Business Appointment

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if he has received the first report of the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments. [53550]

The Prime Minister: The Committee has submitted its first report to me and I have today placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses. Since 1975, the Committee has advised the Prime Minister of the day on the propriety of business appointments that Crown servants wish to take up when they leave Crown service. Following a recommendation of the Committee on Standards of Public Life, it now also provides advice directly to former Ministers on their business appointments. The Committee's first report offers an account of their work in advising former Ministers from the time they took on this role in November 1995 through the post-Election period until the end of March 1998. The report similarly covers the business appointments of senior Crown servants for a two year period from April 1996, when a number of changes were made to the rules, which included bringing special advisers into the system. The Committee gave advice to former Ministers on 175 appointments and made recommendations to Ministers on 128 applications from Crown officials.

The Committee's new responsibilities for giving advice to former Ministers have made their task more onerous. I am very grateful to all the members for devoting their time freely to this important role. The Chairman, the Right Honourable the Lord Carlisle of Bucklow QC, has served with distinction for a number of years and will be stepping down shortly, as will the Right Honourable the Lord Thomson of Monifieth, General Sir Charles Huxtable and Sir Robin Ibbs. They kindly agreed to extensions of their appointments to see through the introduction of the business appointment system for former Ministers. I thank them warmly for the valuable contribution they have made.

Panchen Lama

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will request the release of the Panchen Lama during his forthcoming visit to China. [52789]

The Prime Minister: We have raised individual human rights cases with the Chinese authorities repeatedly and at the highest levels. These have included the case of the child identified by the Dalai Lama as the 11th Panchen Lama. I will press these cases, as well as wider human rights concerns, during my visit.

Policy Unit, 10 Downing Street

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to publish the telephone logs relating to the No.10 Policy Unit. [52844]

The Prime Minister: By convention it is not the practice of Governments to make such information publicly available—a principle reflected in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information published in January 1997.

Former Trade and Industry Minister

Mr. Forth: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will place in the Library the recent report on the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) as a Minister prepared by the Permanent Secretary of the DTI; [52500]

(2) when he received the report on the competence and efficiency of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) as a Minister prepared by the Permanent Secretary of the DTI; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [52502]

The Prime Minister: There is not, and never has been, such a report.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the reviews his Department and its predecessors, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48515]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

Deaf People

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how guidance interviews with deaf people will be conducted; and if the additional communication costs for interviewing deaf people will be provided centrally. [51142]

Dr. Howells: Careers services are required by contract to meet all the information and guidance needs of their clients. This particularly includes those clients with disabilities such as hearing impairment, who stay within the client group until they are settled in their careers intention.

Learning Direct, the national telephone helpline, which provides free information about learning and careers, launched earlier this year, includes a minicom facility to enable those with hearing impairment to access the service. Where a person's needs cannot be met through Learning Direct, they can be referred to appropriate local guidance networks or the careers service for a more in depth service.

As policy on various new Department for Education and Employment guidance initiatives develops, the needs of deaf people will be taken into account.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [51270]

Dr. Howells: The grants and awards administered by the Department for which bids are invited this year and for which the closing date has not already passed are set out. All these items are either available nationally or regionally in the Wakefield area. This list excludes contracts for services.

Item	Deadline
Specialist Schools	2 October 1998
City Technology Colleges[1]	30 September 1998
Standards Fund[2]	A circular is published annually which offers guidance to LEAs on the Standards Fund programme and invites them to make bids where appropriate. The deadline for the 1999–2000 round has not yet been set.
Education Action Zones	Autumn 1998
Independent/State School Partnerships	Applications for grant in 1998–99 were invited by 27 March 1998. No decision has yet been taken on whether to extend this funding pilot into 1999 and beyond
Grants to LEAs towards the extra costs in providing for Traveller and refugee pupils Section 488 of the 1996 Education Act	LEAs will be invited shortly to apply for three-year projects for work beginning in April 1999.
Non Maintained Special Schools Capital Round	31 October 1998
Annual Capital Guidelines to LEAs and Capital and Repair Grants to VA Schools	Mid-October 1998
New Deal for Schools	Mid-January 1999[3]
European Social Fund[4]	Various initiatives, which do not run to the same timetable. The deadline for each round of applications is publicised nationally and by the relevant Government Office when a call for applications is made
Millennium volunteers[5]	Deadline for applications has yet to be set
Support for community based learning activities	Arrangements for bidding will be described in a prospectus to be issued shortly

[1] Available only to City Technology Colleges
[2] Grant 11 of the existing Standards Fund programme (football and study support) would not be available to Wakefield as it is limited to LEAs with Premier League and Nationwide Division 1 football clubs
[3] Provisional
[4] Administered in England and Wales by the Department's ESF Unit. ESF objectives 3 and 4 are available nationally. ESF objective 2 is regional and available in Wakefield
[5] Applications will be dealt with nationally and will be considered from all areas of the country

Careers Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which companies financed from public funds to provide career information are paying dividends to shareholders and cash transfers to parent companies; and if he will make a statement. [51871]

Dr. Howells: The careers service in England is provided by 66 companies operating under competitively tendered contracts. Most are companies limited by guarantee that operate as non profit-making bodies. A number of the contracts are held by commercial companies and where these have been able to generate a surplus through the efficient delivery of their contracts legitimate dividends to shareholders or cash transfers to a parent company may be possible.

Post-graduate Studies

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on (a) progress towards the adoption by universities and other relevant institutions and agencies of the guidelines for post-graduate studies published in December 1996 by the Higher Education Quality Council and (b) proposals for monitoring the application of those guidelines. [52230]

Dr. Howells: Higher education institutions are independent bodies responsible for their own academic and administrative affairs. The guidelines on post-graduate studies published by the Higher Education Quality Council in December 1996 are intended to help and guide institutional practice. The Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education, which was formed in 1997, has accepted the principles on the HEQC guidelines. In response to the report of the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education the Agency is currently preparing a Code of Practice on Postgraduate Research, which it expects to publish in the Autumn of 1998. The Agency intends to monitor and report on institutions' performance under the Code with effect from late 1999.

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the level of literacy and numeracy among adults in Cumbria. [52219]

Dr. Howells: The levels of literacy and numeracy among adults in Cumbria will be improved in a number of ways.

By 2002 we plan to help over 500,000 people a year in England. The working group we have set up to advise us, chaired by Sir Claus Moser, will report in November.

This year we have provided up to £5.5 million for Further Education colleges to run Summer Schools to help those with low basic skills. All three colleges in Cumbria that bid to run Summer Schools have had their plans accepted.

We plan to expand the help given by further and adult education institutions and basic skills are a key target area for the University for Industry. We will also provide help through Investing in Young People, the New Deal 18–24, Adult Work Based Training and our new Adult and Community Learning Fund.

Sixth Form Colleges

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many sixth form colleges there are; how many there were in 1992; when the most recent one was opened; what mechanism exists to establish further colleges; and if he will make a statement. [52257]

Dr. Howells: There are currently 109 sixth form colleges. 116 joined the Further Education sector on 1 April 1993 and two sixth form colleges have joined the sector since then, the most recent on 1 August 1995. New Further Education corporations are established by order of the Secretary of State under section 16 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Training Centre, Colchester

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what alternative training facilities are available for the categories of people who attended the former SEAX Training Centre in Colchester. [52288]

Dr. Howells: Following the closure of the SEAX Training Centre in Colchester, training provision was transferred to the Colchester Institute, Otley College and STS Training in Colchester. Endalm Ltd., a training provider in Benfleet, has taken on some hairdressing and business administration trainees and HCTP of Chelmsford have taken on some catering trainees who would have previously been placed with SEAX Training.

Corrugated Packaging Association

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the decision by a National Training Organisation recognition panel to exclude the Corrugated Packaging Association from the print industry NTO. [52454]

Dr. Howells: The National Training Organisation Recognition Panel is an independent body appointed to advise the Secretary of State on the recognition of National Training Organisations (NTOs). The Panel comprises representatives of national employers, academics and the TUC, with an independent chair.

The criteria which NTOs must satisfy are designed to ensure a strong well-supported network able to address the education and training needs of their sectors. The Recognition panel was pleased to accept a bid from the Print and Graphic Communication sector but has not been persuaded that a case had been made to include the Corrugated Packaging Association. I understand that the Corrugated Packaging Association is now working to produce evidence of how the education and training needs of the sector fit with those of the printing industry.

Optical Fibre Communications

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to develop the potential of modern broad band optical fibre communications within the education system; and if he will make a statement. [52329]

Dr. Howells: The Government are considering carefully the implications for education of broadband communications in the light of the experience of SuperJANET in linking higher education and research institutions, the outcomes of pilot projects under the Education Departments' Superhighways Initiative, and the overall development of the Government's strategy on the National Grid for Learning (NGfL) following consultation. Further announcements on the development of the NGfL will be made later this year.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the nature and quantity of the material sent by his Department to schools concerning Economic and Monetary Union; what was its source, its publication and distribution cost; how it was funded; and if he will place a full set of the material in the Library. [52717]

Mr. Andrew Smith: No material about Economic and Monetary Union has been sent to schools by the Department for Education and Employment.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what extra provision of funds there will be to the education sector following the Comprehensive Spending Review to address millennium computer compliance problems. [52904]

Dr. Howells: The Comprehensive Spending Review has only just concluded. Accordingly, decisions about more detailed allocations are currently in the process of being made. The outcomes of these deliberations will be available later in the year.

Modern Apprenticeships (Engineering)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the proportion of the full average costs to employers of providing a modern apprenticeship in the engineering industry that is met by the subsidy payable through training and enterprise councils. [52957]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not available. Funding for Modern Apprenticeships in the engineering industry is agreed through local negotiations between Training and Enterprise Councils and employers/training providers. The level of support will vary according to a range of factors including local circumstances and the needs of individuals.

Accountancy Qualifications

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent by the Higher Education Funding Council in 1995–96 in support of students studying for accountancy qualifications. [52244]

Dr. Howells: The Higher Education Funding Council for England allocate block grant to institutions based on a broad funding model. The Funding Council has estimated that in 1995–96 the funding model allocated around £36 million to institutions for students on accountancy courses.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statistics his Department collects on the fees charged to students by further education colleges for studying towards accountancy qualifications. [52242]

Dr. Howells: None.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) from which departmental budget the Education Maintenance Allowance will be paid; and how it will be paid to recipients; [53118]

(2) if the Education Maintenance Allowance will be linked to parents' income through (a) means-testing and (b) taxation; [53119]

(3) if he will list the pilot areas for Education Maintenance Allowance; [53120]

(4) how many people are included in the target groups in the pilot areas for the Education Maintenance Allowance; [53121]

(5) when the report from the Education Maintenance Allowance pilots will be published. [53122]

Dr. Howells: The details of the Education Maintenance Allowance pilots are being worked up. Such additional money as is required for EMA pilots is in this Department's budget. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be making an announcement on the pilots in the Autumn.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52955]

Dr. Howells: Neither of the two compliance cost assessments published by this Department between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 identified a net increase in compliance costs to business.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52956]

Dr. Howells: Between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 two compliance cost assessments were published by this Department. These related to: The Industrial Training Levy (Engineering Construction Board) Order 1998 and The Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52954]

Dr. Howells: Although neither of the two compliance cost assessments published by this Department between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 identified a net reduction in compliance costs, in both cases there was a potential net benefit to business. The Department is committed to considering the effect its legislation has on business, for example in the design of the New Deal.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52683]

Dr. Howells: The Department does not collect information centrally on the specific modes of transport used by employees. Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52682]

Dr. Howells: The number of cycle parking spaces in DfEE HQ sites is 183. The breakdown is shown in the table.

Office/site	Number
Darlington	37
London	65
Ranmoor Hall	12
Runcorn	30
Sheffield	39
Total	183

The Employment Service (ES) does not keep records of cycling spaces at its 1,200 properties in a wide range of locations. Where a need is identified, and it is feasible, spaces are made available for staff use.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52612]

Dr. Howells: Decisions on fuel type are made as the individual vehicles are purchased. This is because the relevant technology and the availability of different fuels are constantly changing and the Department seeks efficiency, economy and value for money from every purchase.

SCOTLAND

University Students

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what, at each university in Scotland, is the current number of undergraduates who are ordinarily resident in England whose secondary school was (a) a public or private school, (b) a grant-maintained or grammar school, (c) a local authority comprehensive school and (d) another type of school. [49707]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 9 July 1998]: Available information is given in the table. Data are not available on English students at certain Scottish higher education institutions, nor on English students who entered higher education from further education colleges or similar routes (see footnotes).

Domestic Abuse

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to ensure (a) adequate and (b) secure funding for services providing information, support and refuge to those experiencing domestic abuse. [52271]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 July 1998]: Local funding is for individual local authorities and other agencies, but nationally, the Scottish Office continues to give grants to Scottish Women's Aid, amounting this year to over £200,000 for their work on developing refuge and other permanent rehousing options for abused women who would otherwise be homeless, and social welfare work and training.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to raise public awareness about domestic abuse. [52792]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office will launch a further national advertising campaign in early 1999, as one of a number of measures to prevent domestic abuse.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in order of sparsity the local authorities in Scotland using (a) the definition of settlement size used by his office and (b) the definitions of sparsity and super-sparsity used in the SSA formula for England and Wales. [52358]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Three measures of sparsity are currently in use in the calculation of Grant Aided Expenditure Assessments in Scotland. The table lists local authorities in Scotland in order using each of these measures.

The information required to list Scottish authorities in order using the definition of sparsity and super-sparsity used in the SSA formula for England and Wales is not readily available and will take some time to prepare. I shall write to my hon. Friend with the information in due course.

[1] Percentage of an authority's population living outwith settlements of 10,000+ population. A settlement is defined as a continuously built-up area that is at least 1km distant from any other built-up area

[2] The measures of sparsity include 3 elements: (1) hectares per person; (2) percentage of residents living outwith settlements of 1000+ population (census of population 1991); (3) average distance between population centre point of local authority and the centroid of each postcode sector or enumeration district weighted by its population (census of population 1991). Each component series is standardised and the 3 are combined either by adding together (the "additive") or multiplying together ("the multiplicative"). The sparsity indicator values for the new authorities are the combined values of corresponding former districts, weighted by district population.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52685]

Mr. Dewar: A recent survey showed that 6 per cent. of employees at my Department's main building at Victoria Quay, Edinburgh cycle to work. Equivalent information is not available for the large number of other employment sites for which my Department and agencies are responsible. We are committed to encouraging Green Transport Plans, including measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work, as we explained in our White Paper, "Travel Choices for Scotland" (Cm 4010).

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52946]

Mr. Wilson: Details of compliance cost assessments published by The Scottish Office are contained in the six-monthly Command Papers of Compliance Cost Assessments.

Between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998, ten compliance cost assessments covering the following Scottish measures have been published:

The Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997; and The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development)(Scotland) Amendment Order 1997;

The Building (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997—amendments to Parts D and E of the Technical Standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990;

The Building (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997—amendments to Part J of the Technical Standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990;

The Building (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997—amendments to Part K of the Technical Standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990;

Town and Country Planning (Use Classes)(Scotland) Order 1997; and Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development)(Scotland) Amendment (No. 2) Order 1997;

The Surface Waters (Shellfish)(Classification)(Scotland) Direction 1998;

The Scheme for Construction Contracts (Scotland) Regulations 1998;

Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 (Scotland) (Commencement No. 5) Order 1998;

Construction Contracts (Scotland) Exclusion Order 1998;

Surface Water (Dangerous Substances) (Classification) (Scotland) Regulations 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52947]

Mr. Wilson: There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or result in a saving to business. In the period 1 May 1997 to 30 May 1998, The Scottish Office has produced no compliance cost assessments which have resulted in a net reduction in compliance costs to business, although we have produced some which have indicated that the proposals are cost neutral.

For the detail, I refer the hon. Member to Cmnd 3938 and the individual compliance cost assessments held in the House Library.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what cost-per-job limits are set on offers of regional selective assistance in development areas in Scotland. [52925]

Mr. Wilson: Information on cost-per-job limits is confidential and cannot be disclosed. Regional Selective Assistance offers are made subject to common guidelines throughout Great Britain.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many Scotland supporters were (a) arrested, (b) detained and (c) removed from France by the French authorities during the World Cup; [51994]

(2) if he will list in order of frequency the towns and cities of residence given of the Scottish football fans (a) arrested, (b) detained and (c) removed from France by the French authorities during the World Cup; [51996]

(3) how many members of each official Scottish Football League supporters clubs were (a) arrested, (b) detained and (c) removed from France by the French authorities during the World Cup. [52002]

Mr. Dewar: The number of Scottish fans arrested in France during the World Cup was 6. The number detained and removed from France by the French authorities involved are listed below:

Arrests

Aberdeen (2), Edinburgh (2), Glasgow (1) and Coatbridge (1).

Detained

Edinburgh (35), Glasgow (15), Paisley (1), North Berwick (1), Airdrie (1), Harthill (1), Newcastle (1), Kilsyth (1), Kirkintilloch (1) and Milton of Campsie (1).

Information on how many of these individuals are members of official Scottish Football League supporters clubs is not available.

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many football supporters were arrested or detained by police at each football ground in the Scottish Premier and Scottish divisions 1, 2 and 3 for the last three years for which figures are available; [51999]

(2) how much was spent by each league club in Scotland on policing of football grounds (a) on average per game and (b) each of the last three years for which figures are available. [52003]

Mr. McLeish: It will take some time to obtain this information and I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Lone Parents

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lone parents there are in Scotland; of these how many have children aged under five years; how many, of each of these categories are currently in employment; what proportion of the total of each category in the United Kingdom this represents; and what forcasts his Department has made of these numbers in future years. [52981]

Mr. Wilson: In Spring 1998, there were 173,000 lone parents in Scotland, of whom 72,000 were in employment. Of the 65,000 lone parents who had children aged under 5 years, 12,000 were in employment.

These figures are given in the table, which also shows the proportion of each category in the UK total.

Lone parents with dependent children by economic status and age of youngest dependent child
Spring 1998 (not seasonally adjusted)—Scotland

	Thousand	As per cent. of UK total
All lone parents	173	9.2
in employment	72	8.4

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide an analysis by sector, and for small, medium and large scale businesses, of those projects which have been most successful in gaining funding from the European Regional Development Fund. [52728]

Mr. Macdonald: The information requested is not held centrally. European Regional Development Fund support is delivered through 7 area-based programmes in Scotland and 11 Community Initiative programmes. Successful projects range from the provision of business premises and training facilities to support to the enterprise networks and local authorities to encourage the creation, development and expansion of individual business, particularly small and medium enterprises.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the range of advice and assistance which is given to those seeking assistance from the European Regional Development Fund. [52726]

Mr. Macdonald: Potential applicants for funding receive advice and assistance from a number of sources. That, provided as part of the administration of the programmes, includes general information about the availability of European Funds and how to apply for them, detailed information on the respective programmes, guidance on the completion of application (and claim) forms, and the opportunity to discuss, proposals with Programme Executives and Secretariats responsible for programme administration and implementation.

Scottish Trade International

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the structures and methods used by Scottish Trade International for assessing the success rate of Scottish projects in winning assistance from the European Regional Development Fund. [52727]

Mr. Wilson: Scottish Trade International is consulted on all European Regional Development Fund applications for export promotion activity. The success of such applications is monitored through STI's close involvement with the network of Export Partnerships, together with other relevant Scottish Office officials.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what has been the sterling value of European Regional Development Fund assistance to Scottish Trade International in each of the last five years; [52725]

(2) if Scottish Trade International has made an application to access the European Regional Development Fund to support Scottish export promotion. [52818]

Mr. Wilson: Over the past five years, there have been two projects for which Scottish Trade International has been successful in securing European Regional Development Fund assistance. In 1996, Scottish Trade International secured funding of £175,400 over three years for a project which will develop links with European development agencies to find foreign partners for Scottish companies in overseas markets. The project started on 1 January 1997 and £31,000 of the overall award was paid out in the year 1997–98.

In 1997, Scottish Trade International was also successful in securing funding of £225,000 over two years to establish Scottish Software Centres in California and Virginia. As the project did not commence until 1 January 1998, no payments have as yet been made.

Potential European Regional Development Fund bids for the current financial year are presently being considered by Scottish Trade International.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total overall budget for Scottish Trade International for the current year; and what proportion of that total is provided by (a) the Exchequer and (b) the European Regional Development Fund. [52724]

Mr. Wilson: STI's budget provision for the current year, including running costs, is £7.4 million, of which £6.6 million comes from Scottish Enterprise, with the remainder provided by The Scottish Office. Figures relate to core STI activities and cover both staffing and programme expenditure. In addition, STI will receive about £138,000 this year as a result of previous successful bids for ERDF funding.

Health Boards (External Consultants)

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure by health boards in Scotland on public relations and media services provided by external consultants in each of the last five years. [52410]

Mr. Dewar: The information requested is not held centrally.

Superquarry, Isle of Harris

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received the report of the public inquiry into the proposed superquarry at Lingerbay, Isle of Harris; and when he plans to announce his decision. [52497]

Mr. Macdonald: My right. hon Friend has not yet received the Report of this public local inquiry. Part 1 of the Report (the summary of evidence led and the Findings of Fact) has been circulated to parties for comment and the Reporter is currently considering the responses received with a view to making any necessary adjustments. Thereafter, Part 2 of the Report has to be completed before it is submitted to the Secretary of State for his consideration. At this stage, it is not possible to indicate when a decision will be issued.

Scottish Record Office

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the prior options review of the Scottish Record Office. [53606]

Mr. Dewar: A prior options review of the Scottish Record Office was carried out recently by my Department. The review concluded that the functions of the Scottish Record Office will be required indefinitely as they are essential to the safekeeping and preservation of the national archives of Scotland, and recommended continuation of Agency status. A number of subsidiary recommendations were made to enhance the strategic management of the Agency and to develop its commercial activities. I have accepted the recommendations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Waste Recycling

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if she will publish the targets set by the Committee for the Proportion of waste to be recycled in each of the categories (a) paper, (b) glass, (c) aluminium, (d) other metals and (e) plastics. [51186]

Mrs. Roe: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms; I have asked him to write to the hon. Gentleman.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many power projects contracted under the NFFO are at the planning approval stage; and what is the generation capacity of these projects. [51764]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 July 1998]: As at 31 March 1998 there were seventy-nine NFFO3 projects for which planning applications had been approved. A further twelve had submitted planning applications to the relevant planning authority. Details of these NFFO3 projects, including their contracted capacities, are set out in the table. Comprehensive information about NFFO4 projects' progress in obtaining planning permission is not yet available.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many power stations contracted under the NFFO above 7.5 megawatts are now in the course of construction; and where they are located. [51765]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 July 1998]: There are nine NFFO3 projects with contracted capacities exceeding 7.5 megawatts DNC (declared net capacity) for which planning applications have been approved. Of these, five are operational. Details of these NFFO3 projects, including their registered site addresses, are set out in the table. Comprehensive information of similar-sized NFFO4 projects' progress in obtaining planning permission is not yet available.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much electricity is currently being generated by projects contracted under the NFFO. [51766]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 July 1998]: Electricity generated from all NFFO1–4 projects from 1 April 1997 until 31 March 1998 was 2,732 Gwh.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate the savings in CO_2 emissions from the use of (a) all power stations and (b) biomass power stations contracted under the NFFO. [51767]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 July 1998]: I expect renewable energy projects contracted under NFFOs 1–5 to achieve savings in CO_2 emissions of about 2 million tonnes of carbon. Ten to twenty per cent. of this will be attributable to biomass power stations, depending on the number of projects which are successfully commissioned.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the proposed power stations which have secured contracts under the NFFO have been refused planning permission by the relevant planning authority. [51768]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 21 July 1998]: Information about planning permission refusals for NFFO1 and NFFO2 projects is not held centrally. As at 31 March 1998 fifteen NFFO3 projects had been refused planning permission. Appeals had been lodged in respect of twelve of these projects, of which five have been dismissed. Comprehensive information about NFFO4 projects' progress in obtaining planning permission is not yet available.

British Coal

Caroline Flint: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total revenue from sales of British Coal land and assets in each year since privatisation. [52447]

Mr. Battle: The total proceeds received for each year were:

£ million

Financial year	Sale of land and assets	Sale of subsidiary undertakings	Total
1995–96	48	48	96
1996–97	76	35	111
1997–98	49	13	62

Arbitration Legislation

Ms Kelly: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the recent legislation concerning the arbitration of employment cases will come into force. [52632]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Provision for the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) to provide, fund, and promote a scheme for the arbitration of unfair dismissal disputes, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, is included in the Employment Rights (Dispute Resolution) Act 1998. This provision will come into force on 1 August 1998. The scheme, which will be the subject of consultation, is not expected to begin operation until after April 1999.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has evaluated on the causes and extent of fuel poverty; and if she will make a statement. [51314]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Green Paper A Fair Deal for Consumers: Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation highlighted a particular concern that disadvantaged consumers may be benefiting least from emerging competition in gas and electricity supply. In considering how these problems might best be resolved, the review of utilities regulation has considered available papers and research on these issues. Officials from my Department have also been involved in an interdepartmental working group under the leadership of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, which has considered how fuel poverty might be more closely defined and alleviated, and have contributed to the Gas Consumers' Council's Low Income Consumer and Competition working group.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 402, when he expects to publish his response to the action plan for the protection of disadvantaged consumers produced by the energy regulators and energy companies in consultation with consumer organisations. [53170]

Mr. Battle: The then President of the Board of Trade published on 27 July 'A Fair Deal for Consumers: Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation: The Response to Consultation'. This details the Government's response to the consultation on the Green Paper on utility regulation, published in March, including the action plan for the protection of disadvantaged consumers. Copies have been placed in the Library of both Houses.

Foresight Programme

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what systems are in place to measure the performance of the Foresight programme. [53083]

Mr. Battle: On coming into office my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), as President of the Board of Trade, commissioned an audit of the Foresight Programme across Government. Last October the findings of the audit were published, and the Ministerial Foresight Group was established under my chairmanship to provide top level oversight of the Foresight Programme across Whitehall. A further progress report was published last month. Copies are available in the Library.

Independent assessments of the impact of Foresight to date have been published by several organisations, including a 1995 report from the House of Commons Select Committee on Science and Technology, and a report from the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology shortly after the General Election last year. Impact assessment will be an integral part of the next round of Foresight, starting in April 1999, which is currently the subject of widespread public consultation. The blueprint for the next round will be published in the Autumn.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of the Foresight Initiative in each of the last three years. [53082]

Mr. Battle: The Foresight Programme is spearheaded by sixteen panels drawn from business, the science base, and Government departments. Panel members give their time free of charge. The total cost of staff in the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology servicing panels and managing the development of the programme, related consultancy support, and Panel activities in each of the last three years was as follows:

	£ million
1995–96	1.170
1996–97	1.502
1997–98	1.475

Mining Industry

Mr. Etherington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to conclude her deliberations on the issue of dismissed miners. [52751]

Mr. Battle: The recently published Coalfields Task Force report recommended that the DTI review the pension entitlements of individuals who were dismissed by British Coal at the time of the 1984–85 miners' strike. The Department is actively looking into British Coal's handling of the issue. However, given the time that has elapsed since these dismissals and the consequent difficulty in establishing the full circumstances, it is too early to say when a conclusion might be reached.

Strikes

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many days have been lost to strikes in each quarter since the first quarter of 1992. [52980]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The information requested is given in the table:

Number of working days lost due to labour disputes in the UK

Year	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
1992	114,800	85,600	161,600	166,000	528,000
1993	194,000	198,900	76,300	180,000	649,300

Coal Authority

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Coal Authority's report and Accounts for 1997–98 will be laid before Parliament. [53551]

Mr. Battle: I have today laid a copy before each House of Parliament.

Landward Petroleum Licensing

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has concluded his assessment of applications made in the 8 Round of Landward Petroleum Licensing. [53546]

Mr. Battle: All applications have now been assessed. No further awards will be made.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Tests (South Asia)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 June 1998, Official Report, column 152, if he will establish for what reasons British Intelligence did not provide advance warning of the Indian nuclear tests. [46818]

Mr. Robin Cook: The performance of the intelligence agencies in meeting the requirements placed on them is reviewed regularly by the Joint Intelligence Committee and subsequently by Ministers.

GCHQ

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to consult local authorities on the future location of GCHQ. [52205]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ has maintained contact with and consulted local authorities at all stages of their new accommodation project and will continue to do so. The development of GCHQ's future accommodation is subject to statutory planning procedures and the short-listed consortia will be required to obtain planning consent from the Local Authorities for their development plans.

Diplomatic Representation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on changes to his Department's policy and practice on the maintenance of diplomatic representation with de facto Governments, following the deposition of a democratic Government. [51876]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The policy of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not changed. Since 1980 the practice of the UK has been to recognise states and not governments. We maintain diplomatic representation when it is in the UK interest to do so. The level at which our representation is maintained depends upon the scale of British interests and the political acceptability of the government in power of the state concerned. The deposition of a democratic government does not necessarily bring about the withdrawal of diplomatic representation or a breach in diplomatic relations.

Immigration Section, Islamabad

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning conditions in the Immigration Office at the British High Commission in Islamabad; and if he will make a statement. [52048]

Mr. Fatchett: During 1997 we received representations from many Members of Parliament about the handling of individual visa applications and the standard of service provided by the Immigration Section at our High Commission in Islamabad. A combination of staff shortages and computer failures during the busy summer season in 1997 had resulted in a deterioration in service standards.

A programme of change (including increases in staff numbers, training programmes and improvements to public waiting areas) initiated at the beginning of this year has resulted in improvement in the quality of service. We are doing all that we can to maintain standards during the current summer peak season for visa applications.

Brazil

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in establishing the land rights of the Tapeba Indians in the state of Ceara, Brazil; and how many hectares have been demarcated. [52432]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Embassy officials in Brasilia maintain regular contact with the authorities responsible for the demarcation of Indian lands.

4,658 hectares will be allocated to the Tapeba. The period for legal challenge to this decision lapsed on Friday 24 July, meaning that physical demarcation can now proceed. A company has been selected to carry out the physical demarcation and the tender for this was expected to be ratified by the President of FUNAI (the National Foundation for Assistance to Indians) on 27 July.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52689]

Mr. Fatchett: In relation to the number of employees, we provide the following proportion of cycle spaces:

London: 7.2 per cent.

Hanslope Park (near Milton Keynes): 11.5 per cent.

There is a fairly high usage rate, but precise details are not available.

We plan to increase the number of cycle spaces in our London buildings by up to 20 per cent. during this financial year in order to encourage those employees who live within cycling distance to use this method of transport.

Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

County Court, Evesham

Mr. Luff: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to reach a decision on the future of Evesham County Court. [52736]

Mr. Hoon: The proposal to close Evesham County Court was put out to public consultation in May 1998. Consultation ended on 3 July 1998. All of the responses will now be considered by Court Service Officials before any decision is made on how this proposal is to proceed. If the decision is made to go ahead, the Group Manager will submit a business case (setting out all the points raised against closure and the reply made to them) to the Lord Chancellor for a final decision. It is therefore not possible at this stage to provide a timetable.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52623]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is as follows:

Department	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
The Court Service	403 x diesel	153 x diesel	50 x diesel
Lord Chancellor's Department Headquarters	4 x petrol	5 x petrol	6 x petrol
	—	—	1 x diesel
Northern Ireland Court Service	—	—	1 x diesel
HM Land Registry	10 x diesel	4 x diesel	8 x diesel

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

UEFA Competitions

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received in respect of the UEFA decision to impose ownership restrictions on clubs taking part in UEFA competitions. [50716]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 16 July 1998]: I have received a number of representations expressing concern about a recently adopted UEFA ruling preventing football clubs under common control from participating in the same UEFA competition.

While I can appreciate the concern about the potential impact of the ruling, I believe it is very important that the integrity of football competitions is not undermined. How far the new ruling is proportionate to UEFA's concerns in this regard is, of course, for the football authorities to judge in the first instance, and to pursue as necessary with UEFA. I am due to discuss this issue with the Premier League.

Sport (Worcestershire)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support he will give to outstanding sportsmen and sportswomen from Worcestershire. [50921]

Mr. Banks: Outstanding sportsmen and sportswomen from Worcestershire, who compete at the highest international levels, will be able to benefit from the Lottery funded World Class Performance Programme, which has so far awarded grants worth a total of £28.9 million to support 1,808 elite athletes across the country.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 16 December 1997, Official Report, column 77, that Sheffield was the successful consortium chosen to run and manage the United Kingdom Sports Institute Headquarters. Alongside the HQ there will be a regional network which will provide first class facilities for a range of Olympic and other non-commercial sports for our very best sportsmen and women.

The Home Country Sports Councils have been asked by Ministers to identify prospective regional centres. The English Sports Council (ESC) have looked very carefully at the siting of the Centres in England and have taken into account many factors including existing facilities, population and transport. The ESC have concentrated on finding a solution so that all our elite athletes, wherever they live, will have access to the best training and support services.

I have received the ESC's recommendations but they will need careful consideration and discussion before any decision and announcement are made.

School Sports

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what guidelines his Department issues on the minimum number of sports schools should offer. [51319]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 20 July 1998]: My Department does not issue guidelines on the number of sports schools should offer. The national curriculum for PE is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

The English Sports Council's National Junior Sport Programme includes the TOP series of initiatives, developed and delivered with the Youth Sports Trust, which provide opportunities for children to become involved in sport and realise their full potential.

Cricket

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many women he estimates regularly play cricket in England. [51628]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 21 July 1998]: According to the England and Wales Cricket Board, there were 3,600 women and nearly 500,000 school girls playing cricket throughout this country in 1997. The Government, through the English Sports Council, actively encourage all governing bodies of sport to have programmes in place which promote our policy of "sport for all" and increase participation levels in all sports, from grass roots through to elite competitors.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the possible locations for a national cricket centre of excellence; and what criteria will determine its location. [51627]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 21 July 1998]: As part of the consultation process on the National Cricket Centre, the England and Wales Cricket Board is exploring a number of possible locations, including English Sports Council's National Sports Centre at Lilleshall.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the proposals for a national cricket centre of excellence. [51626]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The Management Board of the England and Wales Cricket Board has already supported the idea in principle that a National Cricket Centre should be established, and a project manager is soon to be appointed. This has to be considered in the context of a number of other developments in the game and wide consultation is still taking place to determine the best way forward.

Millennium Sporting Competitions

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which Millennium sporting competitions his Department is assisting. [51625]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport worked closely with the Millennium Commission, the other National Lottery distributors and the New Millennium Experience Company to develop the £100 million Millennium Festival Fund. The Fund will support events and activities to mark the Millennium in the United Kingdom throughout the year 2000.

The English Sports Council is responsible in England for sport's share of the National Lottery. The Council has agreed to support two major initiatives as part of the Millennium Festival. The Millennium Youth Games, launched by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 25 February, will celebrate and promote the role of sport in the personal development of young people by establishing a nationwide series of Youth Games culminating in a National Games in the year 2000. "Awards for All" will operate as a cross-distributor initiative involving three related minor grant programmes providing resources to schools, clubs and non-sporting organisations to promote and widen access to sport. The Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Sports Councils are developing their own Festival programmes.

The Millennium Commission will support sports activities from its own contribution to the Festival Fund, where these form part of cross-sectoral Millennium projects or are endorsed by the respective sports councils.

Sport (Women)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much the English Sports Council has received in grant-in-aid for 1997–98; how much money was awarded to women's governing bodies of sport in 1997–98; and how much money was provided at (i) national and (ii) regional level for projects exclusively or primarily concerned with the development of women's sport. [51779]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The English Sports Council (ESC) received £33.725 million grant in aid in 1997–98. Of this: (i) nationally, £541,000 was awarded to women's governing bodies and £35,000 to the Women's Sport Foundation to help women in sport; and (ii) £10,000 was awarded to various women's sporting projects in the regions.

All governing bodies in receipt of funding must demonstrate that they have policies offering equal opportunities for women; the sums identified do not, of course indicate the total expenditure benefiting women in all sports.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made towards increasing the involvement of women in traditionally male-dominated sports at (a) participant, (b) competitor, (c) coach and (d) administrator levels. [51781]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The English Sports Council (ESC) is working closely with the governing bodies of football, rugby union, rugby league and cricket to increase the involvement of women in all areas of these sports.

The Council awards grant in aid funding to sports governing bodies to promote and develop women's involvement and examine ways to increase participation. Governing bodies are required to draw up an appropriate action plan as a condition of this funding.

The ESC held a conference in November last year with governing bodies in those sports specifically to examine this area closely. A follow-up conference will be held in January to monitor progress.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to promote the public profile of professional women athletes. [51783]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The Government are determined to raise the profile of all women athletes.

The Sporting Ambassadors initiative will include top sportswomen to act as role models for young people. By doing so, the initiative will raise the profile of women athletes generally and encourage more women and girls to take part in sport.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I are determined to increase the proportion of women appointed to Department-sponsored bodies, including the United Kingdom Sports Council and the English Sports Council. High-profile appointments such as this should also help raise the overall public profile of sportswomen.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Health on the subject of promoting the health benefits of sport to females of all ages; and what action has subsequently been taken. [51785]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no direct discussions with the Secretary of State for Health on this particular issue. However, there is contact between officials in the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, the English Sports Council (ESC) and the Department of Health about issues relating to the Health benefits of sport to women and men alike.

In considering the development of healthy living centres outlined in the National Lottery Act 1998, Ministers were mindful of the possible role sport can play in promoting the health of women. The draft policy directions for the New Opportunities Fund, currently out for consultation, make specific reference to the need to ensure that projects for healthy living centres cover a wide range of facilities, including sporting activities.

The ESC will be piloting a project addressing health and physiological issues for young girls starting in October.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Under Secretary of State for Women on the subject of women and sport; and what action has subsequently been taken. [51787]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no direct discussions with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Women on this particular issue. However, there is contact between officials in the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and the Women's Unit on a range of issues relating to women and sport. As a result, we, together with the English Sports Council, are examining ways to raise the profile of women in sport in a number of areas.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many meetings (a) he and (b) the Minister for Sport have had with women's sport groups since 1 May 1997. [51788]

Mr. Banks [holding answer Thursday 23 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions specifically with women's sport groups; I have had one such meeting. However, we both have regular discussions with people involved in sport, including sportswomen, where issues relating to women in sport are raised.

Also, the English Sports Council is in continual dialogue with women's sports groups at all levels. The Council reports to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and me on this and a range of other sports-related matters.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to ensure that the objectives of the 1994 Brighton Declaration on women in sport are being met. [51784]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: I was delighted to announce on 19 May 1998, Official Report, column 309 that the Government had adopted the Brighton Declaration on Women and Sport. We shall abide fully with the aims and principles set out in the declaration.

The English Sports Council and United Kingdom Sports Council have already adopted the declaration and ensure that their policies reflect the declaration's aims.

The Government will be guided by the aims of the declaration in developing their sports policies and in their work with the Sports Councils and other sporting organisations.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage more women to take part in sport; and what funding is available to encourage women's participation in sport at each level. [51782]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I work closely with the English Sports Council (ESC) to ensure it has policies aimed at encouraging more women into sport and raising participation levels.

The ESC has introduced a range of initiatives aimed at encouraging more women into sport and provides funding to women's sports governing bodies, including through the Lottery Sports Fund. The Council also promotes good practice through demonstration projects, advice and guidance notes and action plans.

The ESC's Womens Advisory Group examines issues relating to women in sport and gives advice to the Council to ensure that its policies offer equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on the subject of increasing sporting opportunities for girls in schools; and what action has subsequently been taken. [51786]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: My department works closely with the Department for Education and Employment to promote sport in schools for all young people.

I am currently undertaking a number of meetings on the subject of encouraging greater involvement of women and girls in sport.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what specific plans have been made to cater for the needs of women in sport within the UK Sports Institute. [51778]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The development of the UK Sports Institute will ensure that any appropriate requirement for top women athletes are taken into account. The Headquarters project is shortly to enter its design phase when these matters will be fully considered.

Sport Governing Bodies

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 1 June 1998, Official Report, column 48, when he expects the survey on the profile of officers in governing bodies to be published. [51789]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: My officials recently met the Central Council of Physical Recreation to discuss progress on the survey that the Council is to undertake of its membership. The Council have carried out some preliminary work on how the survey might best be conducted. They now intend to speak to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Murphy) about how the questions he raised in this House on the profile of officers serving on governing bodies of sport can best be addressed. I would hope the results of the Council's survey will be available after the Summer Recess.

HEALTH

Disability Awareness Training

13. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS staff have had disability awareness training. [50988]

Mr. Boateng: Information about the implications of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 was issued to the National Health Service in 1996. Government advice to service providers includes the provision of disability [illegible] practices and procedures in the light of the Act's developing requirements. Such training will be arranged locally.

Primary Care Groups

16. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from representatives of general practitioners on his plans for primary care groups. [50991]

25. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support he has received from representatives of general practitioners for his plans for primary care groups. [51000]

Mr. Milburn: We have had a series of discussions with a range of general practitioner representative groups over the development of Primary Care Groups.

NHS Direct

19. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for extending NHS Direct. [50994]

26. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for extending NHS Direct. [51001]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friends to the oral reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave today.

39. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the performance of NHS Direct. [51014]

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the operation of NHS Direct. [50975]

Mr. Milburn: We have been monitoring the performance of the three current NHS Direct pilots and they will be independently evaluated to ensure that the service operates to best effect to benefit patients, and to make a significant contribution to better use of resources within the National Health Service.

The early evidence we have suggests that not only do the public like the service but it is clearly helping to guide them to the right response to their problems. In May nearly 1,500 people or 30 per cent. of callers were given advice on how they look after themselves at home. The service also put 83 people directly in touch with the ambulance service, possibly in some cases saving lives.

Cancelled Operations

20. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current trends in the number of cancelled operations. [50995]

36. Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current trends in the number of cancelled operations. [51011]

Mr. Boateng: The number of cancelled operations fell by 12 per cent., from 16,374 to 14,460, in the first three [illegible]

Hospitals (Clinical Performance)

21. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to give patients and general practitioners new rights to information about the clinical performance of local hospitals. [50996]

Mr. Dobson: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral reply I gave today, Official Report, columns 153.

28. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to (a) assess and (b) publish records of clinical performance in hospitals. [51003]

Mr. Milburn: Later in the year we will be publishing a number of hospital based clinical indicators on deaths and complications from a range of procedures. These indicators will provide the basis for a better understanding of how hospitals are performing on aspects of their clinical care.

Primary Care (Redbridge)

22. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to visit Redbridge to discuss local primary care services. [50997]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans at present to visit Redbridge to discuss primary care services.

Dentistry (Multiple Sclerosis)

23. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to replace free of charge amalgam fillings with non-mercury-based materials for persons diagnosed as having MS. [50998]

Mr. Milburn: National Health Service dental treatments are provided on the basis of clinical need. This could include replacing fillings if that is the advice of the responsible medical practitioner. Full or partial exemptions from treatment charges are available for people on low incomes.

Community Hospitals (Funding)

24. Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on community hospital funding between 1999 and 2002. [50999]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has just announced a further £18 billion for the National Health Service in England over the next three years. Provided they meet the same standards of quality, access, efficiency and need, community hospitals will have the same opportunity to access additional funds as other hospitals.

Waiting Lists

27. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the current administrative reorganisation and prioritisation of waiting lists on the overall figures. [51002]

Mr. Milburn: The impact of our waiting list strategy will be to provide record growth in National Health Service activity to bring down waiting lists over the lifetime of this Parliament. We will also keep the position under review.

We have already eliminated over 18 month waits for treatment for the first time ever and we intend to continue to deliver this guarantee.

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current trends in hospital waiting lists. [50993]

Mr. Milburn: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health told the Health Select Committee last week, provisional data show that waiting lists stopped rising in May and fell by around 21,000 in June. Validated figures will be published in due course. This is clear evidence that we are making real progress in reversing the legacy of rising waiting lists inherited from the previous administration.

General Practitioners (Vacancies)

29. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of vacancies that currently exist in general practitioner posts. [51004]

Mr. Milburn: Surveys by the Medical Practices Committee indicate that the vacancy rate for general medical practitioners remains low at around 3 per cent. Recent policy initiatives should help to ensure that the general practice workforce continues to be maintained at the size required to meet service needs overall.

NHS Trust Boards

30. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom letters requesting nominations from local authorities for trust boards will be sent for the next trawl for appointments; and if he will make a statement. [51005]

Mr. Milburn: Letters were sent to local authority chief executives in November and December 1997 seeking nominations for appointment to National Health Service trust and health authority boards in 1998. A similar letter will be sent to chief executives later this year seeking nominations for appointments in 1999.

Private Finance Initiative (Trent)

31. Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the completion of PFI projects in the Trent region. [51006]

Mr. Milburn: Seven private finance initiative (PFI) projects with a combined capital value of £14.8 million either are complete and operational or have started work on site. Two further PFI schemes (combined capital value of £3.2 million) have had their Full Business Cases approved and are expected to reach financial close this year.

Two further trusts—Queen's Medical Centre and Fosse Health—are working closely with their preferred private sector partners on major PFI schemes and are expected to submit Full Business Cases before the end of the year.

Community Hospitals (Worcestershire)

32. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of community hospitals in Worcestershire. [51007]

Mr. Milburn: Worcestershire Health Authority's strategy for community hospitals forms part of the submission on the Worcestershire Strategic Review which is now with Ministers, and a decision will be announced in due course.

Kidderminster Hospital

33. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the unexpired life of the buildings at Kidderminster hospital for the purposes for which they were constructed. [51008]

Mr. Milburn: No formal assessment of the recent build at Kidderminster General Hospital has been made.

Community Pharmacies

34. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effects of the provisions of the Competition Bill [Lords] on independent community pharmacies; and if he will make a statement. [51009]

Mr. Milburn: The effect of the Competition Bill will be to bring such community pharmacies, along with other businesses, within a modern and coherent framework of competition legislation. However, there will be a guaranteed five year transitional period during which the prohibition on anti-competitive agreements is not to apply to resale price maintenance for over the counter medicines.

NHS Dentistry (Somerset)

35. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on access to NHS dentistry in Somerset. [51010]

Mr. Milburn: Health authorities are responsible for monitoring the availability of general dental services in their area. If access to services is seriously limited, they can apply to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for help under the Investing in Dentistry scheme, to tackle these mainly localised problems. To date, five requests from Somerset Health Authority have been authorised to help improve access where a deficiency in services has occurred.

Radiotherapy Services (North West Region)

37. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of radiotherapy services in the North-West. [51012]

Mr. Milburn: Radiotherapy is currently provided in three centres in the North West: Clatterbridge Hospital in Wirral, Christie Hospital in Manchester and the Royal Preston Hospital in Lancashire. Following a review of cancer services in the North West led by Professor Peter Selby, the £5.1 million Lancashire and Lakeland Unit with Radiotherapy at the Royal Preston Hospital opened to patients in February 1997.

In order fully to assess the requirement for radiotherapy service provision in the North West and to ensure that deficiencies in access to radiotherapy services for all patients can be identified and addressed, the National [illegible] undertaking a study of [illegible] analysis of the level of service currently being provided and a projection of the level of service required. This will include staffing levels, equipment requirement and costs. The work is expected to be completed in the autumn.

General Practitioners (Training)

38. Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current trend in the number of trainee general practitioners starting training. [51013]

Mr. Milburn: The latest available data for England show that between 1996 and 1997, there was an upturn in the number of trainee general practitioners (now referred to as GP Registrars) of 2.9 per cent. Between 1987 and 1996 there was an average annual percentage decrease in the number of GP Registrars of 2.4 per cent.

The number of GP Registrars undergoing vocational training, in England on 1 October in each year from 1987 to 1997, is shown in the table. This is a snapshot of individuals in post on one specific day. 1997 is the last year for which information is available.

Year	Number of GP Registrars
1987	1,710
1988	1,685
1989	1,735
1990	1,562
1991	1,639
1992	1,613
1993	1,529
1994	1,445
1995	1,404
1996	1,305
1997	1,343

Director of Health Improvement

40. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the proposed powers and duties of the national Director of Health Improvement. [51015]

Ms Jowell: The Director of Health Improvement will be appointed by the Board of the Commission for Health Improvement. The establishment, powers and duties of the Commission for Health Improvement are subject to legislation. Further details of our proposals for the Commission for Health Improvement are set out in the document A First Class Service: Quality in the new NHS, copies of which are available in the Library.

Insulin Pen Needles

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the extra cost to the NHS of allowing general practitioners to prescribe insulin injection pen needles. [48993]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Preston (Audrey Wise) on 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 503.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health [illegible]

Mr. Milburn: The net ingredient cost of syringes and needles dispensed in the community in England in 1997 was £6.4 million. Further detail can be found on page 411 of Prescription Cost Analysis, England 1997, copies of which are in the Library. This cost does not take account of discounts, dispensing costs, fees or prescription charges income. Information about hospital dispensing is not available centrally.

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he anticipates a decision will be made on whether general practitioners should be allowed to prescribe insulin injection pen needles on the NHS. [48992]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Campbell) on 28 April 1998, Official Report, column 121.

Human Albumin Solution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the safety of human albumin solution. [50118]

Mr. Dobson: (holding answer 14 July 1998): The safety of human albumin solution when used in resuscitation of critically ill patients has been questioned in a paper by the Cochrane Injuries Group published in the British Medical Journal (25 July 1998). This presents the findings of a systematic review of more than 30 clinical trials examining the effects of albumin in the treatment of seriously ill patients. Individually, these trials have many limitations but, taken together, they suggest that seriously ill patients given albumin may be less likely to survive their illness than if they are given alternative fluids. However, it is uncertain whether albumin is responsible for extra deaths or why it might be harmful. The paper states that the use of human albumin in the management of such patients should be urgently reviewed but no specific advice is given.

An article in The Observer of 26 July has questioned the handling of this issue by the Chief Medical Officer and the Medicines Control Agency. Following a telephone call with the Deputy Chief Medical Officer, one of the authors of the paper, Dr. Roberts, sent information on the systematic review to the Chief Medical Officer on 12 March. This was given very careful consideration before the Chief Medical Officer wrote back to Dr. Roberts on 27 April. He reinforced the Deputy Chief Medical Officer's advice that this information should be sent to the Medicines Control Agency, who are responsible for advice on licensed medicines containing human albumin. Dr. Roberts sent a draft of the paper to the Medicines Control Agency which was received by them on 28 April.

The paper was evaluated and the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines based on the evidence available was sought on 13 May. Further information was requested from Dr. Roberts on 14 May and a reply was received on 19 May. A full evaluation of the findings of the systematic review and the individual clinical trials included in the review was made. It was considered by the Committee on Safety of Medicines on 28 May. The Committee's view was that [illegible] advised an Expert Working Party be set up to consider the implications of the review for the use of human albumin. Experts in intensive care, burns, paediatrics, hepatology and cardiothoracic surgery were identified and on 25 June were invited to join the Expert Working Party. It met on 23 July. The Expert Working Party did not consider that withdrawal of human albumin products was warranted but requested further data on similar products to albumin, as some evidence on the colloid alternatives to human albumin also suggests an associated increase in mortality. The EWP is to meet again in September to consider this aspect.

Information was sent to hospital specialists through the CMO's Epinet cascade on 24 July, informing them of actions being taken, and an article will shortly appear in the CMO Update which is circulated to all doctors in England. Meanwhile, it is important that when human albumin is to be given, the precautions in authorised product information and the British National Formulary are followed.

This matter has been considered very carefully. Those responsible for advising me on licensing of human medicines have concluded that on the evidence available to them it is currently more appropriate to leave human albumin available for clinicians who wish to use it for the benefit of their patients than to ban it.

Mental Health

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what redress is available to individuals who have been charged by local authorities under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 for residential or domiciliary services. [51504]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Charges cannot be levied for services, residential or non-residential, which are provided as part of the programme of aftercare for a patient who is entitled to such care under Section 117 of the Mental Health Act.

If a person believes that charges have been levied under these circumstances, they should raise the matter with the appropriate social services authority.

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with other departments over the funding for people with mental health problems living in sheltered accommodation. [51316]

Mr. Boateng: The Government fully appreciate the importance of supported housing for vulnerable people, including those with mental health problems.

The Department is part of the inter-departmental review of the funding of support services in housing for vulnerable people.

Shropshire Health Authority

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each of the past 10 years the [illegible] paid out in compensation by Shropshire Health Authority [illegible]

Mr. Milburn: The payments for clinical negligence by Shropshire Health Authority are set out in the table.

£000

Year	Total negligence payments
1997–98	3,154
1996–97	529
1995–96	1,691
1994–95	2,143
1993–94	173
1992–93	87

HIV-positive Patients

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many HIV-positive patients have not been admitted to HIV wards in Hampshire for lack of an available bed in the last five years; [52226]

(2) how many beds there are in HIV wards in the Portsmouth area. [52227]

Ms Jowell: This information is not collected by the Department. The hon. Member may, therefore, wish to contact Ms Judith Smyth, Chairman of Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority, for information on the care of patients with HIV in the Portsmouth area.

Hysterectomies

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hysterectomies were carried out in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and how many were carried out for fibroids alone. [52067]

Mr. Boateng: The information for National Health Service Hospitals in England for 1995–96 (the latest figures available) is as follows:

	Number
Total number of hysterectomies	71,559
Number of hysterectomies where the primary diagnosis was uterine fibroids	16,311

Notes:
Operation codes: QO7-Q8, Excision of uterus
Diagnostic code (ICD-10): D25 Leiomyoma of uterus

Matters relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are for my right. hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Derbyshire Ambulance NHS Trust

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the factors underlying the response

Mr. Boateng: Derbyshire Ambulance Service has experienced an increase in its emergency workload of almost 50 per cent. since 1993. North Derbyshire and Southern Derbyshire Health Authorities, Derbyshire Ambulance Service and the National Health Service Executive are working together to address ambulance response times in Derbyshire and how these can best be improved.

Drug-related Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths have occurred in (a) England and (b) Wales in the past five years caused by the use of (i) heroin and (ii) methadone. [50502]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 23 July 1998]: The information available is shown in the table.

Deaths from heroin and methadone to residents of England and Wales, 1993–1997

Year	England		Wales
	Heroin	Methadone	Heroin	Methadone
1993	54	215	1	5
1994	88	248	1	9
1995	128	277	1	19
1996	182	334	3	16
1997	167	344	2	24

Notes:
1. Data for years 1993–1996 are based on those that occurred during the year; data for 1997 on those that were registered in that year
2. Where both heroin and methadone are mentioned on a death certificate, the death is shown twice in this table, once under heroin and once under methadone
3. In some of these deaths other substances of misuse may be involved

Ambulance Costs

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the costs incurred by each ambulance trust in England, the total number of patient journeys made by each trust, and the unit costs of each journey in 1997–98. [52105]

Mr. Boateng: Details of the number of patient journeys made by each National Health Service ambulance trust are in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin Ambulance Services, England 1997–98, copies of which are available in the Library. Details of trust expenditure in 1997–98 are not yet available.

Coeliac's Disease

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the dietary advice available to sufferers of Coeliac's disease. [52381]

Ms Jowell: This is a professional matter. The British Society of Gastroenterology issued "Guidelines for the management of patients with coeliac disease" in September 1996. They include guidance on the dietary treatment of the condition and the need for supervision by a dietitian. The Coeliac Society, a national patient

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where frozen embryos are currently being stored; and how many have been disposed of since the implementation of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. [52977]

Mr. Milburn: There are 74 clinics licenced by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority to store embryos. These are listed.

The authority does not routinely keep central records of the number of embryos removed from storage and subsequently disposed of. The number of embryos created in the course of treatment involving in vitro fertilisation that were not frozen or used for treatment or other purposes between 1 August 1991 and 31 March 1996 was 138,450.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the criteria for relocating the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority; and if there are currently vacancies on the Authority. [52976]

Ms Jowell: There are no proposals for relocating the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

There are no current vacancies on the Authority. In respect of future vacancies, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Hill) on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 529.

Hernias

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the tension-free reinforcement mesh technique for treatment of hernias relative to conventional surgery; what assessment he has made of possible savings to the NHS

Mr. Boateng: The Royal College of Surgeons issued clinical guidelines on the management of groin hernias in 1993. These endorsed the Shouldice technique but recognised that early results from tension-free repairs using prosthetic mesh rivalled the Shouldice repair. The Department has provided funding to the Surgical Epidemiology and Audit Unit at the Royal College of Surgeons to carry out a national audit of the outcome of groin hernia. This will enable current surgical practice to be compared with the 1993 guidelines. The use of prosthetic mesh in hernia repairs has also been advanced by the development of laparoscopic herniorrhaphy which has been the subject of a large randomised controlled trial conducted by the Medical Research Council. Results from that trial are expected early next year. We will, in the light of this work, consider with the Royal College of Surgeons whether further guidance is needed.

Doctors and Nurses

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unemployed doctors and nurses there are currently in the United Kingdom. [52802]

Mr. Milburn: Information about numbers of unemployed doctors and nurses is not available centrally.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what projections his Department has made of the number of doctors and nurses who will have to be recruited from outside the United Kingdom to fulfil his targets of 7,000 extra doctors and 15,000 extra nurses. [52807]

Mr. Milburn: Numbers of doctors are expected to increase by up to 7,000 and numbers of nurses by up to 15,000 during the period 1998–2001. Our projections suggest that around half the doctors will be recruited from outside the United Kingdom. More nurses will complete the training each year, in which we have already invested. As the National Health Service offers more supportive and flexible family-friendly working environments, trusts will be able to attract and retain more nurses, some of whom may be from overseas, and encourage back in to practice those not currently working in their profession.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52678]

Ms Jowell: All of the buildings and sites for which the Department has management responsibility have facilities for cycle storage either in the form of dedicated spaces (for example cycle racks), by the provision of secure areas, or by arrangement with landlords, as shown in the table. In the majority of buildings additional cycle parking is available in the car park.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52679]

Ms Jowell: No information is available on the proportion of the Department's employees who cycle to work. Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its agencies.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52960]

Ms Jowell: Since 1 May 1997, the Department has published seven compliance cost assessments:

June 1997: Proposal for a Council Directive on Health Protection of Individuals Against the Dangers of Ionising Radiation in Relation to Medical Exposures, replacing Directive 84/466/Euratom (final).

August 1997: The Prescription Only Medicine (Human Use) (Amendment) Order 1997—the reclassification of analgesic medicines; and The Medicines (Sale or Supply) (Miscellaneous Provisions) Amendment (No.2) Regulations 1997.

August 1997: The Prescription Only Medicine (Human Use) (Amendment) Order 1997—the reclassification of Terfenadine.

December 1997: Proposal for a Council Directive on the Advertising of Tobacco Products.

January 1998: The Prescription Only Medicines (Human Use) Amendment Order 1998—reclassification of insulin.

March 1998: The Medicines for Human Use and Medical Devices (Fees and Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations 1998.

May 1998: The Prescription Only Medicines (Human Use) Amendment (no. 2) Order 1998—reclassification of phenolphthalein.

Chiropractors

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Register of Chiropractors to open; and if he will make a statement. [52979]

Ms Jowell: The Department is currently discussing a timetable for the opening of the register with the General [illegible]

Social Services (Worcestershire)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase funding of social services in Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [52733]

Mr. Boateng: We recently announced, as part of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review, that Personal Social Services will receive an additional £2.8 billion over the next three years, an average annual real terms growth of 3.1 per cent. over the period. Details of each local authority's share of these increased resources will be announced later in the year.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will respond to representations made on behalf of people infected with hepatitis C by blood products. [53098]

Mr. Dobson: I have today written to the Haemophilia Society explaining that, after lengthy and very careful consideration, we have concluded that haemophiliacs who have been infected with hepatitis C through National Health Service treatment should not receive special payments.

Government policy is that compensation or other financial help to particular patients or groups of patients is paid out only where the NHS or individuals working in it have been at fault. The needs of people whose condition results from inadvertent harm is met from benefits available to the population in general. On that basis, we have decided not to make an exception to the general rule in the case of haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C.

Whilst the Society makes a special case for haemophiliacs because the infection comes on top of a pre-existing serious long term medical condition, the same considerations apply to other individual patients and groups of patients, whether inadvertently infected with another illness or harmed as a result of another medical or surgical procedure who can obtain compensation only if there has been negligence. The Society also argued that, as Government provides financial help to haemophiliacs infected with HIV, this scheme should be extended to cover people with hepatitis C. However, our view is the circumstances were different: the stigma around HIV at the time the original decision was taken, the fact that it was generally considered a sexually transmitted disease and that haemophiliacs could inadvertently infect their partners were all important considerations which do not apply to hepatitis C.

The Society was particularly concerned that young people were fearful of the possibility of passing on hepatitis C. That is a concern we share. The Department is therefore working with the Society to develop a project aimed at helping young people with haemophilia and related disorders who are infected with hepatitis C to understand their condition and so improve their future health, education and employment prospects. We will help with funding for this project.

In an earlier decision, we have already agreed that

WALES

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52303]

Mr. Ron Davies: The construction industry no longer uses asbestos because safe alternatives are available.

When asbestos has to be removed from a building, the dismantling, removal from site and ensuring the building is free of all asbestos dust, is strictly controlled by Health and Safety Executive regulations.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52578]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Office intends to employ at least 20 subsidised people under the New Deal this year. The number of unsubsidised people employed will depend on the number of applicants from the New Deal programme who are successful in open recruitment competitions.

National Assembly

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many car spaces are planned for the new Welsh Assembly building; to whom these spaces will be made available; and how much they will cost to provide. [53099]

Mr. Ron Davies: The design competition to select an Architect to design the building to house the National Assembly for Wales is taking place at present. A small amount of car parking will be provided for disabled people, but until the design process reaches a more advanced stage, the total number of spaces and the cost of that provision will not be known.

Trunk Road Programme

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the report on the review of the Welsh trunk road programme. [53228]

Mr. Hain: The report "Driving Wales Forward" has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01

Mr. Ron Davies: The following is the information:

1998–99: 1 petrol vehicle

1999–2000: 3 diesel vehicles; 1 other (type of fuel yet to be determined).

2000–01: 3 diesel vehicles.

The information for (b) is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52675]

Mr. Ron Davies: 3.3 per cent. of employees cycle to work. Measures to increase this proportion are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by my Department and its Agencies.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52674]

Mr. Ron Davies: There are 73 secure cycling spaces located at the following premises:

Cathays Park, Cardiff: 59

Carmarthen: 2

Llandrindod Wells: 3

Colwyn Bay: 9.

Selective Assistance

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what cost-per-job limits are set on offers of selective assistance in development areas in Wales. [52974]

Mr. Hain: Information on cost-per-job limits is confidential and cannot be disclosed. Regional Selective Assistance offers are made subject to common guidelines throughout Great Britain.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list those compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997 which would lead to a reduction in compliance costs; [52930]

(2) if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997; [52929]

(3) what is the cumulative net increase in compliance costs resulting from compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52928]

Mr. Ron Davies: No compliance cost assessments have been published by my Department in the period in question.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Counsellors

Mr. Pendle (Mr. Prentice), of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 779, on the Privy Council, if she will publish the text of the oath sworn by privy counsellors. [52790]

Mrs. Beckett: The text of the Privy Counsellors Oath is as follows:

"You do swear by Almighty God to be a true and faithful Servant unto the Queen's Majesty, as one of Her Majesty's Privy Council. You will not know or understand of any manner of thing to be attempted, done, or spoken against Her Majesty's Person, Honour, Crown, or Dignity Royal, but you will lett and withstand the same to the uttermost of your Power, and either cause it to be revealed to Her Majesty Herself, or to such of Her Privy Council as shall advertise Her Majesty of the same. You will, in all things to be moved, treated, and debated in Council, faithfully and truly declare your Mind and Opinion, according to your Heart and Conscience; and will keep secret all Matters committed and revealed unto you, or that shall be treated of secretly in Council. And if any of the said Treaties or Counsels shall touch any of the Counsellors, you will not reveal it unto him, but will keep the same until such time as, by the Consent of Her Majesty, or of the Council, Publication shall be made thereof. You will to your uttermost bear Faith and Allegiance unto the Queen's Majesty; and will assist and defend all Jurisdictions, Pre-eminences, and Authorities, granted to Her Majesty, and annexed to the Crown by Acts of Parliament, or otherwise, against all Foreign Princes, Persons, Prelates, States, or Potentates. And generally in all things you will do as a faithful and true Servant ought to do to Her Majesty.

So help you God".

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under her proposals for reform of the child support system, what the combined loss would be through higher taxes, lower means-tested benefits and higher maintenance of an absent parent with earning of (a) £90 per week, (b) £150 per week and (c) £210 per week with two children from a first relationship and one subsequent child, who is awarded a pay rise of £10 per week, assuming that the proposed working families tax credit has been implemented. [50004]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 10 July 1998]: All children are entitled to the financial and emotional support of both their parents wherever they live. It is not right that so many non-resident parents should seek to avoid paying the maintenance which their children are due. An extra £15 million is being invested in the Child Support Agency this year and next, specifically aimed at increasing the amounts of maintenance which are paid.

The information set out in the table is based on the current provisions for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, which are themselves under review. The impact of the new child support arrangements would, therefore, need to be considered in the light of any proposals for changes to those benefits.

Also, an increase in income will not necessarily result cases would normally fall to be reassessed every two years, with interim changes of circumstance taking effect only if maintenance were to increase or decrease by more than a specified amount, for example, £10 per week.

Changes in income (£ per week)

Gross earnings		Assessable income		Impact on net income (+ = gain, − = loss)
From	To	From	To	No rent	LA rent	PRS rent
£90	£100	158.07	164.25	+2.95	−1.07	−1.07
£150	£160	180.73	183.88	+2.15	+2.15	+0.10
£210	£220	199.00	202.02	+3.02	+3.02	+1.06

Notes:

1. Based on April 1998–99 benefit rates but assumes that the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) taper is 55 per cent. and the threshold is £90
2. The assessable income in the second column is the sum of earnings (after tax and national insurance) and WFTC entitlement and, as with the current scheme, is the amount to be used in the calculation of maintenance under the new child support arrangements. Assessable income for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit also includes WFTC as well as some other forms of income
3. Average Rent is assumed to be £41.70 for local authority cases and £66.40 for Private Rented Sector cases
4. Based on average Council Tax of £11.70 per week
5. Non-resident parent's new child assumed to be 8 years old
6. No child care costs
7. The fall in income includes the effect of increased taxes and employee national insurance; reduced WFTC, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit; and increased maintenance assessments
8. Figures rounded to the nearest penny
9. PRS = Public Rented Sector; LA = Local Authority

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis child maintenance assessments will be reduced for those earning between £100 and £200 per week under the new Child Support Agency system. [53127]

Mr. Denham: Our proposals for a new child support system are set out in the Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" (Cm3992). Where net income is £200 or more a week, maintenance will be assessed at 15 per cent. for one child, 20 per cent. for two children and 25 per cent. for 3 or more children, with allowances for any children in the non-resident parent's second family.

However, we recognise that a simple percentage approach does not adequately reflect the difficulties faced by non-residents parents on very low incomes. Those with a net income of £100 or less would, therefore, pay a flat-rate minimum amount of around £5. Those with net incomes between £100 and £200 a week would pay the flat rate on their first £100 with a percentage deduction from the balance, using a straight linear progression so that at £200 or more the standard deductions are applied to the whole of the income. The sample tables in the Green Paper illustrate the overall effects, which ensure that levels of maintenance payable on income between £100 and £200 will be lower than would apply using the standard deduction rates.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what exceptional circumstances are being considered by the Government in determining which cases [illegible] to the new tribunal under the new Child [illegible]

Mr. Denham: Our Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" (Cm 3992) proposes that, where a non-resident parent is already contributing in some way to the cost of supporting his child, for example by meeting housing costs, he would be able to apply for a lower level of maintenance. Other child-related expenses, such as high costs of maintaining contact, will also be considered. The Green Paper specifically invites views on this aspect of the new scheme. However, there is a balance to be struck between making appropriate allowance for exceptional circumstances and simply re-inventing all the complexities of the current scheme by a different route.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which her Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if she will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if she will produce this list on a regular basis. [51268]

Mr. Denham: The Department is responsible for administering and awarding people's entitlement to a range of Social Security benefits and to child support maintenance. It also makes grants, in the form of subsidies, to local authorities to cover most of the costs of paying and administering the Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit schemes.

The Department is also responsible for making grants to charitable organisations (Motability and the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association) who offer support in terms of adaptations to motor vehicles for disabled persons who are in receipt of qualifying benefits. Grants are also provided to the Independent Living Fund who offer financial assistance to disabled people who wish to live independently in the community.

Benefit Payment Methods

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on progress in respect of the Pathway Project. [52110]

Mr. Denham: At present 204 post offices in the North-East and South-West of England have been automated and are paying Child Benefit by Payment Card as part of a limited trial.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many post offices in Scotland are to be automated for the purpose of social security benefit payments by swipecard under ICL/Pathway; and how many of these post offices have so far been automated. [53116]

Mr. Denham: The project provides for automation of benefit payments by payment card at every post office in the United Kingdom. At present 204 post offices have been automated, none of which is in Scotland.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will (a) provide compensation and (b) take legal action against ICL with reference to delays in [illegible] project to automate social security

Mr. Denham: The Benefits Agency, Post Office Counters Ltd. and ICL Pathway continue to work together to plan the next stages of the programme to automate benefit payments at post offices. Commercial and contractual considerations remain confidential to the parties.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many recipients of the disability living allowance have had the level reduced (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the previous 15 months; how many requested a review; and how many had the benefit restored; [52259]

(2) how many recipients of the disability living allowance have had the allowance withdrawn (a) since 1 May 1997 and (b) in the previous 15 months; how many requested a review; and how many had their disability living allowance restored. [52258]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested but some relevant figures are given in the table.

SERPS

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of administering the contracting out of SERPS in the last year for which figures are available. [52379]

Mr. Denham: The Contributions Agency's (CA) Contracted-Out Employments Group (COEG) administers the arrangements for employees who are contracted out of the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) and is responsible for ensuring that the pension rights of such employees are accurately recorded, maintained and safeguarded. This involves the approval and supervision of contracted-out occupational and appropriate personal pension schemes, dealing with notifications relating to scheme membership, and overseeing the payment of contracted-out rebates.

COEG's administration costs for the 1997–98 year amounted to £10.926m.

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to her Department of funding the contracted out element of SERPS in the last year for which figures are available. [52376]

Mr. Denham: In 1996–97, the last year for which figures are available, the cost of funding the contracted-out element of SERPS was £7.368 billion.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance her Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52310]

Mr. Denham: Following the PRIME initiative which constructions, is provided to the Department by the private sector consortium Trillium, previously known as PPM.

Trillium are contractually obliged to use building materials and consumables that comply with any relevant European or British Standard or Code of Practice and, where reasonably able, to procure them from sources that practise environmentally friendly policies. They must also comply with all UK or European Law and all Statutory requirements.

The agreement with Trillium requires them to bring all existing accommodation up to statutory requirements within 2 years and they have been charged with achieving a very good BREEAM rating for both existing sites and new developments. They must also undertake assessments covering all aspects of the Department's facilities, and sites, to identify significant hazards and risks within the workplace. They will build on and maintain the Department's asbestos register and carry out regular inspections to monitor the condition of asbestos and, when necessary, they will remove it under controlled conditions. Technical Audits will be carried out by the Department's contract management team, with expert consultancy support where appropriate, and if requested Trillium will have to supply evidence to demonstrate their compliance.

Occupational Pensions

Ms Stuart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the number of pensioners who received increased awards from their occupational pension scheme after the point of retirement. [52380]

Mr. Denham: Information is not available to be able

All occupational pension benefits accrued after 6 April 1997, except those deriving from the payment of additional voluntary contributions, must be indexed in line with the Retail Prices Index (RPI), with indexation being capped at 5 per cent. Before that date, the only indexation requirement applied to pensions accrued as a result of contracting-out of the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS) after 5 April 1988. Such pensions had to be indexed in line with RPI, capped at 3 per cent.

However, from 5 April 1978, full indexation was effectively provided within SERPS itself for those who had contracted-out. From 5 April 1988 to 5 April 1997, SERPS provided indexation of the balance above 3 per cent, where the RPI rose above this level.

Numbers of people in the UK entitled under the rules of their scheme to various levels of indexation of pension benefits in payment through private and public sector defined benefit occupational pension schemes

million

Indexation	Private sector	Public Sector
With RPI	0.5	2.8
With RPI up to a maximum of 5 per cent.	1.2	0.1
Other indexation	1.1	0.3
None	0.6	nil
Total	3.4	3.2

Notes:

1. All figures are in millions and have been rounded to the nearest 0.1 million
2. The statistics refer to rights accorded to members and beneficiaries through the scheme rules. However, schemes may choose to award more generous increases on a discretionary basis
3. The indexation levels quoted in the table may be applied by the providers to the whole pension benefit an individual receives or only to pension benefits received which have been accrued in excess of any Guaranteed Minimum Pension (GMP) component. However, if the indexation level is applied to the whole pension, then it must be sufficient to cover any increase in GMP to which a pensioner may be entitled
4. No information is available on indexation arrangements for pension benefits in payment accrued through defined contribution occupational pension schemes, which are converted into annuities

Industrial Injuries

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claimed disablement benefit for (a) vibration white finger and (b) carpal tunnel syndrome in (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996 and (iv) 1997; and how many of these had been employed in the mining industry. [52446]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available. Information is available on the number of claims to Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit made in respect of individual diseases and on the number of initial assessments of disablement in respect of the industry an individual was employed in when the prescribed disease was contracted. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Total number of claims to industrial injuries disablement benefit for all industries

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list for (i) a lone mother with two children aged under 11 years and (ii) a married couple with two children aged under 11 years, gross weekly earnings and net week incomes taking into account child benefit and family credit/working families tax credit, income tax and NICs in January 1998, at (1) 50 per cent., (2) 75 per cent. and (3) 100 per cent. of average (A) female and (B) male manual earnings, assuming (a) the existing tax and benefit systems, (b) that working families tax credit was in place and (c) that the lone mothers had child care costs of £78 a week in each case. [52333]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the tables.

165.00	11.43	11.38	142.19	60.60	0	0	223.54	165.93

Notes:

1. All figures are at 1998–99 prices. (This is consistent with published documents and previous replies to questions on Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC))
2. To reflect the current system as far as possible figures relate to July 1998, so both family types are assumed to receive standard rates of Child Benefit and the family premium in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. Net income therefore includes Child Benefit of £20.75 per week for both family types
3. Gross earnings are based on average full-time manual earnings taken from the April 1997 New Earnings Survey, uprated to July 1998 levels
4. The non-contracted-out rate of National Insurance Contributions is assumed
5. Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit amounts are based on average local authority rent of £45.01 per week and council tax of £9.40 for the lone parent and £12.60 for the married couple
6. 'After housing costs' includes rent, council tax and child care costs, where applicable
7. It is assumed that the earner is working at least 30 hours per week and is therefore entitled to the 30 hour premium in Family Credit/WFTC worth £10.80 per week
8. A number of other changes to the tax and benefit system, as announced in the Budget, will be in place by the time the WFTC is introduced. This means that the amounts above are not the actual amounts that will be received (in 1998 prices) by these family types in October 1999

Optical Fibre Communications

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to develop the potential of modern broad band optical fibre communications within her Department and its agencies; and if she will make a statement. [52327]

Mr. Denham: The Department currently uses a wide range of data and voice communication services to provide links between its staff and their information technology systems. The bulk of these services are provided under contract and are delivered through technology chosen by our service providers. These service providers all utilise broadband optical fibre communication products for part of the current network. We will look to exploit the value of these and other high speed communications products as part of our drive to create a modern welfare service.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people her Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job

Mr. Denham: This Department is finalising guidance on recruitment under the New Deal programme and is committed to offering posts to New Deal clients when suitable opportunities arise. At this stage we cannot estimate how many jobs will be offered during 1998.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much her Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52888]

Mr. Denham: The bulk of the Department's expenditure on IT is accounted for by the Information Technology Services Agency (ITSA) which exists to provide IT services both to DSS and to certain Other Government Departments. ITSA's expenditure on the provision of such services for the 1997/98 financial year was as follows:

Current Expenditure: £337.702m

Capital Expenditure: £17.454m.

Of this expenditure the Department recovered

Additional Departmental IT expenditure for the 1997–98 financial year (not accounted for by ITSA) is as follows:

Current Expenditure: £7.363m

Capital Expenditure: £15.640m.

It is not possible to separately identify money spent on personal computers, main-frame, mini-computers and file servers as expenditure. It is not recorded in this way.

In October 1995 the provision of main-frame services was outsourced to EDS. Since that date, EDS have been responsible for the purchase of main-frame hardware which may be needed to provide a new service, or a change to an existing one.

National Insurance

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on Treasury revenue (a) in 1998–99, and (b) in a full year, of raising the national insurance ceiling to the same level as the higher rate tax band. [52916]

Mr. Denham: Estimated additional revenue of some £1.4 billion would be raised in 1998–99 if the Upper Earnings Limit on employees' Class 1 contributions were increased from its present level to the same level as the higher rate tax band. The additional revenue in a full year would be £1.55 billion.

The figures assume that the current 10 per cent. Class 1 contribution rate would apply to earnings above the present Upper Earnings Limit and that the current Upper Earnings Limit would remain in place for the calculation of employee and employer contracted-out rebates.

Liable Relatives

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, columns 495–96, concerning liable relatives, if she will review the application of Paragraph 4(b) of the Code of Open Government Practice to such cases. [52279]

Mr. Denham: Review of the application of the guidance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 27 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question, pursuant to the answer on 20 July concerning liable relatives, if she will review the application of applying Paragraph 4(b) of the Code of Open Government Practice to such cases.

Whilst the current guidance relating to liable relatives is not wholly available in the public domain, requests for access to information contained within the guidance is always considered on an individual basis and granted where possible. As I explained in my letter of 20 July certain guidance is restricted to minimise the possibility of abuse.

The Benefits Agency (BA) regularly reviews its codes in line [illegible] As part of the ongoing move [illegible] of the "Residual Liable Relatives & Proceedings Guide" and will make appropriate sections available. Until this review has been completed, requests for information will continue to be considered on an individual claim basis.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer, 29 June 1998, Official Report, columns 118–19, concerning the Benefit Integrity Project, when the Chief Executor of the Benefits Agency will be in a position to set out a firm start date for the exercise. [52610]

Mr. Denham: The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 27 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when her Department will start to review the cases of people subject to the Benefit Integrity Project prior to 9 February.

This programme of work will commence on Monday 3 August 1998.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Welfare Reform

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Green Paper on Welfare Reform, what targets he has set for the reduction of working-age people living in workless households; and by what date these targets will be achieved. [52988]

Mr. Denham: The proposals and success measures contained in the Welfare Reform Green Paper "A New Contract for Welfare" are still subject to consultation which concludes on 31 July.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Green Paper on Welfare Reform, what targets he has set for the level of an adequate retirement income over the next 10 years. [53114]

Mr. Denham: A key objective of the Government Pensions Review is to ensure that pensioners should have an adequate income in retirement; that they should share fairly in rising national prosperity, and that public finances should be both sustainable and affordable. The best way to ensure that pensioners have security in retirement is a combination of the basic state pension and a good second pension. We are concerned about those pensioners who will not have access to a decent occupational scheme. That is why we will create a new framework of secure, flexible and value for money Stakeholder Pensions for those who cannot join an employer's occupational scheme, or whose pay is low or intermittent, and for whom personal pensions are usually unsuitable.

The Government have announced a £2.5 billion package of measures to help today's pensioners which will give single pensioners a guaranteed minimum income of not less than £75 a week, and £116.60 for a married couple. In addition we have reduced VAT on fuel to 5 per cent. and have committed £400 million to make Winter Fuel Payments last winter and next. We have also allocated a further £0.5 billion so that from the following winter all eligible pensioner households will get an annual winter fuel payment of £20.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish his Department's review of benefit rules announced in the Green Paper on Fraud. [53112]

Mr. Denham: Reviewing the benefit rules which are most frequently broken will take some months to complete. We will report on our progress in the Government's second annual anti-fraud audit, which will be published next year.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what calculations his Department has made of the estimated (a) maximum and (b) minimum benefit savings from increased (i) prevention and (ii) detection of benefit fraud over the next three years. [53108]

Mr. Denham: Our current estimates have been inherited from the previous administration and are for savings arising from detective activity for the next two years by the Department and by local authorities. These savings are £2.4 billion in 1998–99, and £2.5 billion in 1999–2000.

As we explained in the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future", a key element of our new anti-fraud strategy is the development of better measures of the amount of fraud, and the savings which flow from particular preventive and detective activities. This will, over time, allow us to refine our estimates of future savings as well as to direct anti-fraud resources to where they are most effective.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the code of practice on the use of data and data-matching announced in the Green Paper on Fraud. [53113]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) on 29 June 1998, Official Report, columns 112–13.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the monthly level of fraud involving benefit payment cards; [53129]

(2) if he will make a statement on the timetable for extending the Benefit Payment Card nationally. [53128]

Mr. Denham: The Payment Card is designed to virtually eliminate fraud at the point of encashment. To date there have been no recorded examples of this type of fraud using a Payment Card.

Current plans provide for the automation of post offices nationally to start in the first half of 1999 and to be completed by the end of 2000.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52625]

Mr. Denham: The table shows for the years 1998–99, 1999–2000, 2000–01 the number of cars currently owned by DSS that are expected to be replaced by vehicles in the categories listed in the questions.

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Petrol	220	614	0
Diesel	684	0	507
Other	42	263	273

The 'other' category represents bi-fuelled (Petrol/Liquid Petroleum Gas) vehicles.

The Departmental Transport Officer was "highly commended" and runner-up in the Fleet Environmental Award category at this years Fleet Industry Awards. This recognition demonstrates the commitment the Department has made to greening its fleet operation.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997; [52941]

(2) if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997; [52940]

(3) if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52939]

Mr. Denham: Details of compliance cost assessments (CCAs) published by this Department are contained in Command Papers. Between 1 May 1997 and 31 December 1997 (the last date covered by the eighth such Command Paper—published on 22 April 1998), two compliance cost assessments were published. They both related to what is now the Social Security Act 1998; the estimated net increase in compliance costs set out in these two assessments was between £100,000 and £1 million.

This year to date, two further CCAs have been published (in February 1998) by this Department as follows:

SI 263/98—The Social Security (Contributions and Industrial Injuries) (Canada) Order 1998—minimal compliance costs were off-set by related savings for business.

SI 470/98—The Social Security Benefits Up-rating Order 1998—zero recurring and non-recurring compliance costs, and minimal revenue costs (less than £0.5 million) as a result of adjustment to the Statutory Sick Pay and Statutory Maternity Pay rates.

There is presently no requirement on departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or to result in a saving to business.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what statistics his Department collects relating to social security benefits and expenditure; what is the frequency and timetable for release of these statistics; and what statistics his Department plans to release during the summer adjournment; [52983]

(2) what statistics his Department collects relating to social security benefits, social security expenditure and claimants of social security benefits for Scotland. [52982]

Mr. Denham: Details of the statistical information collected, the frequency and timetable for release, relating to Social Security Benefits, can be found in a publication named "Guide to ASD Statistical Projects Revised May 1998". A copy of this publication can be found in the Library. The information collected covers all areas of Great Britain and can produce analyses for Scotland.

No information is collected on Social Security expenditure for Scotland.

The list contains information on statistical publications that are due to be released during the summer adjournment:

Disabled People

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many organisations (a) he and (b) his Ministers have met that represent wheelchair users in Kent; and if he will list them; [53029]

(2) if he will list the names of the organisations that (a) he and (b) his Ministers have (i) met and (ii) plans to meet in connection with his review of the access to benefits available to disabled people. [53028]

Mr. Denham: Our Green Paper 'New ambitions for our country: A New Contract for Welfare' pledged that those who are disabled should get the support they need to lead a fulfilling life with dignity, free from discrimination. In taking our reforms forward, we have given a clear commitment to consult.

As part of this commitment we have set up a Disability Benefits Forum with organisations of and for disabled people to discuss how disability benefits can be reformed to ensure that they go to those who need them most and that the gateways are clear and robust.

The Forum initially met on 17 June and continue to meet regularly. Membership includes a number of national/ umbrella organisations detailed in a written answer from the then Secretary of State for Social Security, on 17 June 1998, Official Report, columns 243–44, several of which represent wheelchair users.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52660]

Mr. Denham: A full breakdown of the cycling spaces throughout the Department is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. At the last count there were approximately 4,125 spaces in total.

To encourage staff to travel to and from work by bicycle, 20 local Commuting Action Plans are to be put in place throughout the Department from 1 April 1999. We also plan to hold a Departmental "Car Free Day" this autumn.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52661]

Mr. Denham: There is no information available on methods staff employ to travel to work, whether by cycle or any other means.

However, at least 20 local Commuting Action Plans (CAPs) are presently being developed for introduction throughout DSS by March 1999. Each will address the means by which staff travel to and from work and will include proposals for the encouragement of a greater use of bicycles in the areas where CAPs will be introduced.

A further measure to highlight the use of bicycles will be a departmental 'Car Free Day' to be held this Autumn.

Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

Residential Care Allowance

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the (a) costs and (b) benefits of paying residential care allowance to people on income support who enter public sector residential care. [53000]

Mr. Denham: No assessment has been made of either the costs or benefits of paying residential allowance to people on Income Support who enter public sector residential care.

Pensions

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets have been set for the time within which payments of the minimum pension top-up will be made. [53165]

Mr. Denham: The current targets for Income Support, which are reviewed annually, are for 60 per cent. of new claims to be cleared within 5 days, and for 87 per cent. to be cleared within 13 days.

Our new national programme to get extra help to the poorest pensioners help ensure that claims are properly assessed with minimum delay.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the minimum pension guarantee will be uprated in line with (a) earnings and (b) prices. [53167]

Mr. Denham: On 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 703–05, the Government announced that Income Support rates would be increased by three times the normal price uprating, to give the poorest pensioners a guaranteed minimum income of £75 per week, with couples and older pensioners receiving more.

Future uprating of benefit levels will be considered in the normal way.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the minimum pension guarantee will be classed as a benefit or as part of the basic state pension. [53168]

Mr. Denham: The guaranteed minimum income will be a benefit.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral statement of 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 703–05, concerning payment of the minimum pension guarantee to be made within one week of signature of the form, whether eligibility for this payment will be established before the payment is made. [53166]

Mr. Denham: Clearly, eligibility will be established before the payment is made.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the pilot areas for the minimum pension guarantee; how many people are in the target groups for the pilot areas; and what the publication date is for the pilots. [53169]

Mr. Denham: Pilot projects have been running since April in nine areas—East Renfrew, Glasgow, Preston, York, Stroud, South Staffordshire, Torfaen, Torbay and Lambeth. The pilot offices will, between them, be contacting nearly 14,000 pensioners. The results will be evaluated by an independent research company, and we expect to be able to publish the findings early next year.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish his Department's proposals on incapacity benefit reform. [53111]

Mr. Denham: We have given a commitment to fundamentally reform Incapacity Benefit for future claimants. We are examining the scope for a new test which focuses on what people can do as well as what they cannot do, recognising that capacity for work is a continuum. We will bring forward our proposals in due course.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the educational maintenance allowance will be administered by his Department. [53117]

Mr. Denham: Details of the Education Maintenance Allowance pilots are still being developed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment will make an announcement about the pilots in the autumn.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Miss Kirkbride) of 5 June 1998, Official Report, column 402, concerning winter fuel payments, when he expects to provide a precise figure for her Department's actual expenditure on winter fuel payments. [53178]

Mr. Denham: Total expenditure on Winter Fuel Payments during 1997–98 was £190,646,790. The latest information for 1998–99 shows that during April additional expenditure of £1,184,260 was incurred. Further expenditure will be brought to account as any additional or replacement girocheque payments are encashed.

Expenditure is classified as being incurred at the point when payments are made by automated credit transfer into bank or building society accounts, or issued by Payable Order. Expenditure on girocheque payments is incurred following encashment.

DEFENCE

Government Policies

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the projects undertaken by his Department since 1 May 1997 to research public reaction to (a) Government policies and (b) potential new policies; and if he will place the results of the research in the Library. [46681]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 30 June 1998]: Research into public opinion formally commissioned by my Department since 1 May 1997 is set out in the table. This concentrates on Service recruiting issues. In addition, on March 5 this year we published a Green paper, "Defence diversification—getting the most out of defence technology".

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to paragraph 72 of the Strategic Defence Review, Cm. 3999, he will list the current location of the (a) 7.6 tonnes of plutonium, (b) 21.9 tonnes of highly enriched uranium and (c) 15,000 tonnes of other forms of uranium. [51412]

Mr. Spellar: The majority of the holdings of plutonium, highly enriched uranium and other forms of uranium referred to in paragraph 72 of Cm. 3999 are held at various BNFL and Ministry of Defence sites. Smaller quantities are also held on various Defence contractors premises. Additionally, and subsumed in the overall totals of these materials, are the amounts in our nuclear weapons and the reactor cores of our nuclear submarines. To provide further information on locations would be contrary to national defence and security interests and details are being withheld under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph 72 of the Strategic Defence Review, Cm. 3999, what is his Department's definition of weapons grade plutonium. [51413]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence defines weapons grade plutonium as that which contains greater than 92 per cent. of the Plutonium-239 isotope.

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the Future Large Aircraft for use in heavy lift. [51501]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 20 July 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, the Ministry of Defence has received 17 Parliamentary Questions and 7 letters from MPs on the subject of the Future Large Aircraft, FLA. No representations have been received on the use of the FLA in respect of the short term requirement for additional strategic lift as announced in the Strategic Defence Review White Paper. The FLA will not be available in time to meet that requirement but remains a contender for a longer term requirement to replace our current air transport fleet.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the deployment plans for Trident under the Strategic Defence Review include warheads assigned to a sub-strategic role. [52216]

Mr. George Robertson: Yes.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being taken to maintain a minimum capability to design and produce a successor to Trident should this prove necessary; and what the estimated annual cost of this commitment will be. [52165]

Mr. George Robertson: Since Trident should meet our needs well into the next century, there is no work under way to develop a new generation of nuclear weapons. No decisions on any successor system will be needed for several years.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many crews are assigned to each of the four Trident submarines; and if he will make a statement. [52161]

Mr. George Robertson: HMS Victorious and HMS Vigilant each have two crews of 140. HMS Vanguard has a single augmented crew of 200. We plan over time to move to single augmented crews for all our Trident submarines.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place the annual report on the Progress of the Trident Programme in the Library. [52181]

Mr. Spellar: Given the comprehensive nature of the Strategic Defence Review White Paper and supporting essays, we have no plans to produce a separate report on the Progress of the Trident Programme this year.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which Trident would be used. [52178]

Mr. George Robertson: The United Kingdom would consider the use of nuclear weapons only in extreme circumstances of self-defence and in accordance with international law.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Trident submarine in the operational cycle, apart from one on patrol, will be loaded with 48 warheads. [52136]

Mr. George Robertson: All three Trident submarines normally in the operational cycle will have 48 warheads loaded.

Hunter-killer Submarines

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which two hunter-killer submarines are to be retired as a result of the outcome of the Strategic Defence Review. [52182]

Mr. Spellar: As a consequence of the Strategic Defence Review, HMS Splendid and HMS Spartan will be taken out of service earlier than previously planned.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of fitting each nuclear-powered hunter-killer submarine with Tomahawk missiles. [52172]

Mr. George Robertson: The overall cost of procuring Tomahawk for the Royal Navy is some £180m at 1997–98 prices. This includes the procurement of missiles, test and training systems, submarine weapon handling and fire control systems, and provision of a mission planning and targeting facility. In addition, the average cost of fitting out each submarine is estimated to be some £1.4m.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown of AWE running costs for 1997–98 into (a) staff costs, (b) waste management and disposal, (c) research and development, (d) production and dismantlement, (e) construction costs and (f) payments to Hunting-BRAE. [52170]

Mr. Spellar: I would draw my hon. Friend's attention to the Strategic Defence Review White Paper Supporting Essay Five which contains a general breakdown of costs for the nuclear warhead programme for the Financial Year 1997–98. Staff costs and payments to Hunting-BRAE are commercially confidential and I am withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to Third Party commercial confidences.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amount paid in each year since 1993 to Hunting-BRAE Ltd for managing the atomic weapons establishments. [52171]

Mr. Spellar: Payments to Hunting-BRAE are commercially confidential and I am, therefore, withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to Third Party commercial confidences. My hon. Friend will find a general breakdown of costs for the nuclear warhead programme for the Financial Year 1997–98 in the Strategic Defence Review White Paper Supporting Essay Five.

Anglo French Nuclear Co-operation

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Anglo-French nuclear co-operation. [52186]

Mr. Spellar: We continue to maintain close contact with France on defence nuclear matters, including through our Joint Nuclear Commission.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the yields and total amounts in the British stockpile of the WE177 nuclear warhead; [52188]

(2) if he will list the yields, amount deployed per missile and total amount in the British stockpile of the Chevaline nuclear warhead. [52185]

Mr. Spellar: As stated in paragraph 10 of Supporting Essay 5 to the Strategic Defence Review White Paper, each of our Polaris submarines carried 32 Chevaline warheads and, at the end of the Cold War, we had a stockpile of several hundred WE177 free-fall nuclear bombs. Precise details of the total numbers of weapons held and on explosive yields are covered by exemption 1 of the Code of Practice governing access to Government information.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British involvement there is in the US SLBM Warhead Protection Programme. [52177]

Mr. George Robertson: To date British involvement in the US SLBM Warhead Protection programme has been limited to briefings.

US W87 Life Extension Programme

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what British involvement there is in the US W87 Life Extension Programme. [52187]

Mr. Spellar: The UK is not involved in the US W87 Life Extension Programme.

South Korea

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what armaments and of what value have been sold by UK firms to the South Korean Government over the last five years. [52911]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence is currently working with the FCO and the DTI to prepare the Government's first Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. The Report will include details of export licence applications for UK Military List items and details of such equipment exported with annual values. When the Report has been issued I will write to the hon. Member in regard to the information requested for previous years.

Occupational Welfare Service

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the performance of his Department's civilian management (Welfare) unit sections; and how many cases relating to (a) grievance and (b) disciplinary procedure took (i) six and (ii) twelve months or more to reach a conclusion in (1) 1996–97, (2) 1995–96 and (3) 1994–95. [52831]

Mr. Spellar: The performance of the Ministry of Defence Occupational Welfare Service, OWS, is assessed through a range of Performance Targets and Performance Indicators. The key Performance Target is the provision of an efficient service for all Ministry of Defence UK based civilian staff. Performance is assessed and reported on by senior officers within the OWS. As part of this assessment, discussions are held with senior personnel and line managers across the Department. The Performance Indicators relate to response times; these have been consistently met. An Annual Report on the activities of the OWS is sent to all Chief Executives and Senior Managers in the MOD.

Records detailing grievances raised are not kept, as many are resolved locally and at various levels throughout the Department. The number of disciplinary cases which took between six and 12 months were, in 1996–97, 11, and in 1995–96, 21. In 1996–97 there were no cases which took longer than 12 months; in 1995–96 there were two. These cases were among a total of 309 in 1996–97, and 339 in 1995–96. Records for 1994–95 are not available. In all cases the aim was to reach a decision within two months at most, but unfortunately this was not always possible.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52627]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52680]

Mr. Spellar: Cycle facilities, both open and covered exist at a number of Ministry of Defence and Agency sites, but records of the precise number and type are not held centrally. The provision of cycle parking facilities will be considered during the preparation of my Department's Green Transport Plans.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997; [52934]

(2) if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997; [52935]

(3) if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52933]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence is not a regulatory department and rarely places legislation before Parliament which requires compliance cost assessments. As a consequence, no such assessments have been carried out or published by the Ministry of Defence since 1 May 1997.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of DERA within his Department. [52798]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 24 July 1998, Official Report, column 737.

TREASURY

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the reviews his Department initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48523]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 6 July 1998]: Information published on reviews initiated in the years in question in the Chancellors' Departments is:

Inland Revenue

1974–75

Consultations on:

taxation of expenses payments and benefits in kind capital transfer tax wealth tax

oil taxation

1979–80

Consultations on:

taxation of husband and wife

taxation of company profits construction industry tax deduction scheme

Reviews on:

capital taxation

enforcement powers of Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise

1992–93

Consultations on:

income tax treatment of company cars

tax treatment of foreign exchange gains and losses

a simpler system for assessing personal tax surplus advance corporation tax

Customs and Excise

Review on:

administration arrangements for Gaming Machine Licence Duty

HM Treasury

Financial Services Regulation—Making the Two Tier System Work.

Further information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sierra Leone

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if discussions took place between officials and political advisers in his Department and officials and political advisers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in relation to the answer given by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 25 June 1998, Official Report, column 618. [49483]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 8 July 1998]: The normal contacts occurred which would take place when a question concerns an issue which involves more than one Department. No special advisers were involved.

Quangos

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 193, if he will specify the quangos which will be cut, indicating the total sum saved as a consequence. [51460]

Mrs. Liddell: Subject to Parliamentary approval, the Government have decided to abolish the following NDPBs: Cardiff Bay Development Corporation; Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work; Rural Development Commission (to merge with Countryside Commission); County Court Rule Committee; Development Board for Rural Wales; English Partnerships (to merge with Commission for New Towns); Funding Agency for Schools; Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland; Land Authority for Wales; Local Government Property Commission (Scotland); National Disability Council; North Hull Housing Action Trust; Residuary Body for Wales; Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council; Supreme Court Rule Committee; Tai Cymru (Housing for Wales); Advisory Committee on Service Candidates; Central Adjudication Services; Child Support Appeal Tribunals; Commission for Racial Equality (NI); Crime Prevention Agency Board; Disability Appeal Tribunals; Disability Council (NI); Equal Opportunities Commission (NI); Fair Employment Commission (NI); Firearms Consultative Committee; Health and Safety Agency (NI); Medical Appeals Tribunals; Metropolitan Police Committee; Poisons Board; Social Security Appeal Tribunals; Vaccine Damage Tribunals.

At this point in time, the aggregate level of savings is not known.

In addition to this, the following NDPBs have been abolished since 1 May 1997: Advisory Committee for the Joint Environmental Markets Unit; Advisory Committee on Design Quality in the NHS; Advisory Committee on Plant and Machinery; Agricultural Advisory Panel for Wales; Assessment Panel for Construction Research; Citizen's Charter Panel of Advisers; Deregulation Task Force; Local Government Staff Commission (England); National Advisory Council for the Employment of People with Disabilities; National Council for Vocational Qualifications; Northern Ireland Citizen's Charter Advisory Panel; Race Relations Employment Advisory Group; Regional Panels in MAFF (9); School Curriculum and Assessment Authority; Scottish Economic Council; Scottish Seed Potato Development Corporation; Sheffield Development Corporation; Staff Commission for Wales; Supported Employment Advisory Group; Treasure Trove Reviewing Committee; Ulster Folk and Transport Museum (2) (merged with Ulster Museum); Urban Development Corporations (8); Welsh Council for Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education.

Consultation papers were issued on 24 July proposing streamlining of the Department for Culture, Media and Sport's NDPBs to reduce bureaucracy. Decisions will be made following the consultation.

Subsidies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement of 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 191, if he will list the subsidies that he has assessed as no longer justifiable together with the most recent estimate of their cost in the last year. [51509]

Mr. Byers: The Government are reviewing the system of industrial subsidies across Departments to ensure that the taxpayer gets value for money. The largest specific industrial subsidy is support to the agricultural industry which totalled £4.5bn in 1997–98. The Government also played a leading role in negotiating the phased abolition of shipbuilding operating subsidies across Europe by the end of the year 2000: these subsidies cost the UK £10m in the last financial year.

Land Acquisition and Sales

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the dates and circumstances on which consent (a) before the event and (b) retrospectively in the past five years has been sought for land acquisition and sales involving (i) the Welsh Development Agency, (ii) the Scottish Development Agency and (iii) English Partnerships. [51223]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 17 July 1998]: Some of the information that my hon. Friend requires will take considerable time to provide. I will therefore write to my hon. Friend and place copies in the Library of the House. Details of Welsh Development Agency cases will be provided only for the last three years because of the disproportionate cost of providing details before then.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures on the same basis as Tables A1, A2 and A3 in the Comprehensive Spending Review, Cm. 4011, for 1992–93. [51657]

Mrs. Liddell: The figures are not readily available.

International Debt

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by country (a) the amount recovered by the Export Credits Guarantee Department and (b) the amount repaid under aid loans in each year since 1979 by (i) severely indebted low income countries, (ii) moderately indebted low income countries, (iii) severely indebted middle income countries, (iv) moderately indebted middle income countries, (v) Afghanistan, (vi) Cuba, (vii) Gibraltar and (viii) Iraq. [51546]

Mrs. Liddell: Neither ECGD nor DFID maintain their records on a basis that would enable them to provide the breakdown requested back to 1979 without disproportionate cost. I list the cash that ECGD has received in the last two financial years. Figures are in £ millions and are given to two significant figures.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by country the value of the outstanding debts on (a) United Kingdom aid loans and (b) loans guaranteed by the British Government through the Exports Credits Guarantee Department, for each of the countries defined by the World Bank as severely or moderately indebted middle income countries. [51543]

Mrs. Liddell: I list the value of outstanding debts on both UK aid loans and loans guaranteed by the British Government through ECGD, for each of the countries defined by the World Bank as severely or moderately indebted middle income countries. The figures on aid loans are the value of principal and interest outstanding as at end-1997. The figures on ECGD's claims are the total outstanding principal as at end-March 1998. All figures are given to two significant figures.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce tax incentives for the works required by businesses to ensure the millennium compliance of their computer systems; and if he will make a statement. [51811]

Mrs. Liddell: Most expenditure of this kind incurred by businesses is already likely to attract tax relief under current rules. Normally a business will be able to deduct such expenditure in full in calculating trading profits except where the expenditure is capital in nature in which case it qualifies for capital allowances.

Private Finance Initiative

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will extend Tables B14, B15, B16 and B17 in the Budget 98 Red Book to include plans for the next three years; [51761]

(2) what is the total annual allocation for PFI schemes in (a) the current year and (b) the next three years; and if he will list the allocation to each department alongside the figure for capital spending by each department. [51760]

Mrs. Liddell: [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The information on public sector capital expenditure as given in Table B14 of the March 1998 FSBR was updated in Table A5 of the Comprehensive Spending Review—Statistical Annex.

The information in Table B15 of the March 1998 FSBR will not be updated until September.

Table B16 of the March 1998 FSBR still gives the latest figures for estimated payments under PFI contracts.

Table B17 of the March 1998 FSBR sets out figures for General Government sales if fixed assets, debt sales and privatisation proceeds. Projections of disposals of fixed assets by central and local government over the next three years are set out in paragraph 4.2.3 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998.

Debt sales and privatisation proceeds, both of which are classified as financial transactions, lie outside Total Managed Expenditure. Projections of financial transactions over the next three years are set out in table 4.4 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 1998.

Local Authorities (Asset Sales)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out his reasons for his decision to allow local authorities to reinvest most proceeds of asset sales and his reasons for continuing to limit reinvestment of the proceeds of council housing and associated land. [51759]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The Government want to encourage local authorities to sell surplus assets to help pay for new investment. Allowing reinvestment of most of the proceeds of non-housing assets provides authorities with the right incentives to identify and dispose of such assets. However, sales of housing assets mainly arise as a result of tenants exercising the Right to Buy, not because of active asset management by Councils, and produce substantial proceeds which do not accrue in a pattern that reflects need to spend. Because this is a national scheme, we have to have regard to the capacity of the economy and of the construction industry to cope with substantial levels of reinvestment, and to bear in mind the distributional impact. For all these reasons, we will continue to limit reinvestment of new Council housing sale proceeds.

Gas-powered Vehicles

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will allow a write down allowance of 100 per cent. in the first year for fleet operators converting a vehicle to gas power. [51859]

Mrs. Liddell: We already have a number of positive measures in place in the tax system to promote the use of gas powered vehicles. For example, duty on road fuel gases has been frozen in the last two Budgets and the cost of enabling company cars to run on gas is now disregarded when calculating an employee's taxable car benefit. There are no plans to offer enhanced capital allowances for the costs of converting vehicles to gas power.

Motorcycles

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the advantages of exempting commuter motorcycles from vehicle excise duty under the forthcoming review of vehicle excise duty rates. [52024]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 July 1998]: A consultation document containing the options for reforming vehicle excise duty will be published shortly. The Chancellor will make his proposals for vehicle excise duty in the next Budget in the light of this consultation.

Optical Fibre Communication

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to develop the potential of modern broad band optical fibre communications within

(a) his Department, (b) the Inland Revenue and (c) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [52325]

Mrs. Liddell: New technology is adopted whenever it answers a business need and offers value for money.

Pay Negotiations

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 10 July 1998, Official Report, column 669, what assessment he has made of the effect of current headline RPI inflation on wages and salary negotiations. [52548]

Mrs. Liddell: It is up to individual companies to negotiate with their workforce over remuneration and the level of inflation should be only one of a number of factors in any individual settlement. The Government have repeatedly stated the importance of pay in the public and private sectors being related to what the economy can afford.

Retail Trade

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net impact on United Kingdom retail trade if the Commission's option on the successor regime duty and tax-paid sales after 30 June 1999 is adopted. [52521]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: No specific assessment has been made in the form suggested. However, Customs and Excise have been in very close touch with the trade regarding duty frees and the successor regime. In this way, the views of the trade are being taken into account in the Government's consideration of all the options, including the Commission's suggestion for a successor regime.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52302]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: Her Majesty's Treasury is not currently constructing any buildings. Guidance on the use of asbestos is contained in the "Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 1987" and the two approved codes of practice: "Control of Asbestos at Work" and "Work with Asbestos Insulation, Asbestos Coating and Asbestos Insulating Board" produced by the Health and Safety Executive.

Environmental and Sustainable Development

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what efforts he is making to raise the awareness of environmental and sustainable development issues within his Department; and what specific training will be made available to staff. [52374]

Mrs. Liddell: Included in the Treasury's Environmental Strategy is a commitment to maintain publicity campaigns to increase staff awareness of particular environmental issues.

Articles and notices have been run on: recycling schemes and achievements; energy awareness; a "Bag It and Bin It" campaign; and the "Going for Green" campaign. These have been made available to staff via the Accommodation Services bulletin, the in-house staff journal; and by the electronic message system; and to the wider public via the Treasury's website. Copies were circulated to every member of staff of the Government's consultation paper on a revised UK strategy for sustainable development "Opportunities for Change".

Depending on the requirements of their post, most policy staff in the Treasury undertake training in microeconomics. The courses introduce staff to the concept of environmental and other externalities, and the need to take these non-costed effects on board in policy appraisal.

DETR recently circulated guidance to other Government Departments on policy appraisal and the environment. Copies of the DETR guide have been circulated widely to staff in the Chancellor's Departments. A series of seminars have been arranged to make sure the main messages are understood.

Social Landlords

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects of Customs and Excise proposals to limit VAT group relief on the activities of registered social landlords, the rents of their tenants, and housing benefit costs. [52455]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The proposal to restrict eligibility for VAT group treatment to fully taxable companies is currently the subject of a public consultation. Since the consultation period has not ended, no such assessment has been made.

Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the level and value of tobacco smuggling into the United Kingdom. [53093]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The table sets out Customs' most recent estimate of the total revenue (excise duty and VAT) lost to the Exchequer through cross-Channel smuggling of tobacco products in calendar year 1997.

Revenue lost to the Exchequer from smuggling in 1997

£ million

Product type	Revenue lost
Hand-rolling tobacco	540
Cigarettes and other tobacco products	145
Total	690

Note:
Figures have been independently rounded to £5 million. Components may not therefore sum to the totals given

There are no official estimates for the revenue lost through smuggling in freight consignments or by air passengers, and the estimates given do not include any amounts for these types of supply.

The share of UK consumption represented by cross-Channel smuggling is about 1½ per cent. for cigarettes, and about 69½ per cent. for hand-rolling tobacco.

EU Financial Contributions

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the per capita financial (a) contributions and (b) receipts of each EU member state for the last year for which figures are available. [53081]

Mrs. Liddell: 1996 is the latest year for which information about Member States' contributions and receipts is available. The information requested, in respect of that year, is set out in the table. The amounts shown are in European Currency Units, the unit of account for the EC Budget.

Contributions to and receipts from the EC budget in 1996

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the single currency on the CFA franc. [52467]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Government have made no assessment of the impact of the single currency on the CFA franc, which is a matter for member states participating in the euro and, in particular, France.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the state of preparations by businesses and other organisations in the United Kingdom for the implications of EMU. [53549]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government today publish their first six-monthly report on preparations for EMU, "Getting ready for the euro: first report July 1998". Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an announcement on the tax consequences of EMU. [53680]

Mrs. Liddell: The Finance Bill provided a power to make regulations in order to prevent unintended tax consequences arising from the start of the single currency in other member States. Following consultations with business, the Government have identified some technical changes that need to be made in order to achieve this. Details of the proposed changes are being published in an Inland Revenue Press Release today, and we shall make the draft regulations available for consultation in the Autumn.

The Government's proposals will help business and other taxpayers by clarifying before the single currency comes into existence on 1 January 1999 how transactions and contracts involving participating currencies will be treated for tax purposes.

Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government will publish the outcome of the Alcohol and Tobacco Fraud Review. [53548]

Dawn Primarolo: The report is being published today and copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House. HM Customs and Excise will be issuing a press release setting out how the resources made available by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, are to be developed.

Departmental Environmental Policies

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he (a) has taken, and (b) plans to take, to discourage car use by his Department's employees. [52407]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 July 1998]: In line with Government policy, the Treasury has set a target to have Green Transport Plans in place by March 1999. We are currently preparing the first draft of our Green Transport Plan and within this we are taking the opportunity to review our car parking policy.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current energy consumption of his Department; what targets have been set to reduce this level; and what plans there are for including energy efficiency performance figures in his Department's annual report. [52408]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Treasury's energy consumption figures up to and including 1996–97 were incorporated in the Government estate energy efficiency performance tables which were announced by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend for Wallasey (Angela Eagle) to my hon. Friend the Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Etherington) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, columns 529–30. Energy performance figures for 1997–98 are not yet available.

The Department supports the Government's target to achieve a 20 per cent. improvement over 1990 levels by 31 March 2000.

The Department will consider including energy performance figures in its annual report in the light of core requirements.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of his Department's waste is recycled at present; and what targets have been set for increasing this percentage in the future. [52409]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 July 1998]: 11 per cent. of the Treasury's waste was recycled during 1997–98. We are currently revising and updating the Department's Domestic Environment Policy and are considering what targets we can realistically set to increase this percentage of waste we recycle.

Economic Forecasts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the forecast issued on 22 July by the National Institute of Economic and Social Research; and what assessment he has made of the areas in which it diverges from his Department's Economic and Financial Strategy report. [52528]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Treasury regularly monitors a wide range of independent forecasts for the UK economy, none of which we would expect to be identical to our own. In this particular case, the National Institute projections for the economy are not very different from those set out in the Budget and Economic and Fiscal Strategy Reports or indeed the independent consensus. The Institute noted that their forecast showed the Government's fiscal objectives being broadly met.

Competitiveness

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department is taking to improve the competitiveness of United Kingdom firms. [52394]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Government are pursuing long term economic policies which will allow firms to improve their performance and competitiveness over time.

The Government have introduced a wide range of policies since May last year to promote enterprise. These include cutting both the main and small business rates of corporation tax to their lowest ever levels, and the lowest of any major industrialised country.

The Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) introduces new spending plans, including over £1 billion of investment in the UK's science and engineering base.

Together with the President of the Board of Trade the Chancellor is conducting a series of seminars with leading business people addressing the wide productivity gap between Britain and our main competitors. In addition the Government are undertaking a wide ranging review of the UK's R&D performance.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's policy on tax-relieved profit-related pay in relation to (a) the proposed national minimum wage legislation and (b) the existing agricultural minimum wage legislation; and if he will make a statement. [53679]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government accept the Low Pay Commission's recent recommendation that incentive payments—and, in particular, payments of tax-relieved profit-related pay (PRP)—should be included in the earnings that count towards the National Minimum Wage. This represents a significant step towards achieving the Commission's aspiration that the definition of the National Minimum Wage should be "simple and fair". Also, in order to ensure that employers and employees in the agricultural sector are subject to the same PRP rules as employers and employees in other business sectors, the present PRP rule that tax-relieved PRP should not count towards the existing agricultural minimum wage, will be repealed in the Finance Act 1999, with retrospective effect from today. This change will not affect an agricultural worker's right to be paid at least the appropriate agricultural wage—which must not be less than the National Minimum Wage.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52622]

Mrs. Liddell: The number and fuel types of the vehicles which are due for replacement in the years in question are as follows:

	Replacements
Fuel type	1998–99	1999–01	2000–01
(a) Vehicles owned or leased by the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments
Petrol	733	736	739
Diesel	203	204	207
Natural gas	1	3	5
(b) Bodies listed in the National Assets Register
Petrol	4	1	4

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, columns 653–54, concerning the National Asset Register, how the information on the numbers of vehicles was collected. [53038]

Mrs. Liddell: From information provided by the relevant organisations, namely National Savings and the Bank of England.

Employment Service (Privatisation)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the value of the Employment Service if sold to the private sector. [52796]

Mr. Byers: The Government have made no such estimate.

Taxation (Investment Income)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 652, concerning the reclaim of 10 per cent. tax credit, when he expects to conclude his review and announce a decision. [53036]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I shall announce the outcome of my review as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Child Benefit

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what savings he estimates will arise from switching child benefit to the Education Maintenance Allowance for children between the ages of 16 to 18 years. [53123]

Mr. Byers: The details of the Education Maintenance Allowance pilots are being worked up. The Secretary of State for Education and Employment will make an announcement on the pilots in due course.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52672]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury has 60 covered cycle parking spaces in the GOGGS building in Parliament Street and 5 in the satellite office in Allington Towers. Information for the Chancellor's other Departments and agencies is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52673]

Mrs. Liddell: From an analysis of the number of cycles stored in the department's buildings, it appears that approximately 5 per cent. of Treasury employees cycled to work. A more detailed figure could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

Disabled Person's Tax Credit

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the pilot areas for the disabled person's tax credit, the number of people in the target groups and the report date for the disabled person's tax credit pilot schemes. [52998]

Mrs. Liddell: There are no plans to pilot the Disabled Person's Tax Credit before it is introduced in October 1999.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Car Service

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many cars are currently made available from the Government Car Service for the use of the Prime Minister; and how many cars were made available to his predecessor in 1996–97. [52316]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Two secure cars, a Daimler and a back-up car, are made available from the Government Car Service for the use of the Prime Minister.

The same number were made available to his predecessor in 1996–97.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people his Department is committed to employing during this calendar year under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52580]

Mr. Kilfoyle: For the purposes of this question, this department includes the office of the Prime Minister.

The Cabinet Office, including its agencies, is committed to employing five people during this calendar year under the subsidised option of the New Deal Programme. The extent of our participation in the unsubsidised job option depends upon the number of vacancies for jobs which arise.

Public Bodies

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the non-departmental public bodies the Government have (a) established and (b) abolished since 1 May 1997. [52569]

Mr. Kilfoyle [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, the Government have established 25 NDPBs and abolished 39. These are listed. Additional proposals to create NDPBs to deliver the Government's Manifesto commitments, and to abolish further bodies, have also been announced; a number of these will be subject to Parliamentary approval. Ministers will continue to examine all the NDPBs they sponsor with a view to identifying further candidates for abolition.

Pendle Witches

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to open to the public those dungeons at Lancaster Castle, which held the Pendle witches. [52400]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The dungeons which are alleged to have held the Pendle witches are located in that part of the Castle which is let to Lancashire County Council and which is sub-let to the Home Office for use as a prison, although the dungeons are not in use for that purpose. It is not possible to provide access to the dungeons other than through the Prison area.

No. 10 Policy Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the telephone logs relating to the No. 10 Policy Unit would be available for public inspection under the proposals within the Freedom of Information White Paper. [52845]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In considering the disclosure of information, the Government currently apply the provisions of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Second Edition, published on 14 January 1997). Disclosure under our Freedom of Information proposals would depend, as with any such information, on an assessment of the substantial harm and public interest tests that are integral to the access provisions described in the White Paper.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52626]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This answer covers the Prime Minister's Office, the Cabinet Office (including its Agencies), but excludes the Government Car and Despatch Agency, for which I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to reply to the hon. Member direct.

A total of 65 vehicles are leased, of which 17 fall due for replacement during 1998–99. 14 of these will use unleaded petrol and three will use diesel. 44 of the remaining 48 vehicles become due for replacement during 1999–2000, of which six will use unleaded petrol and 38 will use diesel. The replacement of the remaining four vehicles will depend on the success, or otherwise, of a PFI exercise currently under way. Should it prove necessary to replace them, it will be done on a like for like basis. There are no vehicles due for replacement in 2000–01.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated July 1998:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, has asked me in my capacity as Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency to reply to your Parliamentary Question about this Agency's vehicle replacement programme.

As I stated in my letter of 21 July I anticipate replacing a total of 172 vehicles over the next three years.

This Agency has been investigating the use of alternative fuels since 1993. In November 1997 the Prime Minister announced that this Agency would be replacing its car fleet over the next five years with vehicles that can run on both gas and petrol. The figures quoted for gas refer to these bi-fuelled vehicles. Replacement of petrol only fuelled vehicles will continue where there are no gas conversions available for replacement models, or where security or other factors require petrol only fuelled vehicles to be retained.

The Agency has also looked at the use of electric powered vehicles, and worked closely with Ford on the development of its Ecostar van. However, these alternatives are not yet commercially viable.

An exact breakdown of the information you requested is set out in the following table:

Year	Petrol	Diesel	Gas	Electric	Other
1998–99	23	19	20	0	0
1999–2000	9	20	10	0	0
2000–01	26	19	26	0	0

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52669]

Mr. Kilfoyle: For the purposes of this question this Department includes the Office of the Prime Minister. My Department and its agencies do not formally monitor the use of the cycling parking facilities that are available. Consequently, we cannot give an estimate of the number of employees that cycle to work.

Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part for the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its agencies.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52668]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office and its Agencies have a total of 203 cycling spaces in their buildings, broken down as follows:

Buildings	Number
Cabinet Office
Central London Sites	126
Basingstoke	18
Agencies
Civil Service College, Sunningdale	8
PACE
London Office	25
Manchester	6
CCTA
Norwich	20
COI
Central London Office	8 with proposal to increase to 26

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Civil Servants

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants in his Department (a) have a degree in science and (b) have held a position using that expertise. [50897]

Mr. Morley: We do not have the information in precisely the form requested. However, within core MAFF there are approximately 900 staff who have professional/vocational qualifications and are working in posts for which their qualifications are directly relevant, although not all of these will have science degrees. From the remaining 5,900 staff it is not possible to separately identify for statistical purposes those with science degrees who have held relevant posts.

The Executive Agencies are the responsibility of their Chief Executives. I have asked them to reply direct to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the number of civil servants in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate a) who have a degree in science and b) have held a position using that expertise.

There are currently 39 staff in the veterinary and scientific grades, 37 of whom have a degree in science. Of the remaining staff it is not possible to identify separately those with science degrees who have held relevant posts.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question concerning how many civil servants in the Agency have a degree in science and have held a position using that expertise.

There are currently 123 staff in scientific grades and the vast majority of these have relevant degrees. From the remaining 89 staff in other grades it is not possible to identify for statistical purposes those with science degrees who have held relevant posts.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on how many civil servants in his Department (a) have a degree in science and (b) have held a position using that expertise.

In the VLA, there are currently 549 staff in scientific grades and the majority of these have relevant degrees. From the remaining 568 staff in other grades it is not possible to separately identify for statistical purposes those with science degrees who have held relevant posts.

Letter from Dr. V. J. Bye to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

In the absence of the Agency Chief Executive, I am responding to your question to the Minister of Agriculture in relation to the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science Agency (CEFAS). Your question related to the number of civil servants with science degrees.

In the CEFAS Agency at 1 April 1998, of 233 staff in professional grades (mainly scientific and technical), the breakdown is:

a) 181 with a degree in science

b) 127 holding a position directly using that expertise

If you require further information please contact me.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food enquiring about the number of civil servants who have a degree in science and who have held a position using that expertise has been passed to me to respond as regards this Executive Agency.

The MHS is responsible for enforcing meat hygiene, inspection and animal welfare at slaughter legislation in all licensed fresh meat premises in Great Britain. The MHS directly employs 48 veterinary staff, and contracts the services of 156 veterinary staff (on a full time equivalent basis), all of whom have a relevant degree in science and operate as Official Veterinary Surgeons in licensed premises using that expertise.

Letter from Sarah Nason to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply, in respect of the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency (FRCA), to your question about how many civil servants have (a) a degree in science and (b) held a position using that expertise.

In FRCA there are currently 317 staff in professional grades and the vast majority of these have degrees which are relevant to their current positions. For the remaining staff it is not possible to identify separately for statistical purposes those with science degrees who have held relevant posts.

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Dr. Ian Gibson, dated 28 July 1998:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory (CSL), to your question concerning the number of staff who hold a degree in science and have held a position using that expertise.

CSL currently employs 637 staff, 482 staff are employed on scientific work and of these 276 hold relevant degrees. In addition, 29 of the 155 staff employed in support positions hold a science degree and the majority are employed in a capacity that utilises this expertise.

Grants and Awards (Wakefield)

Yvette Cooper: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the grants and awards that require bids from applicants which his Department is responsible for administering and awarding (a) nationally and (b) that people and groups within Wakefield Metropolitan District are eligible to bid for; if he will publish the deadlines for these applications; and if he will produce this list on a regular basis. [51267]

Mr. Morley: The Department administers a wide range of grants and awards for which individuals and groups may apply. Some schemes are open to application from Local Authorities; however, the majority are in support of individual farmers or landowners. The geographical area to which they apply varies according to the objectives of the scheme. Comprehensive information about the Department's national grants and awards for the year ending March 1998 is contained within the 1998 Departmental Report (Cm 3904), copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Organophosphates

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is conducting into the possible link between the use of organophosphates and the spread of BSE; and if he will make a statement. [52108]

Mr. Rooker: The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC) has not found any evidence of a link between BSE and the use of organophosphates. The EU Commission's Scientific Steering Committee reached a similar conclusion in June. SEAC feels that consideration of a role for organophosphates in the epidemiology of BSE is an area where more work could usefully be done, but has not recommended to Government that it should be given priority over other research.

Horses

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to prevent the potential loss of native-breed, semi-feral horse bloodlines; and what plans he has to introduce a compulsory register for all equines. [52101]

Mr. Rooker: The various semi-feral horse breed societies and associations do a lot of valuable work in preserving, maintaining and promoting semi-feral horse breeds. The Government believe the breed societies themselves are best placed to do this work. The Zootechnical Standards Regulations 1992 already exist to protect recognised horse breed societies and their members. The Government have no plans to introduce a compulsory register for all equines.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards exist to prevent the entry of identified TB infected cattle into the human food chain; and if he will make a statement. [52104]

Mr. Rooker: All fresh meat produced in Great Britain which is intended to be sold for human consumption must be produced in licensed premises in accordance with the requirements of the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995. The Regulations, which implement the EC Fresh Meat Directive (64/433/EEC), require, amongst other things, full ante-mortem and post-mortem veterinary checks and health marking of the resulting meat at all stages of production. In Great Britain, veterinary supervision and meat inspection in licensed meat plants is carried out by the Meat Hygiene Service.

Under the Regulations, no animal may be slaughtered for human consumption if, at the ante-mortem health inspection, it shows any clinical signs of any disease which can be transmitted through fresh meat to humans, including tuberculosis. In addition, where it is found at post-mortem inspection that an animal was suffering from generalised tuberculosis or tuberculosis with emaciation, the Regulations require that the whole carcase be rejected as unfit for human consumption. Where only localised lesions of tuberculosis are found, these parts of the carcase must be rejected as unfit for human consumption.

The risk of contracting bovine tuberculosis by eating improperly cooked contaminated meat is considered to be extremely small, and there have been no recorded instances of the transmission of the disease to humans by this route. I am satisfied that these procedures provide appropriate public health safeguards.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52305]

Mr. Morley: The Department issues no guidance to those constructing its buildings on the use of material containing asbestos. Our contractors, however, must guarantee not to use asbestos.

An asbestos register is maintained of our existing buildings and those working on them must take responsibility to comply with all health and safety requirements pertaining to asbestos.

Farming Diversification

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals his Department has to promote diversification in farming. [52118]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 24 July 1998]: Funding to encourage a wide range of agricultural activities, including farm diversification, is available in the six areas designated to receive assistance under the English Objective 5b Structural Fund Programmes. No grant aid for farm diversification is available outside these areas. However, in order to assist farmers in developing successful diversified enterprises, the Ministry has produced a series of advisory booklets on farm diversification.

Hill Farming

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the recent trends in the number of hill farmers. [52114]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The table sets out the number of farmers classified as being in the Less Favoured Area (LFA) of England from 1990 to 1997:

Year	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1990	12,741	3,690	16,431
1991	12,437	3,965	16,402
1992	12,503	4,096	16,599
1993	12,514	4,334	16,848
1994	12,115	4,298	16,413
1995	11,713	4,030	15,743
1996	11,160	3,878	15,038
1997	10,738	3,859	14,597

Over the period 1990–1997 there has been a reduction in the number of full-time farmers and an increase in the number of part-time farmers in the English LFA. This trend is broadly consistent with the overall decline in the number of farmers in agriculture generally. Our aim is to contribute to the well-being of rural communities in upland areas by promoting a viable and sustainable farm sector. We will continue to pursue this aim with appropriate support for hill farmers.

Lobsters

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the success of artificial lobster reefs off (a) Louisiana and (b) Hong Kong in relation to similar proposals by the Harwich Haven Authority; and if he will make a statement; [52481]

(2) what is his assessment of the effects of the dumping of dredging material on the catch rate of lobsters off the North Essex coast; [52483]

(3) what environmental safeguards he will demand to ensure the viability of the lobster fishery off the North Essex coast; [52482]

(4) what is his assessment of the environmental impact of the Harwich Haven Authority's proposals to dump dredging material on the Tails of Rough in the North Sea; and if he will make a statement. [52480]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 22 April 1998, Official Report, column 666.

Although no final decisions have yet been taken on the licence applications, Harwich Haven Authority (HHA) are proposing that the stiff clay and rock materials will be carefully placed to form a bund at the Roughs Tower disposal site and part of that site would then be capped with gravel and rock material to provide suitable reef habitat for lobsters. In considering the design of this reef, Ministry scientists are taking account of the experience gained in a number of artificial reef experiments both in the US and in Hong Kong.

Recognising concerns about the possibility of fine grained material drifting onto adjacent lobster fisheries, HHA, with assistance from Ministry scientists and in consultation with fishermen, have been investigating a new disposal site further offshore. It is the Authority's intention that all dispersible silty material from the Harwich dredging work would be deposited at this site except where other beneficial uses for it are proposed.

It would be a condition of any licence which might be issued that HHA should undertake a rigorous monitoring programme to ensure that there are no adverse impacts of a disposal operation on all aspects of the marine environment including the North Essex lobster fishery. That programme would also study the behaviour of the dredged material and the speed of recruitment of lobsters and crabs to the reef. In addition, HHA have offered to supply additional juvenile lobsters to increase stock on the reef in due course.

Seeds Regulations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the requirements of the Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) Regulations 1982 were not complied with in the matter which was the subject of Regina v Secretary of State for the Environment and MAFF ex parte Watson. [52495]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Regulation 11(3) of the Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) Regulations 1982 (as amended) provides, for certain species, that no application shall be entertained for entry of a variety in a National List unless it is accompanied by the results of replicated trials undertaken in the UK.

The requirement to submit the results of replicated trials was introduced to reduce the volume of National List applications for the common species to a manageable level. Its purpose was to encourage breeders to screen varieties before entering them into the statutory system and to deter them from entering varieties which had little chance of addition to the National List, at a time when the trialling system was overloaded and also heavily subsidised by the tax payer. Some limited use was made of the results of these trials, but only to persuade applicants to withdraw applications with little chance of success. The results of breeders' replicated trials were never used in reaching decisions on whether a variety should be added to the National List.

A fundamental review of the National List trials system was undertaken in 1992, in consultation with plant breeders. Following this, a streamlined system of trials for Value for Cultivation and Use (VCU) was introduced, which reduced the burdens on the trials system. The staged reintroduction of fees for official VCU trials in 1994 and 1995 reinforced these measures.

The requirement to submit the results of replicated trials had no value once the pressure on the system was relieved. It was felt that a requirement to provide information which served no purpose and which was not used placed an unnecessary and unjustifiable burden on applicants. In accordance with the Court of Appeal judgment, I am seeking urgent legal advice on how the position can be resolved speedily and across the board for all plant varieties affected by the judgment.

Pesticides Safety Directorate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Pesticides Safety Directorate. [53599]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Pesticides Safety Directorate were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Veterinary Medicines Directorate

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. [53674]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Meat Hygiene Service

Angela Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Meat Hygiene Service. [53675]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Meat Hygiene Service were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Central Science Laboratory

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Central Science Laboratory. [53676]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that the 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts for the Central Science Laboratory were laid before Parliament today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I should like to congratulate all staff on their achievements during the year.

Livestock Research

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 415, if he will make a statement on the terms of reference of his Department's research into livestock science. [53232]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's research into livestock science aims to assist in creating conditions in which a competitive and sustainable livestock industry can thrive in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those organisations which have contributed financially to his Department's research into livestock science. [53202]

Mr. Rooker: The following organisations have, within the last 5 years, contributed financially to the Department's research into livestock science:

Acorn House Veterinary Surgery
ADAS Consulting Ltd.
Agricultural Research Institute of Northern Ireland
Anglo Beef Producers
Associated British Nutrition Ltd.
British Association of Green Crop Driers Ltd.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52969]

Mr. Morley: There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out Compliance Cost Assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or resulting in a saving to business. However, between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998, the Department has published the following Compliance Cost Assessments or Regulatory Appraisals which show a net reduction in estimated compliance costs:

Potatoes Originating in the Netherlands Regulations 1997

Home Grown Cereal Authority (Rate of Levy) Order 1998

Plastic Materials in Contact With Food Regulations 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52967]

Mr. Morley: For the period 1 May 1997 to 31 December 1997, details of Compliance Cost Assessments or Regulatory Appraisals published by the Department are contained in Command Papers CM 3801 "Compliance Cost Assessments: 1 January 1997 to 30 June 1997" and CM 3938 "Compliance Cost Assessments: 1 July 1997 to 31 December 1997", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

For the period 1 January 1998 to 30 June 1998, Compliance Cost Assessments or Regulatory Appraisals which the Department has published to accompany legislation are as follows:

January

The Beef Carcase (Classification) (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Feeding Stuffs (Amendment) Regulations 1998

February

The Spreadable Fats (Marketing Standards) Amendment Regulations 1998

The Specified Animal Pathogens Order 1998

The Sugar Beet (Research and Education) Order 1998

The CAP (Wine) (Amendment) Regulations 1998—amending The CAP (Wine) Regulations 1996 (The Principal Regulations)

March

The Beef Labelling (Enforcement) Regulations 1998

The Cattle Identification Regulations 1998

April

The Fertilisers (Mammalian Meat and Bone Meal) Regulations 1998

The Medicines (Exemptions for Merchants in Veterinary Drugs) Order 1998

The Feeding Stuffs (Establishments and Intermediaries) Regulations 1998

The Plant Breeders Rights (Fees) Regulations 1998

The Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) (Fees) (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Plant Breeders Rights (Information and Notices) (Extension to European Plant Variety Rights) Regulations 1998

The Plant Breeders Rights (Information Notices) Regulations 1998

The Bovines and Bovine Products (Trade) Regulations 1998

The Implementation of Council Directive 96/51/EC Amending Directive 70/524/EEC Concerning Additives in Feeding Stuffs. This Regulatory Appraisal was prepared for the parent Directive for the four Statutory Instruments listed below:

The Medicines (Sale or Supply) (Miscellaneous Provisions) Amendment Regulations 1998

The Medicated Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1998

The Feeding Stuffs (Zootechnical Products) Regulations 1998

The Medicated Feeding Stuffs and The Feeding Stuffs (Zootechnical Products) (Consequential Provisions) Regulations 1998

May

The Action Programme for Nitrate Vulnerable Zones (England and Wales) Regulations 1998

The Razor Shells, Trough Shells and Carpet Shells (Specified Sea Area) (Prohibition of Fishing) Order 1998

The Welfare of Livestock (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Home Grown Cereals Authority (Rate of Levy) Order 1998

June

The Food Labelling (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Seeds (Fees) (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Plastic Materials and Articles in Contact with Food Regulations 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52968]

Mr. Morley: The cumulative net increase in compliance costs estimated in compliance cost assessments or regulatory appraisals published alongside new regulations made by the Department between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 is £280 million, of which £55 million are non-recurring costs. £40 million of the possible recurring costs could result from certain products having to be withdrawn from sale but are likely to be largely offset by increased sales of alternative agrochemical products.

Bankrupt Farmers

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers were declared bankrupt in each of the last five financial years. [53174]

Mr. Morley: Data for the 1997–98 financial year are not yet available. The table sets out calendar year data.

Number of bankruptcies in the agricultural and horticultural sectors England and Wales 1993–1997

Year	Bankruptcies of self-employed individuals	Company[1] insolvencies	Total
1993	277	157	434
1994	231	166	397
1995	218	99	317
1996	168	89	257
1997	155	51	206

Flooding (Peterborough)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the responsibilities of statutory authorities to take action to (a) prevent and (b) give earlier warning of the risk of flooding within the area of the City of Peterborough. [52984]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency is the lead flood defence operating authority in England and Wales and has powers to undertake flood defences on designated Main Rivers, which include the River Nene. On non-main rivers, flood defence powers rest with local authorities or, in areas of special drainage need, with internal drainage boards.

The responsibility for disseminating flood warnings in England and Wales rests with the Environment Agency.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52670]

Mr. Morley: The Department and the Agencies are made up of more than 200 separate sites and this information is not readily available. The position at the Ministry's principal headquarters sites is as follows:

Ministry building	Number of spaces
Eastbury House, Albert Embankment, London	8
Nobel House/Ergon House, Smith Square, London	41
Whitehall Place and 55 Whitehall, London	20 plus secure space (not racks) for another 20
Epsom Road, Guildford	30
Hook Rise South, Tolworth	30
Kings Pool, York	210
Total	339 (+20)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52671]

Mr. Morley: This information is not readily available. Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for buildings occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries excluded from the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996. [53198]

Mr. Rooker: The countries exempted from regulation 3(1) of the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996 are Argentina, Australia, Botswana, Brazil, Mauritius, Namibia, New Zealand, Paraguay, Poland, South Africa, Swaziland, Uruguay, United States of America and Zimbabwe.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 29 July 1998

PRIME MINISTER

Royal Household

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister what plans the Government have for funding the procurement of communication and information services for the Royal Household. [53933]

The Prime Minister: The cost of communication and information services in connection with official Royal functions and engagements which are currently the responsibility of the Central Office of Information will be met from funds provided to the Royal Household by way of grant-in-aid from the Central Office of Information Vote.

This change, which involves no increase in public expenditure, will bring the treatment of these costs into line with that of property services and travel. With this change, the Royal Household will assume financial control to match operational responsibility, with the continuing aim of achieving best value for money from this public money. Parliamentary accountability will follow the pattern of the existing grants-in-aid payable to the Royal Household, and there will be an annual report to Parliament.

Security Commission

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the membership of the Security Commission. [53934]

The Prime Minister: I have recently appointed Sir John Foley and Sir Clive Whitmore to serve as members of the Security Commission. They have succeeded Sir Derek Boorman and Sir Christopher Curwen.

The current membership of the Commission is:

The right hon. the Lord Lloyd of Berwick (Chairman)

The right hon. Lady Justice Butler-Sloss DBE (Alternative Chairman)

Sir John Blelloch KCB

Sir John Foley KCB OBE MC

Lord Tombs of Brailes

Sir Clive Whitmore GCB CVO

Lord Wright of Richmond.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the cost of all research undertaken by her Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by her officials; and if she will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52704]

Mrs. Beckett: No research has been commissioned by my Department since May 1997.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Department

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what was the net cost of running the Refreshment Department outlets in the Palace of Westminster; and if he will list the major items of capital expenditure in 1997–98. [53026]

Mr. Dennis Turner: This information will be given in the Annual Report from the House of Commons Commission and in the Refreshment Department's Trading Account for 1997–98, neither of which has yet been published. I shall ensure that copies of both documents are sent to my hon. Friend as soon as they are available.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

New Settlements (Traffic)

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the traffic generating effects of smaller new settlements. [52264]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has not yet commissioned research on the travel effects of smaller new settlements. The Department needs first to investigate the factors determining location decisions and how these in turn affect travel decisions in order to determine the travel generating characteristics of different patterns, types and scale of development. We hope to commission research in the next year.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52306]

Mr. Meacher: The Department has published guidance on asbestos, "Asbestos Materials in Buildings", available from the Stationery Office.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the number of council-owned properties in the London Borough of Wandsworth that have been empty for (a) over three months, (b) over six months and (c) over one year; and if he will make a statement. [52287]

Mr. Raynsford: Details of the number of vacant council dwellings on 1 April, by reason for vacancy and time vacant are collected from local authorities for the annual Housing Investment Programme exercise. Wandsworth's 1997 return reported a total of 134 dwellings vacant for over 6 weeks and up to 6 months, 46 vacant for over 6 months and up to one year and 37 vacant for over year. The data collected do not separately identify dwellings vacant for over 3 months.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52587]

Mr. Meacher: Within my Department, some ten posts have so far been identified as suitable for young people under the job option (whether subsidised or unsubsidised) of the New Deal programme. We aim to fill as many of these posts as possible through the programme, subject to suitable candidates being found.

Railways

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will ensure that adequate investment in new rolling stock is promised by rail operators before extending rail franchises; [52519]

(2) what targets he will lay down for rail operators to meet before rail franchises are extended. [52518]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 28 October 1997, Official Report, column 806, and the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 786. The early re-negotiation or extension of franchises will be considered only where train operators offer improved investment and services and more demanding performance standards on a basis that provides value for public money. Cases will be considered on their merits against these objectives.

Bus Companies

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives he has taken to encourage public-private partnerships between bus companies and local authorities. [52520]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The further development of bus Quality Partnerships between local authorities and operators is an important part of the proposals announced in New Deal for transport. We will introduce legislation to put such partnerships on a firmer footing by giving them a statutory basis. They will also form part of the new local transport plans to be drawn up by local authorities as described in the White Paper.

Quarry Sites

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the provisions of the Environment Act 1995 covering the reactivation of dormant and active quarry sites to provide greater protection for (a) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (b) sites of special interest and (c) other environmentally sensitive locations; and if he will make a statement. [52322]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans to amend the Environment Act 1995. The powers in Schedule 13 to the Act to review old mineral permissions and ensure that they are brought up to date with modern operating and restoration conditions are generally working well.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many quarry sites for which mining permission has been approved since the implementation of Schedule 13 of the Environment Act 1995 are (a) wholly and (b) partly within (i) sites of special scientific interest and (ii) areas of outstanding natural beauty. [52321]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many dormant quarry sites have been reactivated since the implementation of Schedule 13 to the Environment Act 1995. [52320]

Mr. Raynsford: According to information prepared by the Planning Officers' Society, there are 879 dormant sites in England and Wales. As at January 1997, 61 of these have had new conditions determined by mineral planning authorities, who are responsible for conducting minerals reviews under Schedule 13 to the 1995 Act. Dormant quarry sites cannot be re-activated until full modern conditions have been approved by the relevant mineral planning authority.

Traffic Diversions (Disruption)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions under what circumstances compensation is payable to residents of properties on local authority roads who suffer disruption as a result of traffic diversions resulting from the temporary closure of nearby trunk roads. [52373]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There is no liability for loss of damage caused by the lawful exercise of statutory powers unless the statute provides a remedy or there has been some negligence by the authority in the way they have carried out their functions.

Brown Land

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the area of brown land in the (a) Dudley, (b) Sandwell, (c) Birmingham, (d) Wolverhampton, (e) Solihull and (f) Walsall local authorities. [52436]

Mr. Caborn: There is no specific definition of 'brown land', but it is usually taken to mean land previously developed for urban uses. This includes vacant previously developed and derelict land. Estimates of the amount of derelict land in each English local authority district were published in 'Survey of Derelict Land in England 1993', a copy of which is in the Library. Phase 1 of the National Land Use Database, for which I announced plans on 19 May, will provide information on previously developed vacant and derelict land, and vacant buildings which may be available for development, for local authorities in England. Summary results are expected by March 1999.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the standard spending assessments for 1997–98 and 1998–99, (b) the standard spending assessments for 1997–98 and 1998–99 as they would have been had the Elliot report on area cost adjustment been implemented and (c) the difference between these two figures expressed in (i) percentage, (ii) cash and (iii) pounds per head terms for (1) Buckinghamshire County Council, (2) Aylesbury Vale District Council, (3) Chiltern District Council, (4) South Buckinghamshire District Council, (5) Wycombe District Council and (6) Thames Valley Police Authority. [52633]

Ms Armstrong: The information requested is in tables that have been placed in the Library. They show the effects of re-calculating the standard spending assessments for 1997–98 and 1998–99 using the method of calculating the area cost adjustment proposed by the 1996 Review of the Area Cost Adjustment but keeping the indicators of need used in the current SSA formulae.

Mine Works (Pollution)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to assess the risks of pollution from waste flowing from old mine works. [52375]

Mr. Meacher: Contaminated minewaters from abandoned coal mines are dealt with by the Coal Authority under a prioritised programme agreed with the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency. The Authority spent £3 million in 1997–98 in tackling water pollution from abandoned coal mines, and this is anticipated to rise to £3.9 million in 1998–99. The Authority has undertaken detailed feasibility studies on 21 of the most environmentally significant overflows from abandoned mines, and works are in place or nearing completion at a number of these sites.

In addition, the Agency is continuing to operate the treatment plant at the Wheal Jane tin mine in Cornwall, having spent £9.5 million since 1990 on research and treatment. The Agency is also continuing to monitor the situation at the recently abandoned South Crofty tin mine in Cornwall, carrying out further work to predict the timing of any outbreak, the likely quality of the minewater discharge and the appropriate treatment options. Similar monitoring is being undertaken by the Agency at the recently abandoned Whittle coal mine in Northumberland.

Local Agenda 21 Initiatives

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what support his Department (a) is giving and (b) plans to give to Local Agenda 21 initiatives (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000, (iii) 2000–01 and (iv) 2001–02. [52424]

Mr. Meacher: DETR's main role in the Local Agenda 21 process is to provide advice and encouragement to local authorities. In this capacity, during 1998–99 it is supporting the following, specific projects:

- Providing a telephone helpdesk and introductory guide for local authorities on the Eco-management and audit scheme (LA-EMAS)—£39,100.
- Supporting the collection and publication of best practice Local Agenda 21 case studies—£15,600.
- A seminar to consult on a menu of indicators of sustainable development for local use—£20,000.
- Contributing towards the cost of producing Sustainable local communities for the 21st century which provides guidance to local authorities on why and how to prepare an effective Local Agenda 21 strategy—£2,600.

In addition, through Government Offices, DETR supports a range of regional projects, events and seminars to promote Local Agenda 21, expenditure on which is estimated to be £55,000 during 1998–99.

At this stage, it is not possible to provide details of spending in future years.

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Local Agenda 21 initiatives include allotment groups. [52425]

Mr. Meacher: This information is not collected centrally.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce his decisions on the applications for Transport and Works Act Orders for (a) Stratford International Station and (b) the Channel Tunnel Rail Link connection to the West Coast Main Line. [52593]

Ms Glenda Jackson: These proposed works are the subject of a single application, for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (Stratford Station and Subsidiary Works) Order. The Inspector's report following the public local inquiry into this Order is being considered by the Secretary of State. A decision will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide a breakdown of the £3 billion benefits identified in A New Deal for Transport from the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [52592]

Ms Glenda Jackson: It is anticipated that the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) will provide £3 billion NPV of benefits to the UK comprising (with some overlaps between categories):

- £1,800 million from time savings to UK resident Eurostar passengers;
- £600 million from domestic services on the CTRL;
- £120 million of environmental and decongestion benefits;
- £1,000 million representing the regeneration programmes which would be required to deliver the same regeneration benefits as the CTRL.

Disabled People (Transport)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the provisions in the Transport White Paper which will assist disabled people to be able to use public transport over the next 12 months. [52872]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The White Paper sets the framework to promote better transport choice for disabled people. Measures include implementation of the transport provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act, starting with the rail regulations which will apply accessibility requirements to rolling stock coming into service from 31 December 1998. Dates for implementation of the regulations requiring buses, coaches and licensed taxis to be accessible to disabled people will be set in the light of recent consultation.

Looking beyond the next 12 months, the new local transport plans will specifically address accessibility issues and the new Strategic Rail Authority will have a specific duty to promote the provision of accessible transport for disabled people.

Land-fill Tax Credits

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to make available unused land-fill tax credits for environmental enhancement purposes. [52823]

Mr. Meacher: The Government have no power to compel landfill operators to make contributions to the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme. However, many have taken advantage of the tax credits available. £85.5 million has been contributed to date to fund schemes that provide clear environmental benefits including research into waste management, land reclamation and the provision of public amenity areas such as parks. HM Customs and Excise, together with other departments, are currently considering whether the scheme could be further improved, and in particular whether it could be amended to bring recycling within its scope.

Waste Management

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria his Department uses to evaluate the environmental and waste management activity of local authorities. [52822]

Mr. Meacher: My Department does not systematically evaluate the waste management performance of individual local authorities. Different waste management choices will make environmental sense in different local authority areas, depending on geography and local markets.

Information and statistics on local authority waste management are available in "Municipal Waste Management 1995–96", published by my Department last year; data on 1996–97 are due to be published shortly.

The consultation paper "Less waste: more value" explains our view that there is a case for individual local authorities or regions to be given an indication of the contribution towards national targets that the Government expect from them, taking into account their geographical circumstances. We are also considering what performance indicators on waste management should be prescribed under the new Best Value regime for local authority services, to support local accountability.

Brownfield Sites

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what changes he is considering which will expedite the planning permission system for developers who wish to build on brownfield sites. [52825]

Mr. Raynsford: Current planning policy guidance already encourages the re-use of previously developed (or brown field) sites. The Government are currently revising Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 (Housing) to reflect the higher target for building new homes on previously-developed land announced in Planning for the Communities of the Future, published in February. We hope to issue a draft PPG3 for consultation later this year.

The Government are also helping local authorities and developers through their preparation of a national land use database which will for the first time produce a comprehensive picture of previously-developed land. The Government have also set up the Urban Task Force which will provide guidance on how local authorities can make better and more innovative use of such land. In addition, the Government are currently considering what role economic instruments might play in helping to bring forward more previously used land for development.

Whales

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he supports the US proposal for establishing mandatory ship reporting systems to reduce ship strikes on endangered large whales; and if he will make a statement. [52826]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The United States proposals were discussed at the International Maritime Organisation's 44th session of its Safety of Navigation Sub-Committee (NAV 44) from 20–24 July, where they received the full backing of the United Kingdom Delegation. We believe that the proposed mandatory ship-reporting systems off the eastern coast of the United States will make a positive contribution to reducing the number of ship strikes on right whales. We will support the formal adoption of the systems at the IMO's Maritime Safety Committee in December.

Public Houses

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the appeal decisions for each of the last two years where the local planning authority has refused planning permission for a change of use of shop unit into a public house and the inspector has upheld the refusal. [52280]

Mr. Raynsford: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Chris Shepley to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 29 July 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about appeal decisions where the local planning authority has refused planning permission for a change of use of a shop unit into a public house and the Inspector has upheld the refusal.

I enclose details of 17 planning appeals which were dismissed in 1996–97, and 38 which were dismissed in 1997–98. I believe this is an exhaustive list. The list includes all cases of a change of use to a public house, not only those from a shop unit. It may also contain some appeals against the failure of the local planning authority to determine the application within the time limit.

Should you require copies of the Inspector's decision letters for any appeal, please contact Colin Stevens (Room 1208 at the above address) directly and he will arrange for them to be sent to you. From these you will be able to see whether the Inspector agreed or disagreed with any reasons for refusal by the local authority.

Taxis (Smoking)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce further measures to allow licensed taxi drivers to exclude passengers who wish to smoke from their vehicles. [53581]

Ms Glenda Jackson: When Parliamentary time permits, we intend to propose a change in the law to enable licensed taxi drivers to designate their vehicles as "no-smoking cabs", thereby relieving them of the obligation to carry passengers who insist on smoking.

Overhead Power Lines

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations (a) he, (b) his Ministers and (c) his officials have had with (i) the Secretary of State for Health, (ii) health ministers and (iii) officials from the Department of Health, concerning the possible carcinogenic effects of overhead power lines. [53136]

Mr. Meacher: The Secretaries of State and Ministers of both Departments are aware of public interest in this area through correspondence and questions raised in the House. Officials from DETR and other Government Departments with a direct interest meet regularly with the national Radiological Protection Board to review information and consider developments regarding non-ionising radiation, including the alleged carcinogenic effects of overhead power lines.

An investigation into electromagnetic fields and childhood cancer is being funded by the Department of Health and forms part of the United Kingdom Childhood Cancer Study. When the results of this study are published, the Secretary of State for Health will consult colleagues as appropriate.

The current consensus view is that in normal domestic circumstances there is no quantifiable risk to health from electromagnetic field from power lines or sub-stations.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue planning guidance notes to local authorities to advise against building homes underneath overhead power cables and next to pylons; and if he will make a statement. [53135]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 19 June 1998, Official Report, column 331, which explained that the Government intend, later this year, to issue a draft circular for consultation on development in proximity to electromagnetic fields. This would include the health and safety aspects of overhead power lines.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52693]

Mr. Raynsford: The provision for DETR research spend in 1997/98 and the planned spend for 1998/99 were published in March in 'DETR Opportunities for Research and Development', which is available on the DETR Website. A summary is given in the table. Records on all research contractors are not currently kept centrally. This information is now being collected with a view to publishing it in the next edition of 'DETR Opportunities for Research and Development'. I will arrange for this information to be sent to the hon. Gentleman when it is ready.

Private Hire Vehicles

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he will take to ensure that the provisions allowing private hire operators to subcontract services to operators licensed outside London are not used to introduce lower standards than those which apply in London. [52197]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The matter will be considered as necessary in the light of circumstances as indicated by Public Carriage Office's monitoring.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria the Public Carriage Office will use when it monitors the use of subcontracting by London's private hire industry. [52198]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The matter will be considered as part of the implementation arrangements for the legislation on London minicab regulation.

Federal Aviation Administration

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has made to the US Government concerning the delays by the Federal Aviation Administration in processing applications by United Kingdom companies for FAA approval. [53012]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None.

Concessionary Fares (Pensioners)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to introduce concessionary bus fares for pensioners. [53579]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Most local authorities do already offer concessionary travel schemes for pensioners. Our White Paper "A New Deal for Transport" (Cm3950) said that we will introduce a national minimum standard for local authority concessionary fares schemes for elderly people, with a maximum £5 per year charge for a pass entitling the holder to travel at half fare on buses. The necessary legislation will be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to bring forward reforms to the Mobile Homes Act 1983; and if he will make a statement. [53570]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Taunton (Jackie Ballard) on 6 May 1998, Official Report, column 389 and to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 17 June 1998, Official Report, column 204.

M25, Spelthorne

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the proposal to widen the M25 in the Spelthorne constituency. [53218]

Dr. Reid: We plan to make an announcement on the outcome of the Roads Review before the Recess.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the current planning controls on the erection of telecommunications masts. [53841]

Mr. Caborn: We have received a number of representations from local authorities, from industry and from the working group which has been considering the effectiveness of my Department's Code of Best Practice for telecommunications prior approval procedures.

After careful consideration, I have concluded that the use of permitted development rights continues to be appropriate for this type of development but that there is scope for improving procedures in order to address a number of concerns.

In doing this, we aim to strike the right balance between facilitating a competitive national telecommunications network and protecting our environment. I have today published a consultation paper on proposals for changes to the control of development by licensed telecommunications operators under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library.

The main change proposed is a new two-stage procedure for ground-based masts erected under permitted development rights, to allow time for greater public consultation over their siting and appearance. This will give the public a clear opportunity to comment upon the installation of a mast in sensitive cases where such development would impact upon their amenity. We also propose to increase the protection currently afforded to Sites of Special Scientific Interest in this context by making telecommunications development in these areas subject to similar constraints as already apply in areas such as National Parks and Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. This would include development such as the installation of masts and antennas being made subject to a full planning application in SSSIs.

Planning (Sport and Recreation)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to revise Planning Guidance Note 17 on Sport and Recreation. [53940]

Mr. Caborn: My Department will shortly be publishing a research report which examines the Effectiveness of Planning Policy Guidance on Sport and Recreation. The findings and recommendations in that research point clearly towards the need to revise PPG17. We agree. The PPG, which dates from September 1991, urgently needs to be brought up to date, not least to take account of the Government's sustainable development objectives. Work on a revision will therefore start later in the Summer, and I hope that a draft revised PPG17 will be issued for public consultation around the turn of the year.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to appoint chairs for the boards of the proposed regional development agencies; and if he will make a statement. [53941]

Mr. Caborn: Formal appointments to the boards of the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) cannot be made until the Regional Development Agencies Bill, currently before Parliament, has received Royal Assent. However, we propose to engage a chairman designate for each RDA on an advisory basis prior to Royal Assent to assist in preparations for the establishment of the RDAs.

Our choices are as follows:

Eastern RDA: Vincent Watts—Vice Chancellor of the University of East Anglia

East Midlands RDA: Derek Mapp—Formerly Chairman of Tom Cobleigh plc. Currently part-time Executive Chairman of Leapfrog Day Nurseries

North East RDA: John Bridge—Chief Executive of the Northern Development Company

North West RDA: Lord Thomas of Macclesfield—Formerly Managing Director of the Co-operative Bank and founding Chairman of the North West Partnership

South East RDA Ltd: Allan Willett—Chairman and founder of Willett International South West RDA: Sir Michael Lickiss—Chairman of Edexcel Foundation (previously BTEC)

West Midlands RDA: Alex Stephenson—Managing Director of Rover Group Power Train

Yorkshire and Humber RDA: Graham Hall—Chief Executive of Yorkshire Electricity Group plc.

There was a strong list of candidates in each region and we were able to appoint people of the highest calibre to lead each RDA. Candidates for chairman of each RDA were sought from a wide range of sources, including a public advertisement, nominations from regional and national stakeholders, and details of people who had previously expressed an interest in public service. Independent assessors were involved both in the short listing process and in interviews. All appointments have been made on merit and in accordance with guidance issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

There will also be a development agency in London. The creation of the London Development Agency will take account of the new arrangements for the government of London including the way that appointments are made.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what performance targets he has set the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre Executive Agency for 1998–99. [54062]

Mr. Raynsford: The Agency's principal financial target for 1998–99 is to achieve a minimum contribution to the Exchequer of £963,000.

Operational targets have been set to increase occupancy of the Churchill Auditorium to 190 days; the Fleming Room to 210 days; and the Mountbatten Room to 165 days.

The Agency is also being required to achieve additional room hire revenue from banqueting of £75,000, and has the following key customer service targets to meet:

1. An overall score for quality of service from client questionnaires of at least 78 per cent.
2. 98 per cent of clients to report that they would use the centre again.
3. The number of complaints received to be less than 4 per 100 events.
4. An average response time when answering complaints of less than 4 working days.
5. An overall score for quality of service by catering staff of at least 88 per cent.

Non-domestic Rating

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for legislation on valuation for non-domestic rating; and if he will make a statement. [54063]

Ms Armstrong: In its decision dated 11 March 1998 in the case of Benjamin v Anston Properties, the Lands Tribunal decided that, in valuing a property for non-domestic rating purposes, it cannot be assumed that the property is in a reasonable state of repair if, on the material day, it is not. This decision runs counter to the approach adopted for compiling and maintaining rating lists under the Local Government Finance Act 1988. The Government therefore propose to introduce legislation as soon as Parliamentary time allows to reverse the effect of the Lands Tribunal decision.

It is intended that this legislation will have effect from 1 April 1990, when the first rating lists under the 1988 Act were compiled. However, outstanding cases in which the proposal for reduction in the rateable value was made on or before 11 March 1998, will not be affected.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government will undertake public consultation on the review of legislation relating to the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. [54134]

Mr. Meacher: I announced on 8 April 1998, Official Report, columns 306–07, that we would review the legislation relating to the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, with a view to identifying any barriers preventing the Agencies from taking an integrated approach to the environment. We are issuing the relevant consultation paper today, copies of which have been placed in the Library. We are sending it to a wide range of bodies, and publishing it on the Internet.

Countryside and Rural Programmes

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out his spending plans for the countryside and rural programmes of his Department following the Comprehensive Spending Review. [54135]

Mr. Meacher: The review of countryside and rural policy, conducted jointly by my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has concluded that there is a strong case for Government intervention to support rural communities, protect the landscape and wildlife resources of the countryside, and promote access to and enjoyment of the countryside. This Government want to see a living, working and sustainable countryside, and are determined both to increase resources towards meeting these objectives, and to improve the co-ordination and delivery of countryside and rural programmes in the future.

Support for individual DETR agencies or programmes will be as follows:

English Nature's allocation will rise from £38.5 million in 1998–99 to £44.6 million in 1999–2000. This will allow the agency to continue and develop its nature conservation work, deliver obligations under the EU Birds and Habitats Directives, improve the management of Sites of Special Scientific Interest, and accelerate the implementation of the Biodiversity Action Plan's species and habitats plans. We have asked English Nature to assist its smaller voluntary partners to play a full part in the Biodiversity Action Plan process.

The merged agency to be formed on 1 April 1999 from the Rural Development Commission and the Countryside Commission will receive an increase of £8.68 million in 1999–2000. This will give the agency an effective start by strengthening its work protecting and conserving the natural landscape, supporting rural communities, and promoting access to and enjoyment of the countryside, and will also provide for pilot projects. Part will be used for necessary restructuring costs.

The National parks and Broads Authority grant will increase from £17.412 million in 1998–99 to £19.277 million in 1999–2000.

Support for the National Forest Company will increase from £2.5 million in 1998–99 to £3.1 million in 1999–2000, to help meet its planting targets, increase the resources available for partnership formation and bidding, and begin to develop the tourism potential of the Forest.

Funding for DETR's countryside research will grow from £1.527 million in 1998–99 to £1.727 million in 1999–2000, and countryside publicity from £0.257 million in 1998–99 to £0.317 million in 1999–2000.

In addition to increasing resources, we also intend to improve the delivery and co-ordination of programmes for the countryside. The Regional Development Agencies, which will begin operation in April next year, will be responsible for developing an integrated approach to economic development and regeneration in rural areas, in a way that contributes to sustainable development. At the centre, DETR and MAFF already work closely together in many ways, but there is room for improvement in the way the Government deliver rural policy in an integrated way. Together with the decision already taken to merge the Rural Development and the Countryside Commissions from 1 April 1999, we will be taking forward steps to improve co-ordination of the countryside programmes across the two Departments, to ensure that our countryside and rural policy objectives are fully met.

Further decisions on the level of resources for the following two years will be announced in 1999, in the light of the joint financial planning to be developed by DETR and MAFF.

Sewage Treatment and Disposal

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to publish his response to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee's report on Sewage Treatment and Disposal, HC 266-I of Session 1997–98. [54147]

Mr. Meacher: I will be laying before the House tomorrow the Government's formal response to the Second Report of the Environmental, Transport and Regional Affairs Select Committee on Sewage Treatment and Disposal tomorrow. Copies will be placed in both Libraries of the House.

Within days of taking office, we called a Water Summit to signal our intention to ensure a world-class, water efficient, environmentally sustainable water industry. We remain firmly committed to that goal. We welcomed the publication of the Select Committee's report as an important contribution to the debate.

Within our broad objective, the Government's response to the Select Committee will set out significant elements of our approach to the quality of the water environment. Our approach will strike a balance between the need for and value of environmental improvements by the water industry and the need to protect consumers from large increases in their water bills as a result of those improvements.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Disability Council

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the National Disability Council will report on its activities during the 1997–98 financial year. [54064]

Ms Hodge: I am pleased to announce that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid the National Disability Council's third annual report before Parliament. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries.

The Council has worked very hard during the year on an impressive array of initiatives and to develop proposals for a code of practice on improved rights of access to goods and services for disabled people. These new rights will be introduced in October 1999. The Council, therefore, has another busy year ahead as it consults on and refines the proposals. I look forward to continuing to work with the Council on this and on other initiatives to help end discrimination against disabled people.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects the report of the quinquennial review of the Equal Opportunities Commission to be published; and if he will make a statement. [52504]

Ms Hodge: We expect to publish the report immediately after the summer adjournment.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that all year 11 pupils receive information on appropriate post-16 providers who operate courses in their immediate locality. [52809]

Mr. Mudie: To improve the current system of providing information on post-16 learning opportunities, the Government have proposed that careers services, in their role as independent broker, are best placed to take responsibility for ensuring that all young people in years 10 and 11 have access to the full range of information at times, and in ways, appropriate to their needs. To do this, careers services would need to work closely with local schools, colleges and other training providers and arrangements for the provision of this information would be agreed locally.

Design

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many full-time students in higher education are currently enrolled on design-related courses; and how many there were (a) five and (b) 10 years ago. [52291]

Mr. Mudie: The available information is given in the table:

Full-time students[1] on courses of design studies

Further Education Colleges (Hampshire)

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding has been allocated to further education colleges in Hampshire in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [52189]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 24 July 1998]: Funding has been allocated to further education colleges in Hampshire for academic years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 as follows:

£000

Year	Amount
1996–97	112,116
1997–98	109,956
1998–99	110,381

Training

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements are in place to harmonise legal requirements between New Deal trainees and those being trained with TEC or private sector funding separately identifying those relating to health and safety measures. [52342]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The contracts which the Employment Service has entered into with all organisations delivering New Deal set out the obligations of New Deal providers, including their statutory obligations. The contract places a duty of care on the provider requiring that Health and Safety requirements are met. Fulfilment of these responsibilities will be evaluated by ES together with other aspects of contract compliance; with these arrangements in place there is not a current need to harmonise regulation with that operated by TECs and other training providers.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the New Deal partnerships which expressed an interest in leading a pilot for the New Deal for over 25 year olds; and what percentage of these has been invited to submit a full proposal for a pilot in their area. [52778]

Mr. Andrew Smith: 73 partnerships expressed an interest in leading a New Deal 25+ partnership pilot. The following 43 partnerships have been shortlisted for around 20 pilots:

Argyle and the Islands
Ayrshire
Bexley and Greenwich
Birmingham
Bolton
Bradford
Brighton
Bristol and South Gloucester
Camden and North Islington
Cardiff and the Vale
Cornwall
Coventry

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security Service

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide further information about files held by the Security Service; and if he will make a statement. [54146]

Mr. Straw: During an adjournment debate in this House on 25 February 1998, Official Report, columns 341–48, I undertook to make an announcement, before the summer recess, on the subject of the Security Service's file holdings and on the Service's file destruction programme. I now fulfil that commitment. I do so having consulted the Director General of the Security Service, and having been advised by him that the information which I shall be revealing for the first time today may be disclosed without detriment to the requirements of national security or to the operational effectiveness of the Service.

The Security Service currently holds in total about 440,000 files which have been opened at some time since its establishment in 1909. Of these, approximately 35,000 files relate to Service administration, policy and staff. A further 40,000 concern subjects and organisations studied by the Service. About 75,000 files relate to people or groups of people who have never been investigated by the Service, such as those who have received protective security advice. This leaves about 290,000 files relating to individuals who, at some time during the last 90 years, may have been the subject of Security Service inquiry or investigation. Of this 290,000, some 40,000 have been reduced to microfilm and placed in a restricted category to which Security Service staff have access only for specific research purposes. A further 230,000 files are closed so that Security Service officers may use them where necessary in the course of their current work, but may not make inquiries about the subjects of the files.

It will be apparent that only a small proportion of the Security Service's file holdings relate to individuals who may be under current investigation by the Service. The number of files which fall within that category is around 20,000. Of that number, about one third relate to foreign nationals—typically, members or associates of foreign intelligence services or terrorist groups. This leaves in the order of 13,000 active files on United Kingdom citizens. To place it in context, this compares with about 5.7 million records on individuals on the Police National Computer. It represents about 3/100ths of one per cent. of the current adult population, and only a tiny proportion of the 13,000 are likely ever to be under close investigation at any one time.

Of those 13,000 files, more than half are for individuals who have come to the Service's attention in a terrorist related context, while the remainder relate to the Service's other fields of investigation, such as espionage, proliferation and serious crime. A proportion of these files are for individuals who are co-operating with the Service against these threats to national security. Following the collapse of Soviet Communism and the decline in the threat from subversive groups, the Service scaled down its counter-subversion work over a number of years to the point where it is no longer running any investigations in the field of subversion.

Detailed criteria govern the opening of files on individuals and organisations. These criteria specify the circumstances in which opening a file and initiating inquiries are justified within the terms of the Service's statutory functions. They are kept under continual review and are formally checked on an annual basis for currency, relevance and propriety.

It has long been the policy of the Security Service to review its file holdings and to destroy those files which it no longer requires for operational purposes and which do not merit retention on grounds of historical interest. In the period between its formation in 1909 and the early 1970s, the Service destroyed well over 175,000 files. The destruction programme was then halted in response to concern that it had impeded investigations into espionage cases. In the early 1990s, following the collapse of Soviet communism and the associated decline in the threat from subversion, the review and destruction programme was reinstated. Since then, more than 110,000 files have been destroyed or have been earmarked for destruction.

In reviewing files for destruction, the Service takes account of their operational value, their historical significance, and the Service's obligation to retain certain categories of records against the possibility of a complaint to the Security Service Tribunal. With these criteria in mind, the Security Service continues to review its holdings of closed files for destruction and will continue to destroy files which no longer need to be retained on those grounds. The rate of review and destruction is dependent upon the resources which the Service can afford to spare for the task.

I have said that the Service takes account of the likely historical significance of each file before sending it for destruction. It is a matter of interest to professional historians, writers and journalists that records which might be of real historical value should be kept for posterity. It might, therefore, be helpful if I explain how that process is governed.

The Security Service, as with Government Departments, is subject to the Public Records Act 1958. This Act, among other things, regulates policy on the selection of files for preservation. In common with many other Departments, the Service has drawn up guidance to govern this process and this has been approved by the Public Record Office. I published the criteria applied by the Service in response to a Question from the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis), on 20 January 1998, Official Report, columns 519–20. The Service also takes advice from the Public Record Office on the retention, preservation and release of historical records.

The operations of the Public Record Office are, in turn, scrutinised by the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Council on Public Records, chaired by the Master of the Rolls. There are three eminent historians on the Advisory Council and others with an academic or professional interest in 20th century records, including a Professor of Politics and Mr. Andreas Whittam Smith, former founding editor of The Independent newspaper.

Panel of Historians

Earlier this year, in response to a question from the Public Administration Committee, I said that I was looking at whether there was a need for a panel of historians to advise the Security Service on the retention of its files for historical reasons. With the agreement of my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and the Director General, I have asked the Advisory Council specially to review the criteria which the Service currently apply in determining whether files which they would otherwise destroy should be kept on grounds of historical interest. The Council has agreed to carry out such a review, and I am grateful to the Chairman for accepting the invitation. The Council will welcome submissions from those with an interest in the subject. Representation should be submitted, in writing, to the Advisory Council at the following address:

Correspondence should be received by 30 September. The Council will aim to report by the end of the year.

Release of Security Service files into the public domain

The Security Service is fully committed to a policy of releasing as much material of historical significance as it can. But in determining which files may safely be released, there are important considerations which the Service will always have to take into account. These include: the need to protect sensitive investigative techniques; to protect information supplied in confidence by agents and liaison services; and to bear in mind the potential impact of release on those individuals concerned and their families. The Service's current programme of reviewing its early records of historical interest has already resulted in the release of almost all the surviving material covering the years 1909–1919. The Service is now actively reviewing its more extensive stock of records from World War Two, but, as with the review for destruction, this process will continue to depend upon the resources available for the task.

I am aware, however, that the Intelligence and Security Committee has, itself, been reviewing these issues and may have more to say about the subject in its Annual Report. I look forward with great interest to seeing what they have to say.

Booklet

Finally, I am pleased to announce that the Security Service is, today, publishing the third edition of the booklet which describes the Service and its work. The booklet is even more informative than its predecessors. This reflects our policy of making available as much information about the Service as we sensibly can, without undermining the effectiveness of its operations or risking the safety of its staff or its agents.

I have arranged for copies of the booklet to be placed in the Library.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make additional appointments to the Metropolitan Police Committee. [54138]

Mr. Straw: I have today appointed the following as members of the Metropolitan Police Committee:

Councillor Lincoln Beswick (Labour, Brent)

Councillor Toby Harris (Labour, Haringey)

Councillor Barbara Hughes (Labour, Camden)

Councillor Tim Joiner (Conservative, Westminster)

Councillor Serge Lourie (Liberal Democrat, Richmond upon Thames)

Councillor Maggie Mansell (Labour, Croydon)

Councillor Derek Sawyer (Labour, Islington)

Councillor Michael Slaughter (Conservative, Bexley)

Councillor Ala Uddin (Labour, Tower Hamlets)

Councillor Ron Gee (Independent, Epsom & Ewell).

They will join the eleven existing members, who are Sir John Quinton, who will remain Chair, Miss Maria Callaghan, Mr. Thomas Chan, Councillor Maurice Heaster (Conservative, Wandsworth), Major General Malcolm Hunt, Councillor Margaret O'Neill (Labour, Bexley), Mrs. Shahwar Sadeque, Mr. Mark Souhami, Mr. Inder Uppal, Mr. Reginald Watts and Ms Rachel Whittaker.

Nine of the new members were nominated by the Association of Local Government, in response to my request for nominations reflecting the current make-up of London Boroughs. The tenth is the representative of the Outer London Metropolitan Police Group.

The new members will take up their appointments on 1 September 1998. The Committee's task will continue to be to advise me in relation to the discharge of certain of my functions as police authority for the Metropolitan Police. The functions in question are based on those which, outside London, are the responsibility of the police authorities established under the Police Act 1964, as amended by the Police Act 1996.

In particular, I look to the Committee to prepare for the Metropolitan Police Authority which we intend to establish as part of our proposals for a Mayor and Assembly for London.

The next couple of years bring new challenges, with the Crime and Disorder Bill, efficiency plans and the preparation for the Metropolitan Police Authority. The whole Committee has much to contribute on these and other key issues.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the funding of the transitional arrangements necessary to enable those parts of the Metropolitan Police District not within the Greater London boundary to be transferred to neighbouring police force areas in April 2000. [53213]

Mr. Michael: The changes to the Metropolitan Police District boundaries are expected to come into effect in April 2000. It is likely that transitional costs in transferring those areas not within the boundary of the proposed Greater London Authority to other forces will fall in the financial year 1999–2000. It is too early to give an accurate estimate of the size of such costs but they will be taken into account when considering the needs of the police areas affected.

Fire Safety

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 April 1998, Official Report, column 255, about the Fire Precautions (Workplace) Regulations 1997, when he expects to issue a consultation document on the Government's proposals for the amendments; and if he will make a statement. [54140]

Mr. George Howarth: As I explained on 8 April, the European Commission has expressed some concern about our implementation of the fire safety aspects of the European Framework Directive (89/391/EEC). We expect to be in a position to publish a consultative document on our proposals for amendments, to allay the Commission's concerns, in early August. Copies of the document will be available to hon. Members through the usual sources. However, as the House will be in recess at the time of publication, my hon. Friend and others may like to know that copies may also be had, free of charge, from Christians Limited, whose details are as follows:

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the provision of secure accommodation for juveniles. [54141]

Mr. Straw: The Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] will provide courts with more appropriate custodial remand and sentencing powers to deal with the most serious and persistent young offenders. To complement these changes, the Government have undertaken a review of all forms of secure accommodation for young offenders and young people held on remand. The Government believe that present arrangements for the provision and management of secure accommodation are inefficient and incoherent and are in need of reform. The review of juvenile secure accommodation was completed at the end of March and the Government have decided now on a programme of further work to be undertaken, a summary of which has been placed in the Library.

The main focus of this further work involves extending the role of the new Youth Justice Board for England and Wales, expected to be in place by October this year. The Crime and Disorder Bill already provides for the Youth Justice Board to advise on the setting of standards for secure accommodation for remanded and sentenced juveniles and to monitor the delivery of those standards. The Government have decided in principle to extend this role to include the commissioning and purchasing of secure accommodation for juveniles on remand and under sentence. This additional function will enable the Youth Justice Board to provide a much-needed central focus for the delivery of high quality secure facilities for remanded and sentenced young people. Subject to the outcome of further detailed work, the Government envisage that it should be possible for the Youth Justice Board to take on the function of commissioning and purchasing secure accommodation by April 2000. This will involve making an order under clause 42 (6) of the Crime and Disorder Bill.

A priority for immediate action is to improve the standard of care and quality of regimes in accommodation currently used for those remanded and sentenced as juveniles. Ninety per cent. of these young people are held in Prison Service accommodation. The Prison Service is already working on the development of new regime standards for juveniles and is planning to pilot improved regimes in two establishments, Werrington and Huntercombe Young Offender Institutions. Proposals to help achieve greater separation of juveniles from adult prisoners are also being taken forward. This work will pave the way for the introduction of the detention and training order, contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill, which will involve a programme of improved education and training to tackle offending behaviour, undertaken partly in custody and partly in the community.

The Government plan to set out their detailed proposals on the future role of the Youth Justice Board in respect of secure accommodation early next year.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to make further appointments to the Police Complaints Authority. [54142]

Mr. Straw: I have decided to appoint Mr. Ian Bynoe and Miss Mehmuda Mian as Members of the Authority.

Mr. Bynoe has most recently been engaged in research work commissioned by the Institute for Public Policy Research. He was previously Legal Director of MIND (The National Association for Mental Health). He will take up his post on 3 August.

Miss Mian was until recently a senior caseworker in the Solicitors Practice Unit of the Office for Supervision of Solicitors. She will take up her post in the autumn.

Their appointments, which are initially for three years, bring to 13 the number of Members of the Authority, including the Chairman and Deputy Chairman.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 21 July 1998, Official Report, columns 914–28 on crime prevention, how much will be spent on the extension of closed circuit television in each of the next three years. [52522]

Mr. Michael: Further announcements on how the £250 million crime reduction strategy will operate will be made in the autumn.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52314]

Mr. Straw: In each building contract that the Home Office enters, the contractor warrants that asbestos will not be used in constructing the works.

CS Spray

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the numbers of incidents when CS spray has been used by the police force in Gloucestershire for the most recent five years for which records are available; [51391]

(2) what representations he has received on the potential dangers posed by CS spray; [51393]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the police use of CS spray. [51394]

Mr. Michael: Since 1 January 1996, there have been 46 Parliamentary Questions about police use of CS spray, and the Home Office has received 55 letters from hon. Members on the subject. Since 1 April 1997, 69 letters on the subject have been received from members of the public.

CS sprays have been discharged by Gloucestershire police officers in 138 incidents since its introduction there on 14 April 1997.

In December 1996, the Home Office Police Research Group published an assessment of police operational trials of CS spray. The trials involved 16 forces and took place between March and August 1996.

In October 1997, my right hon. Friend reviewed the available evidence relating to the use of CS spray by the police and confirmed our support for its use. During operational trials, it was found that CS typically took effect within five seconds. We have no doubt that, in many cases, its use has not only prevented injury to police officers and members of the public but prevented any injury to the person who would otherwise have been subject to physical restraint.

Violence in Families

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will evaluate the cost to his Department arising from violence within families; and if he will make a statement. [52440]

Mr. Straw: The way in which statistics are held centrally does not readily allow a comprehensive estimate of these costs.

However, a report by Professor Elizabeth Stanko (Brunel University) and others, "Counting the costs: estimating the impact of domestic violence in the London Borough of Hackney", has recently been published by Crime Concern. This estimates the total cost in 1996 to the public sector of providing services for women and children facing domestic violence in Hackney at around £90 per annum per household. This report estimates the total cost for Greater London to be around £278 million per annum.

I have placed a copy of this report in the Library.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52585]

Mr. Straw: My Department is actively considering proposals for recruiting under the New Deal scheme and expects to sign up formally to participation as a New Deal Employer by autumn 1998.

The Home Office will act as an employer for the subsidised employment option and will aim to recruit approximately two to three per cent. of new intakes into appointments suitable for New Deal participants. Those seeking employment through the New Deal unsubsidised option may apply through open competition for posts in the Home Department. Selection will be made on the basis of merit alone.

Crime Prevention (North-west)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effects of the extra £250 million investment on crime prevention in (a) the North West and (b) Chorley. [52458]

Mr. Straw: The crime reduction strategy which I announced on 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 913, is designed to produce long term benefits in reducing offending as well as having a more immediate impact on certain kinds of crime, such as burglary. I shall make further announcements in the autumn on how the crime reduction strategy will operate.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will estimate the impact on the number of police officers on the beat of the creation of a North West regional police force; [52459]

(2) what assessment he has made of the savings and efficiencies which will be created through the development of a North West regional police force based on the RDA. [52460]

Mr. Michael: We have no proposals to create regional police forces in England and Wales, and consequently have made no assessment of the effects of doing so.

It is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers on the beat within available resources. We are working with the police to ensure that the resources which the Government make available to them are used as efficiently as possible, with the emphasis on outputs and outcomes rather than on inputs.

British Board of Film Censors

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the annual report 1997–98 of the British Board of Film Censors to be published. [53266]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend expects to receive the 1997–98 Annual Report from the British Board of Film Classification and to lay it before Parliament by the end of this week.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review staffing levels at the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. [52506]

Mr. Michael: Staffing and other resources required for the operation of the 1990 scheme under the aegis of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and of the tariff-based scheme by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA) are reviewed regularly, as shown in CICA's business plans. Copies of the plan for 1998–99 should shortly be available in the Library.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeal cases against decisions of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are pending; and what assessment he has made of the total capacity of the Board to process decisions annually. [52505]

Mr. Michael: The Board advises that there are currently some 16,800 appeals and other hearings cases pending under the 1990 scheme. The plan for clearing such cases at an annual rate of 10,000 was set against the overall target for this year of clearing over 90,000 claims under both the 1990 scheme and the new, tariff-based one (effective for claims made on or after 1 April 1996). That will result in payments of over £200 million, thereby giving victims of violent crime a high degree of priority in the allocation of finite resources.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the withholding of benefit payable by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board where a complainant appeals against a reduction; and if he will make a statement. [52507]

Mr. Michael: I have no plans to review the withholding of an award in these circumstances. The position under the schemes is that a claimant has no title to any award offered until he accepts it in full and final settlement. Where he appeals, any earlier decision falls; the case must be examined completely afresh and a new decision made upon it. That may be a full award, a reduced award, or no award at all.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52616]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 28 July 1998]: It is not possible to make accurate predictions two or three years in advance, as each case is considered on merit at the time of replacement. Factors such as fitness for purpose, expected rate of use, location, available funds, technical developments, fuel cost etc. are taken into account.

Our best estimate is that like for like replacements will continue until further technical developments take place in alternative power sources.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52686]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The Home Office Central London estate provides 41 secure spaces for parking bicycles. The formal facilities include:

- the provision of a bicycle shed in one car park where bicycles can be chained to metal loops
- the provision in another car park of spaces where bicycles can be chained to a metal frame secured to the ground by concrete
- spaces in a basement storage room.

Generally, there is some provision for parking bicycles for most offices and sites throughout the rest of the Home Office estate (including those occupied by the Agencies). However, details of these are not available centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52687]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My Department has no record of the mode of transport used by its staff to travel to work.

Existing measures to encourage the use of cycling to work include the provision of secure cycle parking, showers, and interest free loans for bicycle purchase.

Measures to increase the proportion of employees cycling to work are being considered as part of the development of green transport plans for building occupied by the Department and its Agencies.

Bedfordshire Police

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish the numbers and rank of (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff employed in the administration support units of Bedfordshire Police Force. [52658]

Mr. Michael: I understand from the Chief Constable that there are 66 civilian staff employed in the Administration Support Units of the Bedfordshire Police. No police officers are deployed to these units. The Bedfordshire Police is restructuring its Criminal Justice Department, which will include the provision of new IT systems. These changes are likely to reduce the number of civilian staff employed in Administration Support Units.

Custody (Girls)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many girls aged under 18 years from Wales were sentenced to custody in each year since 1992. [53256]

Ms Quin: The available information relates to the number of girls aged under 18 years sentenced to immediate custody in Welsh courts and is given in the table.

Number of girls aged under 18 years sentenced to immediate custody[1] at all courts for all offences, Wales, 1992–96

	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Total sentenced immediate custody[1]	11	4	9	15	10
Detained under S53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933[2]	—	2	—	1	4

[1] Sentenced to imprisonment at a Young Offender Institution

[2] Detainees may be held either in Prison Service establishments or in local authority secure or open community homes or Department of Health Youth Treatment Centres. The youngest detainees are automatically held outside Prison Service establishments

Juries

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he is proposing to the way juries (a) in serious fraud and (b) in other cases are compiled and appointed; and if he will make a statement. [52858]

Mr. Michael: We are currently considering the responses to the recent consultation exercise on the use of juries in serious fraud trials. We will consider the issue further in the light of the responses.

New Voting Systems

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action his Department is taking to increase public awareness of the new electoral systems which will be used in (a) European Parliament elections and (b) elections for the Scottish Parliament and Welsh Assembly; [52824]

(2) what budget he has allocated for informing the public of new voting systems to be used for (a) the European Parliament elections and (b) the elections to the Scottish Parliament and Welsh Assembly; [52828]

(3) how much his Department will be spending in informing and educating the public on the new electoral system to be used for the European elections. [53683]

Mr. George Howarth: No budget has been allocated for informing the public of the new electoral system for European Parliamentary elections.

The Government are supporting the efforts of the Institute of Citizenship and the London office of the European Parliament and others to publicise the new electoral system.

Publicity arrangements for elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales respectively.

Women's Prison, Ashford

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to submit a formal planning application to build a Women's Prison at Woodthorpe Road, Ashford (Middlesex). [53214]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service is aiming to submit a formal planning application to Spelthorne Borough Council during August.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many England supporters were (a) arrested, (b) detained and (c) removed from France by the French authorities during the World Cup. [51995]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The latest information that we have available is as follows:

Arrests in France during the World Cup: 275

Given custodial sentences: 20

Expelled from France during the World Cup: 14

Refused entry to France during the World Cup: 363

Awaiting trial or on bail for offences committed during the World Cup: 11.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women have been sentenced to imprisonment in England and Wales in each of the last five years for offences relating to (i) physical abuse of children, (ii) sexual abuse towards children, (iii) manslaughter of a child and (iv) murder of a child under the age of five years. [52089]

Mr. Michael: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in Table A. It should be noted that it is not possible to identify all violent (including sexual) offences where the victim is aged 16 years or under.

Table B provides information taken from the Homicide Index.

Fire Stations

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Surrey County Council's application for permission to close Staines and Sunbury-on-Thames fire stations and replace them with a single new fire station based in the Spelthorne constituency. [53216]

Mr. George Howarth: Surrey County Council has applied for approval, under section 19(4) of the Fire Services Act 1947, to the above change in fire cover arrangements. In considering such an application, my right hon. Friend grants approval only where he is satisfied that the fire authority has consulted as appropriate and that the national standards of fire cover will be maintained. The County Council's application, and the representations that we have received, are being carefully considered in consultation with her Majesty's Fire Service Inspectorate.

Voting System Commission

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he expects to announce the conclusions of the Independent Commission on the Voting System. [53181]

Mr. George Howarth: I understand from the Commission that they hope to complete their work at the end of October. Their report will be published very shortly thereafter.

Mr. Peter Bleach

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions Mr. Peter Bleach met officials of Her Majesty's Government and its agencies in relation to the issue of arms exports; and on what dates and where. [51878]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Mr. Bleach was interviewed by officers of North Yorkshire Police at his home address on 14 September, 22 September and 8 December 1995 about an alleged illegal shipment of arms. I understand that he also met officials at the London office of the Defence Export Services Organisation of the Ministry of Defence in late 1994 regarding the supply of helicopters to Bangladesh. This led to subsequent meetings with the British Defence Attaché in Dhaka.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the refurbishment of A and B wings at Wandsworth Prison; and when this work is planned to be completed. [52786]

Ms Quin: Wandsworth prison's A and B wings were decommissioned shortly before 1 April 1996 because they did not meet the stipulation that all prisoners from 1 April 1996 must have 24 hour access to sanitation. A refurbishment and modernisation programme for the wings (covering integral sanitation, cell doors/windows, roofs, electrics, heating, health and safety, security measures, food services and prisoner and staff facilities) is nearing completion. The programme has encountered construction and labour difficulties which have necessitated programme revisions. Replanning the work and extending working hours has enabled acceleration of the works to be achieved. Work to A wing is now due to finish this week with occupation in September; B wing is now programmed to finish in early October in time to meet the planned programme of occupation in late October or early November.

Norwich Prison

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to (a) receive and (b) publish the report on the suicides of prisoners at Norwich Prison. [52763]

Ms Quin: The area manager has received a copy of the review of suicide awareness procedures at Norwich prison following the recent sequence of self-inflicted deaths at the establishment, as he commissioned that review. This is an internal review which is confidential. The current Prison Service policy is that internal reviews or reports are not disclosed. This policy is currently being reviewed but any change will not apply retrospectively.

Police (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many outstanding cases of racial discrimination brought against police forces are awaiting a hearing by industrial tribunals; how many in each case were brought by (a) officers and (b) civilians; and if he will provide a breakdown by police force; [53094]

(2) how many cases of racial discrimination against police forces have (a) been settled out of court and (b) been won by civilian and officer applicants in the last five years; how many in each were brought by (i) officers and (ii) civilians; and if he will provide a breakdown by police force. [53095]

Mr. Michael: It is a matter for each chief officer to investigate claims of racial discrimination made to his or her force and to the police authority, in consultation with the police authority. The information requested is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost by contacting each police force.

Hunting

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to ban hunting with hounds. [52898]

Mr. George Howarth: Several approaches to the question of hunting with hounds are being discussed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Victim Support

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those self-help groups, organisations and agencies offering assistance to victims of the conflict and their families funded by her Department; how much public funding each body has received in each of the past five years; and how much is earmarked to each for the current year and each of the next three years. [48469]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments fund a number of self-help groups, organisations, and agencies which assist victims of the conflict and their families. Some of these organisations do not, however, exist solely to help victims, and there are other organisations which assist victims but do not receive public funding. I have set out the available information, for each of the years requested.

With the exception of the NIO's grant to Victim Support (NI) (those sums marked *), payments made by NIO represent 25 per cent. fully additional funding towards projects which have received 75 per cent. funding from the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation (EUSSPPR), which began in 1995.

In the case of the EU Special Support Programme, it is not possible to indicate current and future funding specifically for groups assisting victims, as the Government's commitment is to the Programme as a whole, however the Government expect to pay some £157,405 to those bodies listed for the lifetime of already approved projects.

Funding made available by DOE has been provided through Making Belfast Work; and that by DFP through the Central Community Relations Unit.

I plan to initiate an analysis of the number of support groups, organisations and agencies which assist victims of the conflict and their families and the funding which they receive. Once this has been completed I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total budget for assisting victims and their families in (a) each of the last five years, (b) the current year and (c) each of the next five years. [48470]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 7 July 1998]: Assistance for victims and their families has been provided from resources within a number of Government Departments. It has never been a separate Government Programme and has, therefore, no specific budget.

In anticipation of the publication of the Report of the Northern Ireland Victims Commissioner, the Prime Minister announced, in May of this year, that £5 million would be made available to provide support for victims and their families in the current year.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been commissioned and what estimate her Department has made of the future expenditure that might be required to support the victims of the conflict and their families. [48471]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 7 July 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland established on 24 October 1997, a Commission, headed by Sir Kenneth Bloomfield,

"to examine the feasibility of providing greater recognition for those who have become victims in the last thirty years as a consequence of events in Northern Ireland".

Sir Kenneth's subsequent Report, launched on 13 May 1998, entitled "We Will Remember Them", and the recently published report of the Social Services Inspectorate, "Living with the Trauma of the Troubles", which aimed to "examine and promote the further development of services to meet the social and psychological needs of individuals affected by the conflict", contain a series of recommendations relating to the needs of people who have become victims of the conflict and their families. Both reports are currently the subject of extensive consultation and, until the outcome of this is known, it will not be possible to estimate what future expenditure might be required.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation preceded allocation of the additional £5 million victim support fund announced by the Prime Minister in May; when this money will be distributed, and to whom. [48472]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 7 July 1998]: The recommendations in Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's Report, "We Will Remember Them", were the result of a 6-month consultation exercise with victims, their families and their representatives. I announced on 30 June 1998 a number of initiatives representing an expenditure of almost £1 million. The remainder of the additional £5 million is yet to be allocated and the Victims Liaison Unit, which I have established to drive forward progress in implementing the recommendations in Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report, is currently carrying out a consultation exercise which will help to identify and prioritise a package of measures for victims, and inform the future allocation of funding, including the remainder of that £5 million.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her policy towards the provision of statutory and voluntary sector services for victim support; and what measures she is planning to promote this policy. [48473]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 7 July 1998]: I acknowledge the excellent work currently undertaken by both the statutory and voluntary sectors. Both deliver an important and diverse range of services, and I have already given a commitment that any measures put in place for the future assistance of victims will take full account of the need to sustain a balance of both sectors' interests.

Ulster-Scots Language

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in assisting the further development of the Ulster-Scots language. [49982]

Mr. Ingram: In 1997–98 the Ulster-Scots movement received Government funding amounting to some £108,000. The Government also propose to commission independent academic research which will help to determine whether Ulster-Scots should be treated as a language for the purposes of the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.

Churches (Attacks)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant churches have been attacked in each month since January 1996. [50195]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 14 July 1998]: The table shows the number of attacks on churches during the period in question. The records do not distinguish between Protestant and Catholic (or other) churches.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance her Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52311]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Those constructing buildings for which my Department is responsible are required to comply with the Construction (Design & Management) Regulations (NI) 1995 which cover the use of hazardous materials such as those containing asbestos. These regulations in turn require compliance with other statutory regulations, approved codes of practice and Health and Safety Executive guidance notes relating specifically to, and giving guidance on, the use of materials containing asbestos.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52970]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The net cumulative increase in compliance costs as estimated in compliance cost assessments published by Northern Ireland Departments during the period 1 May 1997 to 30 June 1998 is as follows:

Estimated compliance costs

£ million

	Range
Non-recurring	19.6–13.4
Recurring (annually)	2.3–1.2

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the compliance cost assessments published by her Department since 1 May 1997. [52971]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 compliance cost assessments were published in respect of the following Northern Ireland measures laid before Parliament at Westminster.

- Horse Racing (Charges on Bookmakers) Order (Northern Ireland) 1997
- Industrial Pollution Control (Northern Ireland) Order 1997

- Activity Centres (Young Persons Safety) (Northern Ireland) Order 1998
- Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998
- Gaming (Variation of Monetary Limits) Order (Northern Ireland) 1998
- Horse Racing (Charges on Bookmakers) Order (Northern Ireland) 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52972]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 July 1998]: There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or result in a saving to business.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss) of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 439, at what (a) age and (b) mileage level the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service considers ambulances become out of standard and requiring replacement. [52788]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 28 July 1998]: DHSS Guidelines for the replacement of accident and emergency ambulances stipulate that vehicles should be replaced after they have reached 7 years of age or whenever they have covered 140,000 miles, whichever is the sooner. For patient care service vehicles this is 5 years or 70,000 miles.

Child Support Agency

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency's 1997–98 Annual report and Accounts will be published. [53935]

Mr. Worthington: The Northern Ireland Child Support Agency will publish its 1997–98 Annual Report and Accounts today. Copies will be placed in the Library.

It is pleasing to note that the Agency has met all Ministerial and Milestone targets for the second year running. Given the strong emphasis which the Agency has placed on improving the quality of service, it is particularly gratifying to see that the bulk of new maintenance applications (94%) are now being cleared within 26 weeks. The report also records continuing progress on all major fronts over the past three years.

During the year the Agency collected £7.6 million in maintenance, a 43% increase on 1996–97 and is striving to improve the collection rate further through additional measures, such as the recruitment of staff to work alternative working patterns including evenings and Saturdays.

Closer working with the Social Security Agency to improve working practices, contribution to the Lone Parent Initiative and the successful transfer of all pre-Maintenance Assessment work to the Area Offices is yet a further demonstration of the Agency's commitment to make its services more efficient and accessible to its clients.

The Agency has delivered an effective performance during 1997–98 within the allocated resources. With the substantial progress made to date the Northern Ireland CSA is well placed to contribute effectively to the Active Modern Service Programme.

Valuation and Lands Agency

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Valuation and Lands Agency in 1998–99. [53936]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For 1998–99 the following key performance targets have been set for the Agency:

1. To complete rating and client service cases—equivalent to 48,600 casework units.
2. To achieve a productivity for caseworking valuers of 355 work units.
3. To reduce the unit cost of casework by 2 per cent. in real terms.
4. To achieve a standard in domestic rating valuations such that 90 per cent. of those determined on appeal are within plus or minus 10 per cent. of the initial assessment.

5. To achieve a standard in non-domestic rating valuations such that 80 per cent. of those determined on appeal are within plus or minus 10 per cent. of the initial assessment.

6. To complete 93 per cent. of domestic rating appeals within 6 months of receipt.

7. To complete 82 per cent. of non-domestic rating appeals within 6 months of receipt.

8. To complete 93 per cent. of a representative sample of client services casework within agreed time limits.

9. To issue 90 per cent. of certificates for Continuous Revision Cases subject to retrospective backdating within 12 months of the event giving rise to the revision of the Valuation List.

Full details are set out in the Agency's Corporate and Business Plans, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Military Complaints

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps she has taken to fill the post of Independent Assessor of Military Complaints Procedures. [53937]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today re-appointed Mr. Jim McDonald as Independent Assessor of Military Complaints Procedures in Northern Ireland. Mr. McDonald's appointment will continue, while an Army presence is required in Northern Ireland to act in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, until 24 August 2000.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Comprehensive Spending Review

8. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she will take to monitor the effectiveness of her Department's increased support for education resulting from the Comprehensive Spending Review. [51327]

Clare Short: We are committed in our Development White Paper to mobilising the international community to meet the agreed target that every child should be in quality primary education by 2015. We are increasing our spending on this objective. We have also reviewed our scholarship programmes to ensure that we support training that assists development. We monitor and evaluate all our programmes and are strongly committed to the comprehensive spending review emphasis on measuring success by measuring outputs, which is why we place such stress on the poverty eradication targets.

21. Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how she intends to spend the increased resources made available for international development assistance following the outcome of the comprehensive spending review, with particular reference to anti-poverty programmes. [51342]

Clare Short: Our budgetary increase of £1.6 billion provides substantial new resources for development. The additional resources will be used to fund partnerships with developing country Governments who are committed to policies which will reduce poverty and increase support to multilateral agencies committed to this objective. We plan to agree allocations in the autumn.

British Council

9. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what priority her Department gives to the activities of the British Council. [51328]

Clare Short: We have concluded that it would be more efficient for the British Council to be responsible to a single department. The FCO will, therefore, assume responsibility for the British Council and the resources previously set aside in DFID's budget for the Council's grant in aid will transfer to the FCO. We have agreed that at the least the transferred element of the grant in aid must continue to benefit poorer countries and will therefore qualify as official development assistance.

Bilateral Aid

11. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money out of the increased resources allocated to her Department in the comprehensive spending review will be spent on bilateral aid. [51330]

Clare Short: We will agree the allocation of our increased resources in the Autumn. The International Development White Paper makes clear that we are now giving greater priority to seeking to influence multilateral systems to achieve a stronger commitment to the international poverty eradication targets. We are also redirecting our bilateral efforts to this purpose.

23. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the principal priorities within her bilateral aid programmes on which the additional funding over the next three years announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 14 July will be spent. [51344]

Clare Short: The primary objective of the development assistance programme, as our White Paper sets out, is to contribute to the elimination of poverty through the implementation of the international development strategy. The key target of the strategy is to reduce by one half the proportion of people living in extreme poverty by 2015. The additional resources available to the Department for International Development (DFID) as a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review will be allocated to contribute to the realisation of that target.

We have set out as part of the CSR some specific targets for DFID. For the twenty largest recipients of British assistance we will aim to achieve by 2002 an annual increase in GDP per capita for the poorest 20 per cent. of the population, a reduction in the under five and maternal mortality rates and an increase in the number of children in primary school.

Latin America

12. Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to increase British support for development projects in Latin America. [51331]

Mr. Foulkes: We are not a major donor in Latin America, but our programmes are set to increase by 40 per cent. over the next 3 years and we contribute through our support for international agencies. We are also collaborating more closely with the major multilateral agencies in the region. Our support will be firmly focused on promoting the sustainable elimination of poverty, which includes improved management of environmental resources.

India (Child Immunisation)

13. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department has taken in respect of the immunisation of children in the Indian sub-continent since May 1997. [51332]

Clare Short: Vaccine preventable diseases kill 9 million people every year. Immunisation programmes are the backbone of our efforts to meet the target of reducing by two-thirds the death rate of children under 5 years by 2015. In 1997, we committed £51 million to the polio eradication programme in India—the largest contribution to immunisation in developing countries Britain has ever made. We have also made new contributions to immunisation programmes in Pakistan and Bangladesh. In Sri Lanka, we are helping the Ministry of Health improve vaccination delivery to those displaced by conflict.

Tanzania

14. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the help her Department gives to Tanzania. [51333]

Clare Short: Our development assistance for Tanzania last year was £38 million. This included £25 million of support for debt relief, and support for projects in areas such as health, education and public administration. Yesterday, the Prime Minister announced a new £18 million commitment to work with the WHO to eradicate polio in East Africa which of course includes Tanzania. I plan to visit Tanzania next month and will be reviewing our strategy.

Russia

15. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to assist the Government of Russia with economic and political reform. [51334]

Mr. Foulkes: We are assisting the Russian Government, and other Russian organisations, with economic political and social reform.

We also provide assistance through multilateral agencies, especially the EU Tacis programme.

A copy of our new Country Strategy Paper for Russia, which places an increased emphasis on the need to reduce poverty, has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Debt

16. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to reduce the debt burden of the world's poorest and most indebted countries. [51335]

Clare Short: As part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Debt Initiative, my Department has provided over £6 million to help the African Development Bank meet its share of the costs for Uganda, as well as making £10 million funds available to help Mozambique qualify for HIPC relief. We have also provided over £25 million of interim debt relief to Tanzania and Mozambique. Part of a new £30 million pledge for Rwanda will be earmarked for a multilateral debt trust fund, established to ensure Rwanda is able to meet its debt obligations during the period leading up to HIPC eligibility. Under the Commonwealth Debt Initiative, eight countries have benefited so far, at a cost of £25 million, and we have provided £400,000 to enable Debt Relief International to assist countries with their debt management. With the additional resources provided under the Comprehensive Spending Review, I look forward to doing more to help reduce the constraints which debt imposes on development.

27. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on progress to reduce the debt of poorer developing nations. [51348]

Clare Short: The Government's Mauritius Mandate presses for the speedy and flexible implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative. This was endorsed by G8 Leaders at their Summit held in Birmingham in May. So far, six countries have qualified for debt relief under the Initiative, and decisions on a further three countries are expected this year. The IMF and World Bank are currently undertaking a review of HIPC which will be considered by Governors at the Annual Meetings of the IMF and World Bank in October.

Farmers (Caribbean)

17. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to assist small farmers in Caribbean countries to diversify their crops. [51337]

Clare Short: Substantial EC resources to which we contribute are available to promote efficiency in the banana industry, agricultural and economic diversification. We also provide help for infrastructure and education. We are currently in the process of drafting a strategy paper for the Windwards. We are consulting widely and are open to ideas for new initiatives that have a poverty focus.

St. Helena

18. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the St. Helena island authority about providing facilities for air travel and improved seaport facilities. [51339]

Clare Short: My Department and the St. Helena Government have agreed to undertake in 1998, a preliminary desk study into the basic technical and economic viability of an airlink to St. Helena. We have agreed to a feasibility study if the outcome of this desk study is positive. European Development Fund resources have been approved in principle for a major wharf improvement project at Jamestown. In the meantime, improved cargo handling equipment funded by my Department will be delivered later this year.

Development Issues

19. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to promote greater public understanding of development issues; and if she will make a statement. [51340]

Clare Short: My Department runs an active information and development awareness programme.

As outlined in the development White Paper, the Department attaches high priority to promoting greater awareness of development issues. I have recently doubled the budget for work in this field. I have also set up a Development Awareness Working Group to agree strategies for this work. In November, we will hold the first Development Policy Forum which will enable a wide public debate on development issues.

In addition, the Department produces publications on its work, attends exhibitions, runs a mobile roadshow, produces its own magazine, "Developments", and has its own internet site. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary and I are currently undertaking a series of regional visits to promote greater understanding of development issues.

Malawi

20. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the review of aid to Malawi. [51341]

Clare Short: I have approved a new Department for International Development Country Strategy Paper for Malawi which has been agreed with the Malawi Government. The Paper envisages a strong long-term partnership to promote sustainable development, equity and human rights in Malawi.

I will send the hon. Member a copy of the Country Strategy Paper and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Southern Africa

22. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the Government's plans for new aid expenditure in southern Africa. [51343]

Clare Short: During my visit to South Africa and Mozambique last week, I saw the impressive progress that has been made. But much more needs to be done to reduce poverty and create opportunities for some of the poorest people in the world. Our programmes with all countries in Southern Africa are being reviewed this year to ensure we implement the commitments of the development White Paper. Proposals for future allocations are being prepared for all the Department for International Development's programmes.

Sub-Saharan Africa

24. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate how much additional aid will be committed to sub-Saharan African countries over the next three years as a result of the comprehensive spending review. [51345]

Clare Short: We are working on proposals for the internal allocation of resources over the next three years. Allocations will be finalised for all programmes in the Autumn and will be published in the Departmental Report early in 1999. We expect to increase our allocations to sub-Saharan African countries, to enable us to further our work on the objectives set out in the White Paper.

Sudan

25. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions her Department has held with other Governments and international organisations about the situation in Sudan. [51346]

Clare Short: I have had various discussions and contacts with other Governments and international organisations about Sudan among these are the following:

On 30 April, I met the Coordinator of Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) (Southern Sector)

On 18 May, I chaired a discussion of EU Development Ministers on Sudan

On 4 June, I met the UN Under Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs

On 9 June, I spoke to the Executive Director of the World Food Programme

On 23 June, I met the Heads of Save the Children Fund, OXFAM, Action Aid, Christian Aid and CAFOD

On 9 July, I met the Executive Director of UNICEF

On 14 July, I wrote to Development Minister colleagues urging them to make additional resources available for the relief effort in Sudan

On 16 July, I spoke on the telephone to the Administrator of USAID.

I addition, my officials maintain frequent contact with all agencies looking for a negotiated settlement to the crisis in Sudan. They regularly update me on the situation. For example, they attended the meeting of the International Advisory Committee of the OLS on 18 May and on 24 June they were at a World Food Programme briefing session.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many tons of food aid have been allowed through to the south of Sudan by (a) train, (b) road and (c) air since the ceasefires by the Government of Sudan and the SPLA. [53245]

Clare Short: The World Food Programme report that between 15 July, when the cease-fire began, and 26 July 2,753 tonnes of food have been delivered to the south of Sudan by air and 323 tonnes by road. No food aid has yet been delivered by train. In addition, on 23 July, a barge carrying 2,125 tonnes of food left Kosti in northern Sudan. It will drop food at 33 points in the south.

Indonesia

26. Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to provide assistance to the most vulnerable groups in Indonesia. [51347]

Clare Short: Indonesian community groups are working to prepare a Community Recovery Programme. I have agreed that we should provide an amount up to £6 million needed to complete the programme design and run its first six months of operation as a pilot phase. The Community Recovery Programme will provide rapid response grant assistance for the most vulnerable people affected by the crisis in Indonesia. It will focus particularly on people without land or jobs and look to meet needs otherwise unmet by existing support mechanisms in such areas as food security, basic social services, income generation and job creation. Ultimately, the Programme will look to secure funding of up to £25 million from various donors.

EU Development Programmes

28. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to ensure that European Union development programmes are targeted at the poorest people in recipient countries. [51349]

Clare Short: Our aim is for the EC's external development programmes to make an effective contribution in meeting the international poverty eradication goal. My Department seeks to work closely with the European Union to help improve the poverty focus and effectiveness of the Community's aid programmes.

In agreeing the EU mandate for negotiation with those Africa, Caribbean and Pacific States (ACP) party to the Lomé Convention, we succeeded in securing stronger backing for the International Development Strategy and targets. When negotiations open in September, we will strongly argue that aid allocations should focus on poverty.

We are also seeking to ensure that a larger share of external assistance allocations goes to poorer countries. We are trying to influence the new Financial Perspectives, which will set the ceiling for spending on external assistance through the EC Budget for the years 2000–2006, and the 1999 EC Budget.

Iraq

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department has provided to treat or help the victims of Halabja in northern Iraq following the chemical weapons attack by Iraqi military forces on the town in March 1988; what work her Department has funded to monitor the long-term effects of the chemical weapons on the residents of the town since the attack; and if she will make a statement. [53091]

Clare Short: We share the widespread concern for the people of Halabja, who are suffering from the continuing effects of the chemical weapons attack. We have been working with NGOs, other donors and medical experts to determine what best can be done to help. Earlier this year, we funded an initial delivery of basic medical supplies to Halabja. We have also contracted a medical specialist to carry out research into the types of illnesses suffered by the people and possible treatments, with a view to developing immediate and longer term health care programme in collaboration with the World Health Organisation, taking into account the difficulties of working in northern Iraq. Other donors have expressed an interest in providing funding towards such a programme and we continue to liaise with them closely.

Multinationals (OECD Guidelines)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 7 July 1998, Official Report, column 436, on the OECD, when she will publish the specific objectives of the current review of the OECD guidelines for multinational enterprises. [53137]

Clare Short: The next meeting of the committee responsible within the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development for reviewing the Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises will be in November 1998. Prior to that meeting, the Department of Trade and Industry, (DTI) in conjunction with my Department and other interested Departments, will be drawing together UK experience with the Guidelines and objectives for the review. The DTI will be consulting business and trade union representatives, together with those NGOs who have expressed an interest in the Guidelines, and our aims for the review will take account of the views that they express. We expect to make our objectives public nearer the time.

World Day for the Eradication of Poverty

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to mark 17 October as the World Day for the Eradication of Poverty. [53005]

Clare Short: The eradication of poverty in developing countries is the Department for International Development's purpose, and the focus of our work throughout the year. We currently have no plans to single out 17 October as a specific day for the eradication of poverty. However, we will consider any opportunities that do arise for taking forward our work in the context of the day.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what guidance her Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52309]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) does not undertake the construction of any buildings. In those buildings that it occupies there are strict guidelines laid down to protect staff and visitors from any hazard to health. All areas in which such a hazard exists (such as certain partitions in the Victoria Street Headquarters) are clearly marked.

Construction standards for buildings constructed with DFID assistance in developing countries do not permit the use of asbestos.

Occasionally DFID has assisted with projects involving the modification of buildings which are found to contain asbestos. One such case occurred with the Zimbabwe Department of Civil Aviation (DCA) in the upgrading of air traffic control systems. DFID introduced specialist technical assistance for DCA staff and contractors to deal with this problem in the short term and to be aware of it for the future.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the reviews his Department initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48524]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The information is not held centrally by my Department and comprehensive details of all such reviews cannot be provided. The following table lists certain reviews for the years in question which have been obtained from published information.

Year	Review
1974–75	Review of financial support for shipping services to the Islands
	Review of school leaving date arrangements
	Dunning Committee on O Grade examination structure
1979–80	Committee of Inquiry into Local Government in Scotland
	Working party on provision of non-university tertiary education in the Dundee area
1992–93	Review of bursaries scheme for non-advanced further education students
	Review of councillors' expenses
	Loch Lomond and Trossachs working party

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52301]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office issues copies of the common guidance prepared by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, "Asbestos Materials in Buildings" to those who require it.

Domestic Abuse

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the links between domestic abuse and child abuse will be recognised in the Scottish Strategy against domestic abuse, and that children's experiences of domestic abuse will be included. [52269]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The links between domestic abuse and child abuse are increasingly becoming recognised. The Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence can be expected to take account of this as it develops the Scottish strategy on domestic violence. The wide range of membership of the Partnership should ensure that all aspects of domestic abuse are considered.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to follow up the research on service provision to women experiencing domestic violence in Scotland, published by the Scottish Office Central Research Unit with initiatives and research to address the needs of children and young people experiencing domestic abuse. [52268]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The research we have already published "Service Provision to Women Experiencing Domestic Violence in Scotland" has provided us with a good basis for the improvement of services. We will consider the need for further initiatives and research in the light of the recommendations which will be received from the Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he intends to facilitate consultation with children and young people who have experienced domestic abuse in developing policy, practice and provision. [52262]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 July 1998]: Our aim in establishing the Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence is to ensure that it contains a wide range of interests, including those who are knowledgeable about the problems faced by children and young people who have experienced domestic abuse, so that they can reflect this in the work of the Partnership. It will also be open to the Partnership to carry out its own consultations with children and young people.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legal safeguards to prevent women and children being placed at risk of further abuse due to contact between children and abusive fathers. [52261]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The Children (Scotland) Act 1995 provides for parental responsibilities and rights (such as contact) to continue after separation or divorce. If contact results in risk of abuse, a range of protective measures are available. The Children (Scotland) Act 1995 allows a court to deprive a person of parental responsibilities and rights. The Act also introduced orders to protect children and to exclude a named person from the family home. As part of its remit, the Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence will take full account of the impact of domestic violence and will consider the adequacy of existing safeguards. The matter of consultation will be for the Partnership to determine as its work progresses.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to increase access to support and protection following domestic abuse for (a) women and children from rural areas, (b) ethnic minority women and children and (c) those who have a family member with disabilities or special educational needs. [52260]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The remit of our proposed Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence will include a requirement to consider particularly the problems in obtaining access to services which affect women and children living in rural areas; women and children from ethnic minorities; and women or children who have disabilities.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue guidance to local authorities on the treatment of children and young people experiencing domestic abuse in local authorities' children's services plans. [52793]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Extensive guidance on the provisions of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995 was issued last year. Although the guidance does not specifically refer to children and young people who experience domestic abuse, it does identify children who are in need of protection and children whose health and development is suffering among those categories of children for whom local authorities should plan services.

I do not propose to issue further guidance at this stage, but the existing guidance will be reviewed in due course in the light of experience and of any recommendations received from the Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence.

Football Clubs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on soccer in Scotland of UEFA's proposed ban on multi-club ownership. [52330]

Mr. Dewar: I appreciate the concern about the potential impact of the ruling, and it is very important that the integrity of football competitions is not undermined. The football authorities are best placed to decide how far the new ruling is required to ensure fair competition, and pursue as necessary with UEFA.

Scottish Parliament (Parking)

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many car spaces are planned to be provided for the new Scottish Parliamentary building; to whom these spaces will be made available; and how much they will cost to provide. [53101]

Mr. Dewar: On present plans, the proposed number of car parking spaces to be provided in the new Scottish Parliament building is 170. This figure comprises 129 secure dedicated spaces for MSPs with the remainder being available for visitors and staff, including special provision for disabled users. The cost of providing car parking facilities will be met within the overall project budget.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52945]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 28 July 1998]: It is not practicable to give a single net figure, because of the diverse detail contained within some of the individual compliance cost assessments.

In the majority of the compliance cost assessments produced by The Scottish Office, measures have been confirmed as being cost neutral or not imposing any cost on business. The compliance costs for 3 of the measures, however, have been estimated as follows:

the building (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997—amendments to Part J of the Technical Standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990. The net cumulative increase in compliance costs in respect of any typical year, range from a minimum of £30m to £60m per annum. The amendments will lead to an improvement in the energy performance of buildings resulting in a reduction of energy costs. Overall, the measures can be expected to pay for themselves in approximately 8–15 years.

the Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997, and the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Scotland) Amendment Order 1997. The recurring cost of compliance across all business sectors affected will be in the range £50,000 to £100,000.

the Building (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1997—amendments to Part K of the Technical Standards for compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990. The building construction costs are likely to increase by about £75 for an average sized house. This, as a percentage of total construction costs, is considered negligible and should have little effect on construction costs, is considered negligible and should have little effect on construction firms. It is estimated that the total additional building costs for the Scottish house building industry as a whole will be £1.7m per annum.

For the detail, I refer the hon. Member to Cmnd Paper 3938 and the individual compliance cost assessments held in the House Library.

Environmental Agencies

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Government will undertake public consultation on the review of legislation relating to integration within the Environmental Agency for England and Wales and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. [54144]

Mr. Dewar: I announced on 8 April 1998, Official Report, column 241, that we would review the legislation relating to the Environment Agency for England and Wales and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency, with a view to identifying any barriers preventing the Agencies from taking an integrated approach to the environment. We are issuing the relevant consultation paper today. We are sending it to a wide range of bodies, and publishing it on the Internet.

Scottish Education Unit

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the forthcoming policy and financial management review of the Scottish Education Unit. [54145]

Mr. Dewar: My Department will conduct a review of the Scottish Further Education Unit during 1998 under the programme of five-yearly non-departmental public body reviews. The review will examine the status and functions of the Scottish Further Education Unit in accordance with Cabinet Office guidance.

The review will be conducted in two distinct stages. The initial stage of the review—the "prior options" stage—will focus on whether the body is required at all, whether NDPB status is correct, and whether the functions are being delivered in the most effective manner. As part of this, The Scottish Office will thoroughly examine the case for abolition, transferring part or all of the functions to another body, rationalisation, privatisation, and continuation as an NDPB. The second stage of the review will then examine the Scottish Further Education Unit's financial management and control systems.

The first part of the review will also examine the roles of other organisations involved in the development and support of further education in Scotland and the scope for co-ordination of their activities with those of the Unit to ensure maximum value for money from the central government resources available for further education in Scotland.

This study will commence in the autumn and will be carried out by the Scottish Office Management and Organisation Unit.

In order to help ensure that all options are considered fully, comments from interested parties will be welcome. Comments should be sent by mid October 1998 to:

Leases

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many leases of residential properties extend to a period of 99 years or more in Scotland; and how many of these tenants are liable to be affected by the expiry of such long leases and consequential claims by the Landlords for excessive payments. [53138]

Mr. Dewar: It would require a time-consuming and exhaustive search of the Register of Sasines and the Land Register of Scotland to establish how many leases of residential properties in Scotland extend to a period of 99 years or more. It is therefore impossible to verify how many of these tenants are liable to be affected by the expiry of such long leases. The Government are aware of the difficulty of assessing compensation payable to a landlord if the tenant wishes to buy the property when the lease expires. Because of this and other difficulties caused to the tenant, residential leases of more than 20 years' duration were prohibited by the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974. The Scottish Law Commission will examine leasehold tenure when it completes its work on abolition of the feudal system and the reform of real burdens.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been commissioned by his Department into the number of tenants holding long leases and the levels of rent payable thereunder. [53139]

Mr. Dewar: No specific research has been commissioned into the number of tenants holding long leases in Scotland, which are leases for more than 20 years. Leasehold tenure is relatively rare in Scotland and is concentrated in specific geographical areas. The vast majority of property is held under feudal tenure. Long leases, for example for 999 years, were very often granted as an alternative to feuing because of restrictions on the power to feu. Levels of rent payable under these long leases tend to be minimal.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research he has commissioned from the Law Commission into the law of Scotland relating to long leases; and if he will assess the advantages of converting tenant's interest into (a) a registered title in the Land Register of Scotland and (b) a recorded title in the Register of Sasines. [52811]

Mr. Dewar: Under its Fifth Programme of Law Reform, the Scottish Law Commission has an objective to undertake, as a long-term project, an examination of leasehold tenure, in particular long leases of residential subjects. Although some work has already been carried out, it is unlikely that the Commission will be able to resume its work on this subject until it has completed its work on abolition of the feudal system and the reform of real burdens, which takes priority because the vast majority of property in Scotland is held under feudal tenure.

It has been possible to record the tenants' interest in a long lease in the Register of Sasines since the passing of the Registration of Leases (Scotland) Act 1857. The Land Registration (Scotland) Act 1979 allows the tenant's interest in a long lease to be registered in the Land Register of Scotland.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52701]

Mr. Dewar: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the reply to be placed in the Library.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were on (a) in-patient waiting lists and (b) out-patient waiting lists, by quarter in each of the last three years. [53258]

Mr. Dewar: The number of patients on waiting lists for in-patient and day case treatment in NHS hospitals in Scotland at the end of each quarter for the last three years is given in the following table. Information on the number of patients waiting for out-patient appointments on a given date is not collected centrally.

Date	In-patient and day care waiting list
30 June 1995	78,582
30 September 1995	80,482

Ambulance Age

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ambulances and similar vehicles operated in each of the Scottish Ambulance Service NHS Trust's 10 regional divisions are (a) under one year old, (b) between one and three years old, (c) between three and five years old, (d) between five and seven years old and (e) over seven years old. [52540]

Mr. Dewar: The information is set out in the table.

Ambulance Division	Number of vehicles at 31 March 1998 by age band (a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	(e)	Total
Argyll and Clyde	19	27	36	21	29	132

Elections

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of advantages of making the times of the opening and closing of the poll the same for the elections to both the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish local authorities on 6 May 1999. [52630]

Mr. McLeish: A Working Group has been set up comprising officials from the Scottish Office, the main political parties, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives and the Association of Electoral Administrators to look at the arrangements for the conduct of elections on 6 May 1999, including the polling hours.

The current assumption is that the polling hours should be the same for both elections, but no conclusion has yet been reached on the precise times.

Bed Blocking

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board in Scotland the number of beds blocked on average in March of the current year. [52629]

Mr. Dewar: Information on the number of patients occupying beds although they are ready for discharge to the community is not collected routinely.

Mental Illness Grant

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the mental illness specific grant for 1999–2000 and subsequent years; and if he will make a statement. [52503]

Mr. Dewar: The Mental Illness Specific Grant (MISG) will continue to provide ring-fenced resources totalling £18 million a year towards community-based mental health projects in Scotland.

In addition to the MISG, the Mental Health Development Fund is providing £9 million over 3 years up to 2000–2001 to assist local agencies to work together to provide integrated support for people with mental health problems, in line with the principles set out in the Framework for Mental Health Services in Scotland. Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, the non-ring-fenced Grant Aided Expenditure allowances to local authorities for their social work responsibilities, including for mental health services, will increase by £279 million over the next 3 years. Over £90 million is also transferred each year from Health Boards to local authorities to reflect the shift from psychiatric and other NHS hospital care to care in the community.

TREASURY

Foreign Earnings (Deductions)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the impact of recent changes to the foreign earnings deduction arrangements on (a) operating costs of British charities and (b) in the gross and net tax revenues accruing to Government. [52539]

Dawn Primarolo: In reaching the decision to end the general Foreign Earnings Deduction, full consideration was given to all likely practical consequences. Based on information provided on behalf of UK charities, any costs arising as a result of this legislative change will be very low. Most aid agency employees working abroad will not be UK resident for tax purposes and so will be unaffected by the change. The net full year Exchequer yield from the withdrawal of the general Foreign Earnings Deduction is forecast to be at least £250 million a year and the gross figure will be higher than this.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the impact of recent changes to the foreign earnings deduction arrangements, on the overseas earnings and competitive position outside the United Kingdom of (a) the consultancy sector, (b) consulting engineers, (c) contractors and (d) industries in the United Kingdom which supply goods and services for British consultants and contractors operating overseas. [52538]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: In reaching the decision to end the general Foreign Earnings deduction, full consideration was given to all likely practical consequences. It is important to note that FED was available to all employees and provided a loophole exploited not only by UK employers. It is, therefore, impossible to measure precisely the effect on overseas earnings of the withdrawal of this relief. More importantly, in terms of international competitiveness, it is misleading to look at one feature of the tax system in isolation. We believe in support for all businesses through economic stability and broad based relief. We have already reduced the main rate of corporation tax by two percentage points. A further one per cent. reduction is proposed for 1999. Advance corporation tax is also being abolished. It is measures such as these which makes the UK attractive to business and which will result in the creation of jobs and closing discredited loopholes such as FED helps to fund these measures.

Unemployment

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide his assumptions for (a) the number of people unemployed and (b) the percentage of the workforce unemployed in respect of his estimates for social security expenditure in the Comprehensive Spending Review. [51472]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 20 July 1998]: The unemployment assumption was set in line with the convention, audited and approved by the National Audit Office—a flat profile for future years based on the most recent outturn.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52694]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 July 1998, Official Report, columns 581–82.

The organisations which undertook the research projects listed are as follows:

SA public information campaign: Research International

SA budget payments Plans: NOP

Two alcohol and tobacco smuggling surveys: Customs and Excise (Monitored by the Government Statistical service)

Presentational aspects of the individual savings account: Fishburn Hedges

Presentational aspects of the working families tax credit: Ogilvy and Mather

Various surveys of PEP/TESSA holders: NOP, ONS, MORI.

The aggregate cost of the projects is £350,250. Pricing information can be commercially sensitive and the contractors have asked for certain individual project costs not to be disclosed. However, I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) on 19 May 1998, Official Report, column 303 and on 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 441, which gave information on the individual costs of some of these projects.

Euro

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned on the impact of the euro on the United Kingdom mortgage market. [53009]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have not commissioned research into the impact of the euro on the United Kingdom mortgage market. However, the Government are familiar with the range of outside studies on the subject.

Ecu Mortgages

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many United Kingdom home buyers have taken out ecu mortgages in each year since 1989. [53010]

Ms Hewitt: These statistics are not readily available.

Houses-builders Federation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with (a) the House-builders Federation and (b) other organisations concerning the implications for the United Kingdom housing market of the introduction of the euro. [53011]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer holds regular discussions with a wide range of organisations on the implications of EMU for the UK economy, including the housing market.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recipients of disability living allowance are liable for taxation at (a) the highest, (b) the standard and (c) the basic rate; and what proportion these constitute of all recipients of disability living allowance. [53034]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The information requested is given for 1998–99 in the table. It is estimated that there are 2.1 million recipients of disability living allowance in 1998–99. Very few recipients, if any, are liable at the higher rate.

Marginal rate tax	Number of recipients of disability living allowance	Percentage of total recipients
Basic rate	200,000	10
Lower rate	200,000	10

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, columns 652–53, on the ICL Pathway Project, (1) if he will list the firm or firms who have supplied the consultants; [53160]

(2) on what date the consultants were appointed; and whether their appointment followed a competitive tender. [53164]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The PA Consulting Group, Mr. Alec Wylie and Mr. Bill Robins were engaged to assist with the monitoring of the ICL Pathway project. The Government have a call off contract with PA Consulting through the CCTA service catalogue. PA Consulting started work on 28 April 1998. Mr. Wylie and Mr. Robins, with whom contracts were signed on 1 May, were selected after a number of candidates were interviewed.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, columns 652–53, when the objectives set by the Government will be achieved by the ICL Pathway Project. [53161]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Present plans provide that the programme to automate all post offices will be completed by end 2000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, columns 652–53, on the ICL Pathway Project, if he will list the parties involved. [53163]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The parties to the contracts are: the Benefits Agency (on behalf of DSS), Post Office Counters Limited and ICL Pathway.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 July 1998, Official Report, columns 652–53, for what reasons the Government have decided not to assess alternative options to the ICL Pathway Project. [53162]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: ICL Pathway are engaged in a project to automate post office counters under contracts agreed in 1996. The Government remain committed to the objectives of the project.

Coinage

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) planned and (b) current sterling coins match the dimensions of euro coinage; what discussions have taken place (i) on potential problems arising from duplication, (ii) between the Commission and his Department and (iii) with representatives of British business; and if he will make a statement. [53829]

Ms Hewitt: None.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on public access to the January ECOFIN Council; what publicity was given to the meeting; if representatives from (a) political parties and (b) lobby groups were admitted; what audience vetting took place; and to what proportion of the conference public attendance was permitted. [53773]

Ms Hewitt: The first agenda item of the 19 January Council Meeting was the presentation and discussion of the Presidency and Commission work programmes for the UK Presidency. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told my hon. Friend the Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Ms Lawrence) on 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 264, this took the form of an "open debate". This was the only agenda item to which public attendance was permitted.

Open debates are regularly held, but as part of the UK commitment to openness, took a higher profile during our Presidency. Eight open debates were held during the UK Presidency. More than three times as many members of the public attended the UK's open debates as under the previous Presidency, and the Presidency took the initiative actively to invite the public to watch the debates. The Council Secretariat sent invitations to the first two open debates (ECOFIN work programme, 19 January and GAC work programme 26 January) to 2,800 Brussels based organisations, including NGOs, consultants, law firms, educational organisations and thinktanks.

Some 200 people pre-registered for the ECOFIN debate, and the Secretariat estimate that this number, together with about 100 journalists, watched the debate through a video link to Justus Lipsius Press Conference room, which was full to capacity. Europe by Satellite also broadcast the debate. The Chancellor referred to the initiative in his post-Council press conference.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the non-requirement for the Personal Investment Authority's disciplinary committee to publish its rules of procedure. [53780]

Ms Hewitt: None. The rules governing discipline are published in the rulebook of the PIA.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what form practitioner involvement will take in the operation of the Financial Services Authority; and when such arrangements will be in place; [53779]

(2) what is the timetable for the Financial Services Authority in drawing up the guides envisaged in its consultation document designing the FSA handbook of rules and guidance; [53785]

(3) when the Financial Services Authority will publish details of the system it intends to operate for monitoring independent financial advisers. [53778]

Ms Hewitt: I understand that the Financial Services Authority intends to publish further details of its approach to regulation shortly.

Green Minister

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what activities his Department's Green Minister has undertaken relating to his environmental responsibilities since being appointed. [52437]

Dawn Primarolo: As the Treasury's Green Minister, I am committed to 'greening' the Department's operations, to integrating environmental considerations into other policy areas, and to improving the economic analysis underpinning the Government's environmental initiatives.

Information campaigns have been run on the recycling schemes in place and energy awareness. The Treasury also has the "Bag It and Bin It" campaign, and the "Going for Green" campaign.

The Statement of Intent on Environmental Taxation, released with the July 1997 Budget, committed the Government to exploring the scope for using taxes to help reduce environmental damage. The last two Budgets contained a considerable package of environmental tax measures and commitments to further action. I was involved in its preparation, and in drawing up the assessment of the environmental impact that appeared within the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

On a number of occasions I have met environmental non-Governmental organisations (NGOs) and other interested bodies to discuss, among other matters, their proposals for environmental taxes. I have also given evidence on the Treasury's environmental performance, and on the Government's use of environmental taxes, to both the Environmental Audit Committee and the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from (a) friendly societies, (b) building societies and (c) co-operative societies on the individual savings account and its regulation; and if he will make a statement. [53904]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Inland Revenue has received over 100 responses to the draft regulations for the individual savings account, which were issued for consultation in May. Six of these were from individual building societies and two from friendly societies, and responses were also received from the relevant representative bodies. No representations were received from co-operative societies. We are grateful for all the points made to us, which have been carefully considered.

Income Tax

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many income tax payers there were in each of the tax years from 1990–91 to 1998–99. [51735]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of income taxpayers in each of the specified years is given in the table. They are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes for 1995–96 and earlier years. Figures for 1996–97 onwards are projected in line with the March 1998 Budget forecast.

	Number of income taxpayers (million)
1990–91	26.1
1991–92	25.7
1992–93	25.4
1993–94	25.0
1994–95	25.3
1995–96	25.8
1996–97[1]	25.9
1997–98[1]	26.1
1998–99[1]	26.2

[1] Provisional

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 July 1998, Official Report, column 577, if he will provide comparable figures for two earner married couples with (a) one child aged four and (b) two children aged four and six. [51165]

Dawn Primarolo: The data requested are given in the table.

Tax, National Insurance, Child Benefit and Family Credit payments at multiple of gross earnings

	Gross earnings (£ per week)
	150	200	250	300	400

Equivalised Net Income	146.90	155.90	175.35	200.17	249.24

Note:

The figures are calculated on the basis that all earnings are from employment and that there are no other sources of income

The Married Couples Allowance has been allocated to the person earning 60 per cent. of the total

The standard McClements scales have been used to determine equivalised income. This is the same process that is used in the DSS's Households Below Average Income publication

Some of these families may also be entitled to housing benefit and council tax benefit. However, as this will depend upon the composition of the housing costs (between mortgage payments, council tax, and rent) housing benefit and council tax benefit have been left out of these figures

Credit Unions

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on reform of the regulations governing credit unions; and if he will make a statement. [53777]

Ms Hewitt: A number of representations have been received on reforming credit unions, including one from the Association of British Credit Unions. We will shortly be issuing a consultation document containing a package of measures designed to lift some of the restrictions in existing legislation, whilst maintaining the movement's focus on the less well off.

Widowers and Widows Benefits

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will extend the entitlement to widows bereavement allowance to widowers. [53342]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) on 3 July 1998, Official Report, columns 330–31.

Self-assessment

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many late-filing penalty notices have been issued by the Inland Revenue to taxpayers due to submit 1996–97 self-assessment income tax returns; and how many of the penalty notices have proved (a) to be incorrect or (b) to be issued in error. [52761]

Dawn Primarolo: 670,000 late filing penalties have been issued to taxpayers whose 1996–97 self assessment tax returns were received after the filing deadline. About 8 million tax returns were filed on time. There are a number of circumstances in which a penalty notice may need to be cancelled. A common example would be where the taxpayer turns out to have a reasonable excuse for delivering the return late. However, there are no available statistics for the numbers of penalties which were discharged simply because they were incorrect or issued in error.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figure are available. [52876]

Dawn Primarolo: In 1997–98 Her Majesty's Treasury spent as follows:

(a) on Personal Computers: £612,512.00

(b) on Main-frame: Nil

(c) on Mini-Computers: Nil

(d) on File Servers: £653,495.00.

Alcohol and Tobacco Smuggling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many successful prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years for smuggling (a) alcohol and (b) tobacco into the United Kingdom from mainland Europe. [52297]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The information requested is not available in this form, however, specific figures are available for the number of prosecutions generated by Excise Verification Officers for the smuggling of alcohol and/or tobacco from within the European Union.

1993–94: 44

1994–95: 515

1995–96: 438

1996–97: 502

1997–98: 417.

Charities Taxation

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress on the Review of Charities Taxation. [53938]

Dawn Primarolo: Over 3,000 replies were received in the first phase of the Review. The Government are determined to devote the time and attention necessary to do justice to all these contributions before launching the next phase. We expect to publish a Consultation Document in the autumn.

Funeral Payments

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to regulate pre-payments for funerals. [53939]

Ms Hewitt: The planned legislation to establish the Financial Services Authority as a single financial regulator provides the opportunity to put in place some essential protections for pre-payments for funerals. Pre-payments for funerals will be included in the scope of regulation under the Bill. However, we will be looking at ways of excluding from direct regulation under the Bill arrangements that offer sufficient protection, such as plans backed by life insurance policies, which meet certain criteria. Consumer concerns about the conduct of the funeral business will remain the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Government will be consulting on the proposals in due course. A consultation document will explain our plans in more detail. As part of the consultation we will be seeking views on possible criteria which life policies backing pre-paid funeral plans might meet if the plans are to stay outside the scope of the Bill. The key aim in setting these criteria will be to see that appropriate safeguards exists, so that when the funeral is delivered, the money is there to pay for it.

I am determined to see that pre-payments for funerals are kept safely and are sufficient to meet the funeral costs. The framework I propose is designed to ensure that, as far as possible, consumers get the funeral for which they have paid.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52586]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is committed to the following programme in support of the New Deal programme:

Phase 1—Plans are underway to employ eight (8) people under the subsidised job option and no members of staff under the unsubsidised job option in 1998.

Phase 2—We will look at employing people under the unsubsidised job option, and increasing the number of people employed under the subsidised option in the next calendar year.

Nigeria

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposals outlined by General Abubakar in his national broadcast on Tuesday 21 July. [52755]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome General Abubakar's commitment to the restoration of democratic civilian government by May 1999, after free and fair elections in early 1999. We also welcome his undertaking to respect human rights and democracy, including the release of the remaining political prisoners. This is the best news that we have had from Nigeria for a long time.

The time has now come to re-establish dialogue between Nigeria and Britain and the wider international community. We are working to secure the agreement of EU partners that members of the Nigerian Government should now be allowed to visit EU member states where that would help General Abubakar's programme and promote constructive dialogue.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to assist with arrangements for the international monitoring of the forthcoming Nigerian elections. [52758]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are considering, with our Commonwealth and other partners, how to respond to General Abubakar's invitation to observe the elections in Nigeria.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from British industry concerning the situation in Nigeria. [52757]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am in contact with a range of companies, either individually or through the West Africa Committee, who represent the majority of British companies active in Nigeria. A welcome has been expressed for recent positive developments in Nigeria.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the restoration of air services between Nigeria and the UK by British Airways. [52760]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am pleased to announce that on 23 July General Abubakar, with immediate effect, lifted the ban on British Airways' flights to Nigeria.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what official contact the Government have had with the Head of State of Nigeria since the visit of the Minister of State. [52756]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister spoke to General Abubakar by telephone on 24 July. He welcomed General Abubakar's statement of 20 July committing himself to the restoration of democratic civilian government by May 1999, after free and fair elections. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister re-iterated that Britain was ready to help Nigeria with the implementation of the programme. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also thanked General Abubakar for resolving the air services dispute.

Biological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the laboratory tests on the fresh samples of missile warhead fragments which were removed from Iraq earlier this year and are alleged to contain traces of VX nerve gas and VX stabiliser are expected to be completed. [53104]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: On 14 July, fresh samples were collected from missile warhead fragments in Iraq by an UNSCOM team including French and Swiss experts. The samples are now being analysed in Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) accredited laboratories in France and Switzerland. UNSCOM does not expect to receive the full results of the new tests before September.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52621]

Mr. Fatchett: The expected replacement programme for official vehicles at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is:

Year	Overseas	Home
1998–1999	189	5
1999–2000	254	9
2000–2001	160	8

Detailed information about the fuel types to be chosen for replacement vehicles to be purchased at FCO Posts overseas is not known. In each case, this will depend on the type of vehicle required, and the availability of fuel types in each country at the time of purchase.

Of the vehicles to be replaced in the FCO home fleet, the five replacement vehicles for 1998–99, have already been bought and consist of 3 petrol saloon cars and 2 diesel commercial vehicles. No advance decisions have been taken about the types of fuel for the replacement vehicles needed in future years. This will be carefully assessed at the time, based on vehicle requirements, technical advances in commercially available fuel types and availability.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what parking facilities for cycles exist at each office or site for which his Department is responsible and for each agency for which he is responsible. [52688]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 28 July 1998]: This Department has 200 secure cycling spaces—108 in London and 92 at Hanslope Park, near Milton Keynes.

Burma

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the situation in Burma. [54149]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to deplore the authorities' disregard for human rights and democracy. Ministerial statements have unequivocally condemned abuses. We continue to exert pressure on the regime to engage in substantive dialogue with opposition leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi. We used our Presidency to renew EU measures against Burma and to draft the tough resolution agreed by the UN Commission on Human Rights in April.

We do not encourage trade with or investment in Burma: in present circumstances we will include in any responses to inquiries about the market from British companies a very clear statement about the nature of the regime; and any briefings will emphasise the Burmese political and human rights situation and the state of the economy.

We also wish to draw attention to the views of the pro-democracy leaders in Burma that it would be inappropriate for tourists to visit Burma at present.

Panel 2000

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Panel 2000 will be making public its recommendations. [54150]

Mr. Fatchett: Panel 2000 is in the final stages of producing a Consultation Document. This is intended to stimulate public debate on how Britain's identity is projected abroad. The Panel will welcome comments from all those with an interest in how Britain is perceived overseas. As soon as the document is finalised it will be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sudan

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the approval of an export licence for the supply of two Bedford trucks to Church Ecumenical Action in Sudan. [54151]

Mr. Fatchett: The Government recently approved the export of two Bedford trucks to CEAS to help with the distribution of humanitarian aid in southern Sudan. While the trucks were once owned by the MOD, they have been stripped of all military hardware and painted white. They will now be used to help ease the terrible crisis in southern Sudan of which we are all aware. We were therefore glad to be able to approve this export as an exception to our interpretation of the EU arms embargo on Sudan. This decision does not affect the Government's continued support for the EU common position on arms exports to Sudan.

Entry Clearance Report

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to lay before the House the report covering 1997 by Dame Elizabeth Anson, the Independent Monitor, of refusal of entry clearance where there is no right of appeal. [54152]

Mr. Robin Cook: I have arranged for copies of Dame Elizabeth's Report covering 1997 to be placed in the Libraries of the House today. I welcome the Report and note Dame Elizabeth's recommendations, which will receive careful consideration.

Wilton Park

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Wilton Park executive agency performed against the targets agreed for 1997–98; and what are the agreed targets for the current year. [54154]

Mr. Fatchett: Wilton Park exceeded all four of the agreed targets set for the 1997–98 financial year, for the number of conference participants, income, cost recovery and cost per head to the FCO overall. The 1997–98 targets were:

Income: £1,554K

Recovery of costs from commercial activities: 78 per cent.

Number of Wilton Park Conference participants: 1,750

Costs to FCO per conference participant: £247.

The following key targets have been agreed for the financial year, 1998–99

To increase overall income to £2,051K.

To increase cost recovery to 81 per cent.

To increase the target for the overall number of Wilton Park Conference participants to 2,000.

To reduce the average cost to the FCO of each participant to £240.

Chagos Archipelago

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to designate vulnerable areas of the Chagos Archipelago as marine protected areas. [51336]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 24 July 1998, Official Report, column 713.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Small Claims Courts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will establish performance measures for small claims courts for the (a) implementation of orders and (b) response times to correspondence from the public. [51850]

Mr. Hoon: The Court Service is not responsible for implementing court orders. This is for the parties to decide. However, the Court Service aims to prepare court orders and reply to correspondence from the public within 5 working days, but no longer than 10 working days. The target for 1997–98 was 92 per cent. within 5 working days, although the courts' achieved 98.3 per cent. This includes the performance of all county courts and the Supreme Court Group.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the enforcement procedures for orders made by small claims courts; and if he will make a statement. [51849]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor recognises that there are widespread concerns about the enforcement of civil court judgments, including judgments resulting from the small claims procedure.

For that reason, the Lord Chancellor has directed that a Review be carried out to examine the effectiveness of current methods of enforcement, identify changes necessary to enhance their effectiveness and make recommendations. The full Terms of Reference are set out in my reply of 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 141–42.

Ms Marian Temple

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects the Chief Clerk of Bow County Court to reply to the letter of 17 April 1998 from Ms Marian Temple, 43a Grove Park Road, Wanstead. [51851]

Mr. Hoon: The Chief Executive of the Court Service wrote to my hon. Friend about this matter on 2 June of this year. This letter was also in reply to Ms Temple's letter of 17 April. At the time Ms Temple wrote, the court was experiencing difficulties and delays largely due to the introduction of a new computerised system, which has been introduced in all county courts. These problems and delays have now been resolved.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52696]

Mr. Hoon: The information requested is listed in the following tables.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what definite offers he has received from companies willing to replace moneys currently received from tobacco companies for sports sponsorship; [52515]

(2) when the Tobacco Sponsorship Task Force last met; who attended the meeting; and what recommendations were agreed; [52514]

(3) what research his Department has evaluated into the extent to which companies would be prepared to replace tobacco sponsorship of sport. [52509]

Mr. Banks: The Task Force has not yet been formally constituted, although I have had an initial informal meeting with sports and business interest, and will hold a further meeting in the autumn when the current exercise to collect sponsorship information from the sports concerned should be completed.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from arts organisations in the United Kingdom regarding withdrawal of tobacco companies' support. [52512]

Mr. Banks: In the last 15 months, my Department has received written representations from four arts organisations in the United Kingdom, expressing concern about the potential impact of any future withdrawal of support by tobacco companies.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what assessment he has made of whether the period of time set out by the EU Directive on Tobacco Advertising for the withdrawal of sports sponsorship will be complied with; [52511]

(2) if he will list those events his Department will treat as world level events in accordance with the terms of the EU Directive on tobacco advertising. [52513]

Mr. Banks: The future individual sponsorship arrangements are matters for the sports and businesses concerned, although they will have to comply with the legal requirements of the European Union Tobacco Advertising Directive. The Government's detailed proposals for implementing the Directive will be set out in a White Paper to be issued later this year.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will undertake a study into the financial implications for sport of the EU Directive on Tobacco Advertising. [52508]

Mr. Banks: I have no plans to do so. I have set up a Task Force of sports and business interests to help identify and secure alternative sponsors.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52949]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 July 1998]: My Department has not undertaken any compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52948]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 July 1998]: My Department has not published any compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52950]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 July 1998]: My Department has not published any compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997. There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or resulting in a saving to business.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52577]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department is currently considering how best to support the New Deal programme and will be finalising plans shortly.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52292]

Mr. Chris Smith: For any significant construction of buildings, the Department employs professional project managers, and, where applicable, planning supervisors. They would be responsible for ensuring compliance with the Construction (Design and Management) Regulations 1994. If the project did not require notification under those regulations, they would be responsible for ensuring compliance with the Control of Asbestos at Work (Amendment) Regulations 1992, plus others where specialist work is required.

Cricket Test Matches (Live Coverage)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many representations he has received opposing the Gordon Committee's recommendations to remove live coverage of cricket test matches played in England from the events listed under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996; and how many of those representations have been from hon. Members. [52451]

Mr. Chris Smith: Between the publication of the report of Lord Gordon's Advisory Group on 20 March and my announcement of the revised list on 25 June, I received 699 representations opposing the Group's recommendations on Test cricket. Of the 103 hon. Members whose representations are included in that figure, 36 expressed opposition to the Gordon proposals. 67 hon. Members enclosed letters from their constituents without comment.

Football Clubs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the impact on soccer in England of UEFA's proposed ban on multi-club ownership. [52332]

Mr. Banks: I appreciate the concern about the potential impact of the ruling, and it is very important that the integrity of football competitions is not undermined. The football authorities are best placed to decide how far the new ruling is required to ensure fair competition, and pursue as necessary with UEFA. I am discussing the implications with interested parties.

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the reviews his Department and its predecessors, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48514]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport was created in July 1997. Its predecessor, the Department of National Heritage (DNH), was created in April 1992 from parts of six Government Departments, and for that reason it is not possible to answer the question in respect of 1974–75 or 1979–80. In 1992–93, DNH initiated the following reviews: review of competitive tendering and market testing in museums and galleries; policy review of the public library service in England and Wales; review of library and information provision in rural areas; study of library services for children and young people; consultation on the future role and financing of the BBC and the Calcutt Review of Press Self-Regulation.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much his Department spent on IT itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52887]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport spent £64,962 on personal computers and £66,678 on file servers in financial year 1997–98. The Department has no mainframes or any mini-computers.

Rugby League

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made for finding a new sponsor for the Rugby League Challenge Cup. [52718]

Mr. Banks: I will chair a Task Force to help all sports in receipt of tobacco sponsorship to identify alternative sponsors. The Task Force has not yet been formally constituted, although I have had an initial informal meeting with sports and business interests, and will hold a further meeting in the autumn when the current exercise to collect sponsorship information from the sports concerned should be completed.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on proposals for a national centre of excellence for Rugby League. [52604]

Mr. Banks: Discussions are ongoing between the Rugby Football League, the British Amateur Rugby League and the English Sports Council with a view to formulating a facilities strategy for rugby league at all levels. Fundamental to that strategy will be the identification of a national centre of excellence as a keystone to a network of local centres, and a feasibility study will shortly be launched to establish a critical path to bring the requirements of the game to fruition.

Tour de France

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he has taken to bring stages of the Tour de France to the United Kingdom. [52605]

Mr. Banks: The British Cycling Federation are constantly lobbying for stages of the Tour de France to return to the United Kingdom. However, with the race's planned visits to other countries already booked for the next few years, they are concentrating their energies on promoting our own annual international stage race, the Prutour.

English Tourist Board

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many written communications he has received (a) in favour and (b) against the continued existence of the English Tourist Board. [52748]

Mr. Chris Smith: To date, we have received 178 written communications in response to press speculation, of which
(a) 176 favour the continued existence of the ETB; and
(b) 2 are against.

Sport (Women)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of Lottery money has been apportioned to women's sport groups since 1 May 1997. [51780]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 23 July 1998]: All English Sports Council (ESC) Lottery awards, capital or revenue, are accessible to women's sport groups, as openness and equality are essential principles of Lottery Sport funding.

There are currently 589 female athletes benefiting from Lottery funding under the World Class Performance Programme.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many of the vehicles due for replacement by (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–01 will be replaced by vehicles using (1) petrol, (2) diesel, (3) natural gas, (4) electric batteries and (5) other. [52618]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The information for the Department (including The Royal Parks agency and the Government Art Collection) is as follows:

	Number of vehicles to be replaced each year
Fuel Type	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–2001
Petrol (unleaded – vehicles fitted with catalyst)	3	–	–
Diesel (vehicles fitted with catalyst)	2	5	–
Natural Gas/Electric	–	–	20
Total	5	5	20

The information for the bodies listed in the National Asset Register is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Church Bells

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will (a) provide additional funding and (b) amend the procedures under section 3A of the Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act 1953, to allow English Heritage to fund the repair and replacement of church bells. [52402]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Under the new spending plans announced on 24 July, DCMS's support for the heritage will increase by £10 million over the next three years. It will be for English Heritage to allocate funding between its various grant schemes. There are no plans to amend procedures under section 3A of the Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments Act 1953. Nevertheless, funding is already available for the repair of church bells under the joint English Heritage/Heritage Lottery Fund scheme for churches and other places of worship.

British-made Films

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of British-made films he estimates will be accepted into general cinema distribution in 1998. [53039]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 28 July 1998]: My Department cannot forecast the future distribution of British films. However, the report of the Film Policy Review, "A Bigger Picture", sets out a strategy to strengthen the distribution of British films.

Sir Rodney Walker

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the directorships and other declarable interests in sports-related companies held by Sir Rodney Walker, Chairman of the UK Sports Council. [50741]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 16 July 1998] [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1998, c. 550–51]: The information provided was incomplete, the full answer is as follows.

Sir Rodney Walker has the following directorships and other declarable interests in sports-related companies:

Chairman—Rugby Football League

Chairman—Leicester City Plc

Chairman—Brands Hatch Leisure Plc

Trustee—London Marathon Charitable Trust

Governor—Sports Aid Foundation

Vice President—Youth Charter for Sport

Chairman—Resero Technology Systems Ltd.

The Council has procedures for Members to declare potential conflicts of interest when decisions come before them and to make appropriate arrangements to handle any potential conflicts which arise.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Criticism)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from civil service trade unions about the recent public criticisms of civil servants in the Department of Trade and Industry by the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths). [52867]

Mr. Kilfoyle: None.

DEFENCE

Animal Experiments

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on the use of animals in defence research. [54399]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen North (Mr. Savidge) on 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 40.

Cost-effectiveness

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to ensure that his Department remains open to innovative proposals from industry for more cost-effective ways of meeting defence requirements. [54143]

Mr. Spellar: The close involvement of Industry in conducting the Strategic Defence Review has been of considerable value to MOD. We are determined to build on this to foster closer and more co-operative relationships for the future. With this in mind, I am pleased to be able to announce that, following consultation with Industry, a MOD "Code of Practice on the Handling of Innovative Proposals" has been published today. The code explains what innovative proposals are, how my Department will deal with them, what they should include, and to whom they should be addressed.

A copy of the Code has been placed in the Library of the House.

Royal Naval Hospital Haslar

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the capital expenditure at the Royal Hospital Haslar and its predecessor the Royal Naval Hospital Haslar in each of the last 10 years. [53022]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Major General C. G. Callow to Mr. Peter Viggers, dated 29 July 1998:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about capital expenditure at the Royal Hospital Haslar over the past 10 years as this matter, falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency.

During the financial year 1997/98, £0.939M was expended on capital works. Unfortunately, prior to that financial year, it is not possible to accurately separate capital expenditure from the Hospital's day to day running costs. However, we estimate that capital expenditure costs were approximately:

	£ million
1996–97	13.6
1995–96	7.8
1994–95	2.6
1993–94	3.0
1992–93	1.7

Agency Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 June 1998, Official Report, columns 14–15, for what reasons Post Notes, the staff newsletter of the Defence Postal and Courier Agency, is classified restricted; and if his Department plans to remove this classification. [53372]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Richard Bugler to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 29 July 1998:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the Agency newsletter 'Post Notes', as this matter falls within my area of responsibility in the absence, on leave, of the Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency (DPCSA).

The Chief Executive recently took the decision to classify 'Post Notes' 'Restricted' because he was concerned for the security of both the civilian and military personnel of the Agency, whose personal details and movements are sometimes given in the newsletter. There was some evidence to suggest that the unauthorised reproduction of articles and notes from the newsletter was more widespread than was intended for what is essentially an in-house staff journal. There are currently no plans to remove this classification.

Armed Forces Pay Review Body

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the Supplementary report of the Armed Forces Pay Review Body. [50665]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), 28 July 1998, Official Report, column 132.

Army Recruits

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of regular soldiers were recruited from (i) former territorial army personnel, (ii) the public, including school leavers and (iii) former Army cadets in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [51029]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The percentage origins of regular soldiers are as follows:

percentage

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
(i) Former TA personnel[1]	7.6	7.6	5.4
(ii) The public (including schools leavers)	70.7	71.9	76.8
(iii) Former Army or Combined Cadet Force service	22	20.5	17.8

[1] These figures do not include Reservists mobilised for service in Bosnia, or ex-TA personnel on special S Type engagements

The year 1997–98 represented the best year in numerical terms for recruiting soldiers to the Army since 1991. The increase was largely from among members of the public, reflected in the higher percentage received from this group last year, shown in the table. We are encouraged by this progress, which demonstrates that improving recruitment has been, and continues to be, one of our top priorities.

NATO Expenditure

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the current and planned levels of expenditure on NATO commitments over the planning period; and if he will make a statement. [51890]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 24 July 1998]: The estimated costs of UK forces declared to NATO, and associated support costs, is some £13 billion in the current financial year. We expect the level of expenditure in the coming years to be broadly constant. These forces contribute to a number of missions, under NATO, non-NATO, or national command, in support of the Government's security and defence policy. The UK's annual net contribution to NATO's common budgets, at current exchange rates, and other command and HQ costs, are currently some £220 million.

The costs of the UK contribution to NATO operations in the Balkans for 1997–98 are still being collated.

The Strategic Defence Review stated that NATO will continue as the cornerstone of our defence planning, and that we intend to build on our role as a leading European member of the Alliance.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 July 1998, Official Report, column 186, regarding the Atomic Weapons Establishment, if he will place in the Library a list of the titles of the research projects, specifying the university concerned, and the duration and value of each project. [53159]

Mr. Spellar: Details of the research projects, their duration and values are commercially confidential and I must, therefore, withhold this information in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to Third party commercial confidences.

As I said in my answer of the 15 July 1998, Official Report, column 186, I will write to my hon. Friend regarding the universities involved and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each incident involving (a) radioactive and (b) toxic material at (i) AWE Burghfield and (ii) AWE Aldermaston in the last five years. [52162]

Mr. Spellar: The information, in the form requested, is classified and I am, therefore, withholding it in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to Defence, Security and International Relations.

However, in total over the last five years, there have been 802 incidents involving radioactive material, 12 of which have been injury incidents and 642 incidents involving toxic material, 281 of which have been injury incidents. All members of staff at AWE are encouraged to report incidents of all types as part of a safety awareness campaign and the majority of the injuries reported are of a very minor nature, such as cuts or abrasions.

These figures compare very favourably with industry in general and, over the past 5 years there has been a year on year reduction in the number of injury incidents. In fact, AWE have recently been awarded a Gold Award for workplace safety by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of the reduced warhead production programme on radioactive emissions from AWE, Aldermaston. [52212]

Mr. Spellar: Activities such as decommissioning and maintaining safety standards within facilities make up by far the largest proportion of discharges from AWE, Aldermaston. The reduction in the number of warheads announced in the Strategic Defence Review is expected to have a minimal effect on emissions from the site.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the facilities intended to be decommissioned at AWE Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement on progress in decommissioning each of these facilities. [52163]

Mr. Spellar: Buildings A37 and A50 at AWE, Aldermaston are currently undergoing decommissioning. Building A1.1 and parts of A45 are being prepared for decommissioning by Post Operative Clear Out, POCO. There will be a rolling programme of POCO and decommissioning as buildings come out of use in the future.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the total amount of radioactive waste to be generated as a result of decommissioning operations at AWE Aldermaston; how much of this waste is intended to be stored on-site; and what the total estimated cost of decommissioning will be. [52164]

Mr. Spellar: The current estimate of the amount of radioactive waste expected to result from the decommissioning of buildings at AWE, Aldermaston is based on a relatively small sample of completed work. It is, therefore, subject to confirmation. Measures to reduce the amount of waste generated during decommissioning can be expected to improve as more experience is gained.

Nonetheless, the current estimate is that a total of 39,000 cubic metres of radioactive waste will be generated in the next 10 years at AWE, Aldermaston. Of this, 3,000 cubic metres is expected to be categorised as Intermediate Level Waste and will be stored on site. The estimated cost of the associated decommissioning work over the 10 year period is some £460m.

Territorial Army

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army battalions and regiments are commanded by (a) TA commanding officers and (b) regular army commanding officers, broken down by arm and service, and what were the figures (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three years ago. [53257]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The information is as follows:

	Regular COs				TA COs
	1995	1996	1997	1998	1995	1996	1997	1998
Royal Armoured Corps	2	3	2	2	3	2	5	5
Royal Artillery	3	2	2	1	3	4	4	5
Royal Engineers	7	5	6	7	2	4	3	2
Royal Signals	6	8	7	5	5	3	4	6
Infantry	28	32	29	26	8	4	4	7
Army Air Corps	—	1	1	1	—	—	—	—
Royal Logistic Corps	4	4	5	6	4	3	2	1
Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers	3	3	3	3	1	2	2	2
Army Medical Service	1	3	5	4	16	14	12	13
University Officer Training Corps	14	12	12	14	5	7	7	5

All figures are as at mid July which is the date at which COs would normally take up appointment. The figures for Infantry excluding SAS(V), the Gibraltar Regt. and the Royal Irish (Home Service).

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the implementation of the Strategic Defence Review will have upon the number of Territorial Army soldiers (a) serving in Norfolk and (b) based in Norwich. [53182]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following the announcement of the results of the Strategic Defence Review, work has now commenced to establish the future organisation and structure of the Territorial Army. It is too early to say how this work will affect the numbers of TA soldiers serving in any particular area, but we expect to be in a position to make detailed announcements during the Autumn.

Soldiers (Imprisonment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving soldiers sentenced to imprisonment or detention in the last 10 years have been (a) discharged and (b) retained. [48362]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 July 1998]: Details of those discharged and retained following the imposition of a custodial sentence are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances the Army Board may decide to discharge a soldier serving a term of imprisonment after that soldier has been retained by his commanding officer; what rules would govern such discharges; and how many such decisions have been made in the last 10 years. [48365]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 July 1998]: Under the terms of Queen's Regulations for the Army, paragraph 9.404, a soldier is to be discharged if he has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment. Commanding Officers do not have the authority to retain soldiers in such circumstances, though they can make a submission to the chain of command for a soldier's retention if there are believed to be exceptional reasons for doing so. It is not required that the Army Board consider these cases, although the Board will adjudicate when the chain of command submits a case to them.

Guardsmen Wright and Fisher

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1998, Official Report, columns 282–83, by an officer of what rank and on what date the decision was taken to retain Guardsmen Fisher and Wright following their conviction. [48363]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 8 July 1998]: The future of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright is a matter for decision by the Army Board. The Board has not yet made any decision regarding the future in the Army of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright.

Sri Lankan Army Staff College

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the support in terms of (a) finance, (b) personnel and (c) advice which his Department is supplying to the Sri Lankan Army Staff College at Batafanda. [50940]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 17 July 1998]: My Department currently provides one Colonel as an instructor at the Sri Lankan Army Staff College. The cost of this post, some £116,991 per annum, is shared between the FCO and MOD and includes elements to cover the Colonel's pay and allowances, his national insurance and pension contributions, local overseas allowances, loan service pay and incidental movements costs. The Colonel is currently serving on a one year tour of duty.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if each missile on board Trident submarines will carry the same number of warheads; and if he will make a statement. [52217]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding the information requested under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (i) minimum and (ii) maximum range of the Trident missile as deployed in accordance with the plans announced in the Strategic Defence Review. [52213]

Mr. George Robertson: The maximum range of the Trident D5 missile is in the region of 6,000 miles. I am withholding further details of the performance of the Trident missile under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to defence, security and international relations.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many days each of Britain's Trident submarines has spent on patrol in each of the last four years. [52168]

Mr. George Robertson: In each of the last four years the number of days that each Trident submarine spent on patrol is as follows:

	1995	1996	1997	1998
Vanguard	211	132	184	65
Victorious	0	169	181	89
Vigilant	0	0	0	49
Vengeance			(in build)

The remaining patrol days in 1995 and 1996 were covered by our last Resolution class submarines. The figures for 1998 cover the period up to 22 July.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the reasons for the payments made to the US Government under the heading Trident Refit Feasibility Study; and if he will list the total amount to be paid for this item. [52166]

Mr. Spellar: The feasibility studies were carried out on behalf of the United Kingdom into the emergency dry-docking of United Kingdom Trident submarines in the United States. This has nothing to do with refitting. The studies were undertaken to determine the practicability of conducting an emergency docking and essential repairs in the event that United Kingdom Trident submarines suffered damage or failure while deployed in the United States for their work-up trials. The total amount we expect to pay for these studies is in the region of £850,000, subject to exchange rate variations.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is intended to roll-out the fourth Trident submarine. [52183]

Mr. George Robertson: The fourth Trident submarine, HMS Vengeance, is due to be rolled out on 19 September 1998.

Nuclear Materials (Recycling)

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to recycle the nuclear material extracted from retired nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement. [52169]

Mr. Spellar: The amount of nuclear material declared in the Strategic Defence Review includes that to be extracted from retired nuclear weapons. This will be retained for Defence purposes.

Plutonium Contamination

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the plutonium contamination incident at AWE, Aldermaston on 15 December 1997; and if he will place in the Library copies of his Department's reports on this incident. [52160]

Mr. Spellar: This matter is currently the subject of a prosecution of the Atomic Weapons Establishment plc. and Hunting-BRAE Ltd., the Atomic Weapons Establishment's managing contractor, by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. The matter, is therefore, sub judice and I must withhold details under Exemption 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, relating to Law Enforcement and Legal Proceedings.

HMS Spartan

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of cancelling the planned refit of HMS Spartan at Rosyth. [52737]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: We estimate that the irrecoverable costs which would have arisen from the cancellation of HMS Spartan at Rosyth would have amounted to about £60 million. In addition, we estimate that the cost of reimbursing Babcock Rosyth Defence Limited, the owners of the Dockyard, for their redundancy costs would have been about £30 million.

Royal Marine Reserve

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future role of the Royal Marine Reserve following the Strategic Defence Review. [52762]

Mr. George Robertson: No changes are planned to the role of the Royal Marines Reserve following the Strategic Defence Review.

Cycling

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the employees of his Department and of the employees of each agency for which he is responsible cycle to work; and what measures he plans to increase that proportion. [52681]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Information on the number of Ministry of Defence and Defence Agency personnel that cycle to work is not available. However, this data and much more covering a very large number of MoD sites will be gathered during the preparation of departmental Green Transport Plans.

HMS Splendid

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of cancelling the refit of HMS Splendid at Devonport. [52738]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: No costs have been incurred to-date in respect of the decision to cancel HMS Splendid's refit, which had been planned to take place at Devonport in 2003. Devonport Management Limited, the owners of the Dockyard, are required, as far as is possible, to mitigate the loss of the refit. In addition, we may decide to re-profile Devonport's allocated workload to take account of the peaks and troughs in the programme, thereby reducing the effect of the cancellation. Once this work has been completed, nearer to 2003, we anticipate that the irrecoverable costs associated with the loss of Splendid will be minimal, but it is too early to say. It is also too early to say whether any redundancy costs, for which MOD might be liable, will arise.

Armed Forces Historical Branches

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to combine the Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force historical branches. [52800]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The three Service Historical Branches are collocated and work closely together. There are currently no plans to create a Defence Historical Branch.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52702]

Mr. Spellar: The latest information on expenditure on defence research can be found in Table 2.1 of "Science, Engineering and Technology Statistics 1998", published on 13 July 1998 (CM 4006). A complete list of all organisations supplying research to MOD is not held. However, the principal sources of research for the MOD are the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, the Atomic Weapons Establishment, and the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency, although much of the research activity itself is subcontracted to industry.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals from Defence Costs Study 15 on defence medical services remain outstanding. [53023]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are no proposals outstanding from Defence Costs Study 15. Some recommendations have been subject to further work in the light of subsequent studies.

West Indies Guard Ship

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the West Indies Guard Ship. [52655]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: We will continue to deploy a West Indies Guard Ship (WIGS). However, following the adjustments in destroyer and frigate numbers as part of the Strategic Defence Review we are adopting a more flexible approach to some of our peacetime Naval tasks, including that in the Caribbean, designed to make more efficient use of our naval assets.

We will maintain a very high level of commitment to the Caribbean with a destroyer or frigate deployed as WIGS for a large part of the year. It will be present during the whole of the hurricane season with flexibility to increase coverage at other times by adjusting other commitments, if necessary. During that part of the year when a destroyer or frigate is not in the Caribbean, a destroyer or frigate will be earmarked to deploy there at short notice, and when other ships deploy to the region, they will be used to cover some of the WIGS tasks.

We aim to maintain the effectiveness of our counter drugs efforts by ensuring that the WIGS programme is focused more on counter-drugs operations, and by involving other RN maritime assets in this work when they are in the region.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of remediating depleted uranium contaminated battlefields in Kuwait and Iraq. [43051]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence has made no assessment of the advantages of remediating areas in Kuwait and Iraq in which depleted uranium (DU) based ammunition was fired during the Gulf conflict; nor has any specific review of the environmental and health effects of firing this ammunition in the Gulf been undertaken by MOD. The Government do not have any information concerning the levels of DU currently present in Kuwait or southern Iraq and cannot, therefore, comment on this matter in any detail. The use of the DU rounds by UK forces was not in conflict with the United Nations Charter or any other International agreement or convention. In the use of these rounds and other weaponry, my Department complies strictly with international law.

Divisional Headquarters, Shrewsbury

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to announce his decision on the future of the divisional headquarters in Shrewsbury. [50551]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No proposals on the future of the divisional headquarters at Shrewsbury have been made to Ministers. Closure of the headquarters is not, however, an option being considered under the review by the Army of its divisional and district structure in the UK.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what financial help towards housing costs is available to those claiming jobseeker's allowance who (a) are tenants and (b) have a mortgage. [52372]

Mr. Denham: For those Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) claimants who are tenants, help with housing costs is mostly provided through the Housing Benefit scheme. For those with a mortgage, help for those who are eligible is included in their JSA payment.

Where tenants are receiving income-based JSA they are "passported" to maximum Housing Benefit. Deductions may be made from the maximum Housing Benefit where non-dependents are involved. Tenants who are receiving contribution-based JSA have to make a claim for Housing Benefit on low-income grounds from their local authority.

Those receiving income-based JSA receive a contribution towards the interest payable on loans to purchase the home and certain home improvements and some other housing costs which are not met by Housing Benefit. It does not cover all mortgage liabilities, for example capital repayments, endowment premiums, insurance or help with arrears. There is no help with mortgage payments for those who are only entitled to contribution-based JSA.

War Pensions

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which local authorities in England and Wales do not disregard war pensions totally when assessing housing benefits and local authority charges; what amount of disregard these local authorities currently apply; which political party controls the local authorities concerned or, where there is no overall control, which party has the most seats on the council; if he intends to extend the statutory requirement to disregard only the first £10 of a war pension in England and Wales; what assessment he has made of procedures in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [52572]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) to my hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe and Sale, East (Mr. Goggins) on 29 July 1997, Official Report, column 231.

Mandatory disregards for War Disablement and War Widow's Pensions already exist in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. This is in recognition of the special nature of these pensions, and ensure pensioners receive preferential treatment. For example, a war pensioner can currently have between £10 and £175 of his pension disregarded on a statutory basis.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the Child Support Agency cost to run in the last financial year. [53555]

Mr. Denham: The cost of running the Child Support Agency in 1997/98 was £210.6 million.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the costs to the Child Support Agency of the implementation of the Green Paper, "CHILDREN FIRST: a new approach to child support". [53572]

Mr. Denham: The Government are consulting over their proposals for reforming the current child support scheme and the detailed arrangements will not be decided until that process has been concluded. It follows that we cannot, at this early stage, estimate the full costs to the Child Support Agency of moving to a radically simpler system. However, excluding computer costs which may form part of a wider Departmental programme, transitional costs could be in the order of £30 million spread over two to three years.

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the new procedural instructions will be put in place for the payment of arrears in cases of CSA maladministration. [52245]

Mr. Denham: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide a consistent, fair and efficient service to all its clients. We have set out proposals for radical reform in our Green Paper "Children First: a new approach to child support" (Cm 3992).

The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Ian Pearson, dated 28 July 1998:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about new procedural instructions for payment of arrears in the Child Support Agency.

The Agency is extending its special payments scheme to make provision in certain circumstances for payments of arrears to be made to parents with care. Where there is clear evidence that the Agency's maladministration has caused the arrears to accrue we will consider the payment of arrears to the parent with care in advance of maintenance being received from the non-resident parent.

The criteria to be used for considering such payments are expected to be finalised shortly. These have been developed in consultation with the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. Once the criteria have been agreed, procedures for the consideration and payment of arrears will be written as a matter of urgency so that payments that are appropriate can be made without any further delay.

Once available, guidance will be placed in the Library.

I hope this is helpful.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single pensioners and pensioner couples he expects to qualify for the guaranteed minimum income who would not qualify for income support if it were increased only in line with prices. [52411]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

IS Pensioner Benefit Units

Thousand

Year	Floaters-on from April 1999 increases Singles	Couples
1999–2000	55	10
2000–01	50	10
2001–02	50	10

Notes:
1. All estimates exclude cases in residential care and nursing homes as insufficient information is available on these cases to be able accurately to model the additional cases who may float-on under the increases
2. Estimates have been based upon latest Income Support forecasts, following the changes announced as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, and information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey
3. Under Income Support rules, one partner in a couple need be aged over 60 years to be classed as a couple pensioner benefit unit
4. Estimates have been rounded to the nearest 5,000 cases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated additional cost of the guaranteed minimum income compared with that of uprating income support for pensioners in line with prices, assuming no increase in take-up; and by how much this figure would be increased if full take-up were achieved. [52413]

Mr. Denham: The table illustrates the estimated additional expenditure effect of increasing the Income Support rates above the normal price uprating for:
(a) existing cases and those who "float on" as a result of the increase and;
(b) those pensioners who become entitled as a result of activity to increase take-up.

Estimated expenditure effects of increases to Income Support rates from April 1999

£ million, cash prices

Year	Increases to IS rates based on current take-up rates	Increases to IS rates based on 85 per cent. take-up expenditure
1999–2000	265	275
2000–01	270	305
2001–02	270	330

Notes:
1. All estimates exclude cases in residential care and nursing homes as insufficient information is available on these cases to be able to accurately model the additional cases who may float-on under the increases
2. Estimates have been based upon latest Income Support forecasts, following the changes announced as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, and information from the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey
3. Estimates relate to the expenditure effects in Income Support only
4. Estimates have been rounded to the nearest £5 million
5. Take-up estimates are based on achieving 85 per cent. take-up expenditure by the end of year 3.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much the guaranteed minimum income will be higher for older pensioners. [52412]

Mr. Denham: The current rates of Income Support will be increased by £4.60 per week for single pensioners aged 75 to 79, and by £4.70 per week for pensioners aged 80 and over.

The full range of the increases is given in the table.

Age	Current rate: single	Rate from April 1999	Current rate: couple	Rate from April 1999
60–74	70.45	75.00	109.35	116.60
75–79	72.70	77.30	112.55	119.85
80+[1]	77.55	82.25	117.90	125.30

[1] The rate for pensioners aged 80+ also applies to pensioners aged 60 and over, who are disabled

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the full year cost of disregarding the first £10 of income from (a) savings and (b) private pensions when calculating means-tested benefits for all pensioners. [52573]

Mr. Denham: No account is taken of actual income from savings. It is not possible to provide information on personal pensions as they cannot be identified separately from other types of annuity income in the Family Resources Survey. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimated annual expenditure across the income related benefit system from disregarding the first £10 of income from occupational pensions

Costs in Income Support were obtained from the 1998–99 Income Support Simulation Model, based on the May 1996 Quarterly Statistical Inquiry, and those for Housing Benefit/Council Tax Benefit were calculated from the 1998–99 Policy Simulation Model, which is based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the procedures and regulations followed by the Independent Tribunal Service in relation to the appeal for a disability living allowance appeal lodged on 17 June 1997 by William Kirane of Caernarfon; and if he will review the reply sent by Mr. Peter Mathison of the Benefits Agency dated 25 June sent in response to representations made by the right hon. Member for Caernarfon to the Secretary of State for Social Security of 23 April. [53563]

Mr. Denham: The operation of the appeals system is a matter for the Independent Tribunal Service. However, one of the purposes of the changes which will be introduced under the Social Security Act 1998 is to speed up the hearing of appeals.

In respect of the reply sent previously concerning the case of William Kirrane of Caernarfon, I have asked Peter Mathison to look into the matter and to write to you again.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated average cost of (a) a review of a DLA application and (b) an appeal against a DLA award. [52780]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is the estimated average cost of (a) a review of a Disability Living Allowance (DLA) application and (b) an appeal against a DLA award.

The information requested is not readily available since the costs will be made up of a variable number of items, depending on the circumstances of the case.

Two of the major costs are staff and medical evidence. If a review is requested under 3 months, the staffing costs would be £23.51 per review. If a review is requested over 3 months, the staffing cost would be £16.68. The cost of an appeal would be £34.82.

Costs attributable to obtaining further medical evidence, depends on the nature of the evidence required. The cost of obtaining a General Practitioners Factual Report is £17.00. The cost of obtaining an Examining Medical Practitioners Report is £56.90.

Tribunal costs will also vary. An average cost, however, is £85.28 per hearing, derived by dividing the whole cost of setting up a Tribunal, £343.28, by the number of listings per day.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the population claiming social security benefits have (a) never paid national insurance contributions and (b) not paid sufficient national insurance contributions to qualify for the contributory benefit claimed; and if he will quantify the total expenditure for (a) and (b) for (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98 and the estimated expenditure for (1) 1998–99, (2) 1990–2000, (3) 2000–01 and (4) 2001–02. [52545]

Mr. Denham: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those over the retirement age have (a) not paid any national insurance contributions and (b) paid insufficient to qualify for a full contributory pension. [52526]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

There are 10.4 million people over pension age residing in Great Britain. Of these 6.7 million receive a full contributory pension based on either their own or their spouse's contributions, and 3.3 million receive a pension at less than the full rate.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the receipts from National Insurance contributions split between (i) employers and (ii) employees in (a) cash terms and (b) at June 1998 prices for each year since 1982–83. [53209]

Mr. Denham: The information is in the table.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the extent of benefit fraud for each of the benefits provided through the Benefits Agency in the current year; and if he will make a statement on plans to tackle fraud. [53252]

Mr. Denham: Figures estimating the extent of benefit fraud for each of the benefits provided through the Benefits Agency (BA) are not available for the current year. Reliable estimates of the level of fraud within individual benefits are informed by the BA's Benefit Review programme. These reviews are a snapshot of the level of fraud at the time the review was carried out, and these estimates can change. The first review of each benefit sets a baseline to establish the nature and extent of incorrectness, including fraud and abuse, and repeat exercises enable the Benefits Agency to identify changes in those patterns over time. The programme of Benefit Reviews of all major benefits began in 1994 and the table details the findings of all the reviews of BA benefits completed so far.

The Government are determined to reduce the level of fraud and have set out their new comprehensive anti-fraud strategy in the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future". The strategy will focus on minimising the opportunity to commit fraud in the first place with improved benefit design and tighter operational procedures. We will also seek to establish an environment conducive to anti-fraud work and to work in partnership with others across central and local government and in public bodies and the private sector. A key element is the development of better measures of the amount of fraud, and the savings which flow from particular preventive and detective activities.

Benefit	Percentage of claims where fraud is confirmed or strongly suspected	Estimated level of fraud	Results announced
Income Support (First Review)	9.7	£1.4 billion	July 1995
Unemployment Benefit	7.8	£86 million	July 1995

Invalid Care Allowance	6.5	£37 million	July 1996

Disability Living Allowance	12.2	£499 million	February 1997
Income Support (Second Review)	11.1	£1.77 billion	July 1997
Child Benefit/Child Benefit (Lone Parent)	[1]5.4	[2]£184 million	July 1998

[2] Presented as £51.6 million 'fraud' and £132.5 million 'high suspicion of fraud' in the CHB review report

Notes:
1. Information is based on the results of Benefit Reviews completed so far
2. The total figures from each of the reviews cannot be added together to give total overpayments. This is because an unquantified proportion of the estimate for fraud will not result in losses/overpayments overall. For example, non-entitlement to Invalid Care Allowance can result in payment of a higher rate of another benefit such as Income Support
3. As explained in the Green Paper "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future", estimating fraud in Disability Living Allowance presents particular difficulties. This is because entitlement depends upon care and mobility needs which are not easily estimated other than through the formal adjudication process. As a result, the estimates of confirmed and strongly suspected fraud for DLA will include errors by customers

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the performance of the London Organised Fraud Investigation Team indicating (a) the number of cases (i) investigated, (ii) completed, (iii) rejected and (iv) resulting in prosecutions and (b) the level of (i) claimant fraud, (ii) landlord fraud, (iii) landlord and claimant fraud and (iv) overpayment; what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the team against its agreed objectives; and if he will make a statement. [53582]

Mr. Denham: The London Organised Fraud Investigation Team (LOFIT) was established in December 1996 as a specialist dedicated team to investigate and combat organised fraud in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit in London.

The latest available performance figures are for the period from 2 December 1996 to 31 March 1998. During this period, 73 cases were referred to LOFIT. Of these cases, 47 have been, or are being, investigated; 13 cases have been completed; 26 cases were rejected; and 4 reached prosecution stage. The table shows investigation cases categorised by type of fraud and total amount of overpayment identified.

	Number of cases	Overpayments identified (£)
Claimant	13	192,890
Claimant and landlord collusion	10	729,340
Landlord	18	407,144
Multiple identity cases not included above	6	87,719
Total	47	1,417,093

The planned end of year Value For Money study by the Audit Commission is in its final stages and will be published shortly. We have also arranged for the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate to undertake a joint study with the Association of London Government to evaluate the effectiveness of LOFIT in tackling organised fraud and in working with other organisations in the field.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases of benefit fraud have been detected in each month since 1 May 1997. [53109]

Mr. Denham: Tackling fraud and abuse is a top priority for the Government. Questions on Benefits Agency operational matters are the responsibility of its Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of cases of benefit fraud which have been detected in each month since 1st May 1997.

The figures in the attached table detail the number of successful investigations carried out by Benefit Fraud Investigation Service month by month since May 1997.

Benefits Agency Security Investigation Service (BASIS) investigates fraud of an organised or systematic nature which tends to involve longer periods of investigation and results are only available for the year. BASIS carried out 1,742 successful investigations for the period April 1997 to March 1998.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for 1999–2000 (a) the additional cost, (b) the additional income to parents with care and (c) the likely overall reduction in income support payments to parents with care if a £10 maintenance disregard is introduced in April 1999. [52537]

Mr. Denham: The additional cost of a £10 maintenance disregard for parents with care on Income Support would be £100 million in 1999–2000, or £80 million if the Child Maintenance Bonus were also to be abolished. The average gain to parents with care would be around £8.50 a week. There would be no reduction in Income Support payments, although maintenance in excess of £10 a week would continue to be taken into account as now.

World Day for the Eradication of Poverty

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has to mark 17 October as the World Day for the Eradication of Poverty. [53006]

Mr. Denham: The Government are making tackling poverty a priority for every day through their policies designed to help people into work where appropriate and to make extra help available where it is not, such as the guaranteed minimum income recently announced for pensioners.

Widowers and Widows Benefit

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to equalise benefits between widowers and widows; and if he will make a statement. [53366]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Answer I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Mr. Gorrie) on 23 June 1997, Official Report, column 413.

Low Income Gas Users

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money was paid to British Gas on behalf of low income gas users in the last year for which figures are available in the form of interim payments; how many overpayments were made; how much of the overpayment has been recovered; and to what other companies interim payments are made on behalf of low income customers. [52343]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The information is not available in the format requested. The available information is as set out.

In 1997–98 £59.4 million was paid to British Gas in the form of interim payments. We also have the facility to make payments to the following companies:

Scottish Gas
Eastern Electricity
East Midlands Electricity
London Electricity
Manweb
Midlands Electricity
Northern Electricity
Seeboard
Scottish Hydro-electric
Scottish Power
South Wales Electric
South Western Electric Southern Electric
United Utilities
Yorkshire Electricity.

Benefits Office, Evesham

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the closure of the Evesham Benefits Office on the service available to residents of the Vale of Evesham; and if he will make a statement. [52843]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Peter Mathison, its Chief Executive. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Peter Luff, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question, asking what assessment she has made of the impact of the closure of the Evesham Benefits Office on the service available to residents of the Vale of Evesham.

The Benefits Agency (BA)'s Evesham caller office was open on a part-time basis of 2 days per week (5½ hours a day), which offered a service limited to customer enquiries and the provision of advice and information. This office was closed at the end of March 1998 following an extensive consultation exercise. During this exercise the BA identified that services to the customer could be improved with closer working with the Local Authority and by using existing facilities at Worcester BA office and Evesham Employment Service Jobcentre (ESJ).

Since the introduction of Jobseekers Allowance in October 1996 there is a full-time BA presence in Evesham ESJ and BA representatives in ESJs are prepared and equipped to deal with enquiries from other customers.

Since the closure of the caller office, the level of enquiries from Evesham customers has been carefully monitored. There has been no noticeable effect on telephone enquiries or personal callers to the Worcester BA office, or on the level of callers to the BA representative located in the Evesham ESJ.

The Evesham "One Stop Shop", a facility run by the Local Authority, had undertaken to boost its service following the closure of the caller office, and was provided with training and leaflets to this end. The number of enquiries dealt with by the "One Stop Shop" increased from 311 for three months prior to the closure to 390 in the three months ending 30 June 1998. However, this relates to all enquiries, not just BA queries. Nevertheless, the staff there report a greater demand for BA leaflets since the closure of the Evesham caller office. It is perceived therefore that the number of enquiries on BA matters has also increased to some extent. The "One Stop Shop" is able to cope with this extra volume of business.

I hope that this is helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many failed winter fuel payments there were in the current year; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for failed payments. [53177]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. Originally a total of £400 million was committed for two years (97/98 and 98/99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay.

As announced to the House by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State on 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 703–05 a further £0.5 billion has been allocated to extend the scheme beyond next winter. This will provide each eligible pensioner household with a £20 Winter Fuel payment.

The administration of Winter Fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Iain Duncan Smith, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many failed winter fuel payments there were and what assessment has been made of the reasons for the failed payments.

The making of winter fuel payments to almost 10 million pensioners, in over seven million households, before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency (BA). This has been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

By 31 January 1998 we had issued £72,080,700 to 1,441,614 of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support (IS) or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA). By the end of March we had issued a further £122,930,850 to a further 8,326,715 pensioners.

Three different methods of payment have been used to make the payments to all eligible pensioners. A number of factors were taken into account in determining the appropriate method. The factors included: the normal method of payment used by the customer to receive their benefit; the ability of the relevant benefit system to make one-off payments by a number of different methods; the speed in which payments could be made; and, the cost and timescales required to introduce new methods of payment on individual computer systems. Payments were made based on information held on our computer systems during week commencing 5 January 1998. Payments have been made by the following three routes:

Automated Credit Transfer direct to the pensioner's bank or building society account where the qualifying benefit is paid in this way (except where the qualifying benefit was Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Invalid Care Allowance, an industrial injury benefit, or one administered by the War Pensions Agency);

Payable order sent to the pensioner's home address, where the qualifying benefit is Invalid Care Allowance, an industrial injury benefit, or one administered by the War Pensions Agency; otherwise, Girocheque sent to the pensioner's home address or the Post Office where the pensioner collects their qualifying benefit.

The decision to send girocheques to the pensioners' Post Office was based on the fact that these customers represented by far the largest qualifying group and this was considered the most secure method of payment for them.

However, not all those payments sent to the Post Offices were collected by the pensioners concerned. We have estimated that around 107,600 (2 per cent. of the volume issued) were not collected and these girocheques were returned to the nearest BA office, after 1 May 1998.

BA District offices have been investigating the reasons for the non-collection, which have included recent death, hospitalisation, absence on holiday or the pensioner using a different Post Office. This is a time consuming process. Our deadline for the clearance of the payments which were returned was 30 June 1998. Feedback from the BA's District offices indicate that the majority of payments have now been made.

As stated previously, according to our records, all payments should now have been made. The total amount of money paid out in Winter Fuel Payments to pensioners is £195,011,550. Priority was given to making the payments of £50 to the poorest pensioners, those receiving IS or income-based JSA.

Other eligible pensioner households were entitled to a payment of £20. If there was more than one eligible pensioner in the household, each eligible pensioner was entitled to £10. In order to establish whether a payment of £20 or £10 was appropriate it was necessary to establish eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive. To achieve this it was necessary to correlate data in around fifteen million computer records, involving fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems.

The legislation states that the decision on whether a £10 or £20 payment was due would be based on 'official records'. Where pensioners live alone, or are the only eligible pensioner in a household, they were entitled to £20; otherwise, they were entitled to £10, including each person in a pensioner couple if they were both in receipt of a qualifying benefit.

The £20 and £10 payments were issued in March 1998 following the data correlation exercise. Due to the huge volume of these payments, over 8 million, they were issued on a staged basis throughout March. Around 5 million of these payments were made by girocheque to the Post Office network and the BA liaised closely with the Post Office Counters Limited to try and ensure the prompt receipt of the payments by the pensioners concerned.

All eligible pensioners should now have been issued with a Winter Fuel Payment, with the exception of a small number where BA is having difficulties in ascertaining the reason for non-collection from the Post Office. Where someone has not received a payment but is expecting one, they should contact the office which normally deals with their pension or benefit.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position. I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is her Department's deadline for the clearance of all overdue winter fuel payments; [51938]

(2) how his Department determines the priorities for payment of the winter fuel payment; [51937]

(3) if he will make a statement on the factors underlying the delays in paying out the winter fuel payment of £20; [51939]

(4) what is the value of the backlog of the winter fuel payment to pensioners; [51940]

(5) how much money has been paid out in the winter fuel payment to pensioners; and how much is still owing. [52008]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for two years (1997–98 and 1998–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Michael Colvin, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning winter fuel payments scheme.

The making of winter fuel payments to almost 10 million pensioners, in over seven million households, before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency (BA). This has been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many pensioners have returned overpayments of winter fuel payment to her Department; [53030]

(2) how many winter fuel payments were the subject of administrative error; [53032]

(3) in how many cases official records used for the distribution of winter fuel payments have been found to be incorrect; [53031]

(4) how many pensioners have complained to his Department about incorrect calculation of their winter fuel payments. [53033]

Mr. Denham: Winter fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm this winter. Originally, a total of £400 million was committed for two years (97–98 and 98–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay.

As announced to the House by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 703–05, a further £0.5 billion has been allocated to extend the scheme beyond next winter. This will provide each eligible pensioner household with a £20 winter fuel payment.

The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Christopher Chope, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning winter fuel payments.

The making of winter fuel payments to almost ten million eligible pensioners, in over seven million households, before the end of March 1998 was a challenging task for the Benefits Agency. This was achieved whilst maintaining normal business.

Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving income Support (IS) or income-based Jobseekers's Allowance (JSA), received their payment of £50 during January. Other eligible pensioners were entitled to a payment of £20 or £10. Where they lived alone, were the only eligible pensioner in a household, or were of no fixed abode, they were entitled to £20; otherwise, they were entitled to £10.

In order to establish other eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data. This involved around fifteen million computer records, fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Where only one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £20 was made. Where more than one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £10 was made.

In excess of 9.7 million Winter Fuel Payments were made automatically by 31 March 1998.

Three different methods of payment have been used to make the payments to all eligible pensioners. A number of factors were taken into account in determining the appropriate method. The factors included: the normal method of payment used by the customer to receive their benefit; the ability of the relevant benefit system to make one-off payments by a number of different methods; the speed in which payments could be made; and, the cost and timescales required to introduce new methods of payment on individual computer systems. Payments were made based on information held on our computer systems during week commencing 5 January 1998.

Where official Departmental records were not correct or incomplete, it was possible that the amount of some payments may not have corresponded with the actual circumstances. For example, there were cases where two eligible pensioners lived at the same address and in the same household, but the address details held on the relevant benefit computer records were incorrect or incomplete for either or both of them. In such cases, the data correlation exercise may not have identified more than one eligible person at an address and in accordance with the provisions of the legislation each were entitled to a payment of £20. There is no overprovision in such instances, but any voluntarily offer to repay any amount would be accepted.

Out of the 1.5 million £50 payments made to IS and income-based JSA pensioners in January we are aware that some payments were incorrectly made or duplicated. We know that 9,357 payments were made where information held within official records indicated payment was inappropriate. A further 211 duplicate payments were made to those pensioners who transferred from IS to Income-based JSA during the qualifying week of 5 January 1998. Of the relevant payments this represents a 0.68 per cent. error rate. In financial terms the total cost of these errors amounts to £488,400, and again this represents 0.68 per cent. of the total sum issued of £72,080,700.

In addition we also know that due to a computer operator error, 40,801 IS payments were sent out with an incorrect issue date on them. All these girocheques were replaced automatically within 72 hours. To date we are aware that 438 pensioners have cashed both the original and replacement payments.

Information relating to the number of returned payments is currently being collated. I will provide this figure as soon as it becomes available.

Information relating to the number of cases where official records have been found to be incorrect is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Although a dedicated helpline is available to the public, the number of complaints we have received regarding the issuing in error of winter fuel payments is not recorded separately.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Family Credit (Scotland)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people currently claim family credit in Scotland. [53171]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Family Credit is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Rendel, dated 28 July 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people currently claim Family Credit (FC) in Scotland.

The information is not available in the format requested. FC is administered centrally by the FC Unit in Preston and, as such, statistics are produced on a national basis.

A periodic scan of the FC computer system produces details of the numbers of families in receipt of FC, at that particular date, with each local Benefits Agency (BA) office area. Such information serves as a "snap-shot" of the position at the date of the scan and does not provide details of the number of families in receipt of the benefit annually.

The latest scan was conducted on 30 April 1998. On that date a total of 69,565 people were in receipt of FC in the areas covered by the BA's Scottish offices. Please note that this figure is provisional and subject to change.

I hope that this is helpful.

Internet

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her Department's policy on the imposition of tariffs on trade over the Internet. [52903]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

Supplies made over the Internet are treated as services and as such are liable to VAT but not to Customs duty. Goods ordered via the Internet but supplied physically, from outside the EU, are treated as a normal importation and are liable to duty and VAT at the appropriate rate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Calf Processing Aid Scheme

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take when the operation in the United Kingdom of the calf processing aid scheme becomes voluntary on 30 November. [54381]

Mr. Nick Brown: 1.2 million calves have been processed under the Scheme since April 1998. The UK has thus made the most significant contribution to reducing beef output in Europe. The obligation to operate this Scheme or the Early Marketing Scheme for Veal Calves expires on 30 November 1998 and it seems unlikely that many Member States will opt to slaughter young calves, that scheme alone being available thereafter on a voluntary basis.

Throughout its life in the UK, the Calf Processing Aid Scheme has been criticised from a number of quarters. It has also inflated the cost of calves for beef production to the detriment of beef finishers.

After widespread consultation with industry interests, my colleagues and I have decided that it would be inappropriate to maintain this Scheme in the UK. Its continuation would distort calf prices in the short term and artificially constrain the production of home-reared beef in the medium term. It must be borne in mind that we will continue to make a very significant contribution to balancing the European beef market by operating the Over Thirty Months Scheme for cattle, at very considerable expense to the UK Exchequer.

The Government have therefore decided that the Scheme will close on 30 November 1998.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the oral statement by the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) of 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 262, on what information he based his statement that the decision to close the Calf Processing Aid Scheme on 30 November 1998 was taken before the General Election. [53001]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The EU Agriculture Council meeting on 28–30 October 1996 decided to introduce compulsory measures to reduce the potential surplus of beef. Member States were accordingly required to operate either the Calf Processing Aid Scheme or the Early Marketing Scheme for Veal. It was decided that both Schemes should operate for a period of two years only, i.e. from 1 December 1996 until 30 November 1998. The UK representative voted in favour of this decision in the Council.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report progress in lifting the ban on beef exports from the United Kingdom. [54380]

Mr. Nick Brown: In June the EU Commission made a proposal for a Decision that would allow the restarting of beef exports on a UK basis from animals born after 1 August 1996. Some progress has been made in discussions of the proposal, but agreement will not now be possible before the summer break.

One element of the Commission's proposal is that before beef exports resume a cull of offspring of BSE cases should have been completed. I am anxious that this should not delay the renewal of exports. To this end I am today announcing that from early August the culling of all offspring born on or after 1 August 1996 to BSE cases will begin on a voluntary basis. Details of how the voluntary cull will operate are today being placed in the library of the House.

Farmers will receive the market value for their animals, in some cases taken from a scale rather than individual valuations. These offspring will be slaughtered at the Government's expense. I believe that, with the active support of the NFU and other farming bodies, rapid progress can be made in tackling the cull.

Payments for offspring surrendered on a voluntary basis will rest on the sole authority of the Estimates and the confirming Appropriation Act. The voluntary cull will be superseded by a compulsory offspring cull as soon as agreement is reached in Brussels on the Date Based Export Scheme (DBES) and powers exist to make UK regulations. Farmers will be compensated for the market value of their animals under the compulsory cull on the same basis as the voluntary cull, ensuring equal treatment for owners of BSE cases' offspring whether slaughtered under the voluntary or compulsory phases of the cull.

SEAC's advice is that the UK's existing controls to protect the consumer are sufficient. None the less, I believe that the prompt start of the offspring cull will minimise the time between agreement being reached on the DBES and exports resuming.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his Ministry's spending plans for the next three years following the Comprehensive Spending Review; and if he will make a statement. [54382]

Mr. Nick Brown: The results of the Comprehensive Spending Review for MAFF, and the spending plans that have resulted from them, were summarised in Chapter 18 of the White Paper on "Modern Public Services for Britain: Investing in Reform" (Cm 4011). The key figures for MAFF are as follows:

£ million

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Domestic (England)	685	744	711	751
of which:
Current budget	551	589	590	572
Capital budget	134	155	121	179
BSE (UK)[1]	689	495	466	459

[1] Includes Intervention Board expenditure

These figures do not include payments made by the Intervention Board under the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP). I am making a separate statement today about the Intervention Board's spending plans. A major uncertainty at this stage is the impact that Agenda 2000 will have on our spending plans. Details of the additional provision needed to meet the UK's Agenda 2000 commitments will not be known until the negotiations in Brussels have been concluded.

MAFF will have a new aim:

"To ensure that consumers benefit from competitively priced food, produced to high standards of safety, environmental care and animal welfare and from a sustainable, efficient food chain; and to contribute to the well-being of rural and coastal communities".

MAFF will also have the following key targets for delivery by the end of the Parliament:

- set up the Food Standards Agency and establish a new role for MAFF;
- resolve the problem of BSE and take action against other animal diseases;
- press for reform of the Common Agricultural Policy and reduce its cost to consumers and taxpayers;
- work to sustain and enhance an attractive and accessible countryside;
- encourage the restructuring of the farming and fishing industries.

I should like to explain in more detail how the CSR settlement will impact on MAFF's programmes over the next three years and assist the Ministry in pursuing its new aim and delivering the reforms set out in the White Paper.

Protecting public health

Protection of the public will continue to be a top priority. The White Paper explained that food safety would be put on a new footing through the establishment of the Foods Standards Agency (FSA) and that MAFF would have new targets for reducing the incidence of animal diseases that have implications for human health.

We have made it clear that over time the Government will recover from the food industry more of the costs of financing food safety work and protecting the public, in a way that is administratively simple and fair to small business. For the CSR period, the Government intend to recover from industry the new costs associated with the FSA. The final amount to be recovered cannot be determined until nearer the launch of the Agency, but over the CSR period it will not exceed £50 million a year.

Sustaining and enhancing the countryside

Another key priority is caring for the environment. We will continue to expand the areas under agreement under the major agri-environment schemes. Subject to the approval of the European Commission we propose from next year:

- to enhance the payment rates under the Organic Aid scheme on the lines of the recommendations which were published in April. I will announce the full details as soon as possible. As explained in the April announcement, I plan that those who joined the existing scheme on or after 2 April will be able to switch to the new scheme on the first anniversary of their agreement; to introduce new upland options into the Countryside Stewardship scheme and to make those new options available as part of the planned upland experiments in the Forest of Bowland and on Bodmin Moor; to keep open the pilot Arable Stewardship scheme for a second and third year in 1999 and 2000; and to fund improvements to the six Environmentally Sensitive Area (ESA) schemes which are under review this year on lines similar to the improvements made in the 16 ESAs which were reviewed in 1996 and 1997.

The Government remain wholly committed to maintaining the environment and social fabric in the hills, but have concluded that the support mechanisms should be modified to address those objectives more specifically.

The Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances (HLCA) scheme will continue until it is replaced by new arrangements flowing from the Agenda 2000 proposals. These proposals currently envisage a move away from payments based on the number of sheep and cattle to a system of area-based payments with more clearly defined environmental objectives. We will consult extensively on our proposals to ensure that all interests are taken into account.

We will bring the Nitrate Sensitive Areas scheme to a close. Existing agreements will run their course and applications already received will be processed and authorised under the existing rules. Since the last application period under the present scheme closed on 6 July, no further applications will be considered. However, we will also consider the scope for retaining at least some of the benefits gained under the Scheme, including the possibility of future enhancements to the Countryside Stewardship Scheme.

Rural development

We will continue to encourage rural development in the various Objective 5b areas with both EU and national funds.

In addition, we shall (as the CSR White Paper indicated) be taking steps to improve co-ordination of the MAFF and DETR countryside programmes to ensure that the Government's countryside and rural policy objectives are fully met.

Flood defence and coastal protection

The level of investment in grant aid for flood and coastal defences will increase significantly, unlocking the door to more new schemes over and above those which we have already indicated that we will consider for grant aid in 1999–2000. This demonstrates our determination to provide increased protection for the developed and natural environment which is currently at risk from flooding and erosion.

Conserving fish stocks and securing a sustainable future for the fishing industry

We will continue to conserve fish stocks for future generations and encourage a reduction in excess catching capacity in the fishing fleet.

There will be additional provision for the commissioning of a new marine research vessel to replace the two aging vessels currently operated by the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS). This will enhance MAFF's contribution to conserving fish stocks and reducing marine pollution.

New provision will also be made towards restructuring of the fishing fleet, to complement the effort control arrangements already introduced. We will also be continuing the range of other grant assistance currently available to the fishing industry and the ports in which it is based.

Securing a more economically rational CAP

MAFF will continue to press for reform of the CAP to reduce production related subsidies, redirect support towards environmental and social objectives and cut the cost of the CAP to consumers and taxpayers. Reform along these lines, as acknowledged in the CSR White Paper, will result in a period of transition for British farmers. The Government will help with this restructuring where it sensibly can.

I have decided, however, not to introduce at this stage an early retirement scheme for farmers. While the response to our consultation showed clear support for the principle of an early retirement scheme, the limitations imposed by the current EU rules were regarded by the majority of respondents as inappropriate to the UK and a major bar to uniform and effective uptake. I consider that the Agenda 2000 rural development proposals should provide the flexibility to introduce a scheme better adapted to UK circumstances and we will take forward this work under those proposals.

There will be additional funding to modernise the administration of CAP payments to farmers. A new integrated IT system, incorporating a Geographical Information System (GIS) to control area data for CAP schemes, will enable the Ministry's Regional Service Centres to deliver payments more efficiently and cost-effectively. And they will help safeguard the taxpayer's interest.

R&D

We will be seeking a greater contribution from the industry to the funding of that part of the Ministry's research programme from which industry benefits directly. The Postgraduate Agricultural and Food Studentships Scheme will be closed to new applicants. However, we shall continue to fund a substantial and wide-ranging research programme in support of the Department's aim and objectives, ensuring that priority areas such as food safety and consumer protection are maintained.

BSE

Expenditure on BSE will continue to fall as the incidence of the disease in cattle declines. After widespread consultation with industry interests, my colleagues and I have decided that it would be inappropriate to maintain the Calf Processing Aid Scheme in the UK. Its continuation would distort calf prices in the short term and artificially constrain the production of home-reared beef in the medium term. It must be borne in mind that we will continue to make a very significant contribution to balancing the European beef market by operating the Over Thirty Months Scheme for cattle, at very considerable expense to the UK Exchequer. The Government have therefore decided that the Calf Processing Scheme will close on 30 November 1998.

The Government have also decided that 1998–99 will be the last year in which the UK participates in the EU Surplus Food Scheme. We have been disappointed in the uptake of this scheme and we know that charitable organisations distributing beef under it have found the rules overly bureaucratic.

Conclusion

MAFF's spending plans over the next three years demonstrate the Government's continuing commitment to protecting consumers, caring for the environment and creating the conditions for a competitive and sustainable industry. Focusing on the needs of the consumer will restore confidence in food. That in turn will benefit the farming industry.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he plans to publish the conclusions of his recent consultation on agricultural restructuring; [53188]

(2) if he will list those who responded to his consultation document on restructuring the United Kingdom beef sector on 18 March. [53201]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Burton (Mrs. Dean), Official Report, columns 341–45.

A list of those who responded to the consultation document on Agricultural Restructuring issued on 18 March was placed in the Library of the House on 24 June.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the Intervention Board's spending plans for the next three years following the Comprehensive Spending Review settlement; and if he will make a statement. [54384]

Mr. Nick Brown: The results of the Comprehensive Spending Review for the Intervention Board (IB) are incorporated into Chapter 18 (MAFF) of the White Paper on "Modern Public Services for Britain: Investing in Reform". The key figures for IB are:

£ million

	1998–1999	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
CAP (non-BSE programme)	2,616	2,503	2,458	2,658
of which:
Current budget	2,582	2,422	2,369	2,569
Capital budget	34	81	89	89
CAP (BSE programme)	591	436	417	412
of which:
Current budget	486	375	364	359
Capital budget	105	61	63	53
CAP Administration (non-BSE)	46	45	46	46
of which:
Current budget	44	43	44	44
Capital budget	2	2	2	2
CAP Administration (BSE)	13	22	22	22
of which:
Current budget	13	22	22	22
Capital budget	0	0	0	0

The role of IB is to operate the Common Agriculture Policy Guarantee Section with the UK as economically, efficiently and effectively as possible in accordance with the policies laid down by Agriculture Ministers. I have commented separately on BSE in my answer covering MAFF.

CAP Programme Expenditure

CAP expenditure in the UK is annually managed Expenditure and will be subject to review. The forecasts take into account known changes in scheme operations and anticipated levels of activity.

The capital budget consists almost entirely of intervention purchases of cereals, beef and milk and milk products.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent on IT itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52882]

Mr. Morley: In 1997–98, the Department (core-MAFF and Agencies) spent some £3.6 million on the procurement of personal computers, and £3.1 million on mini-computers/file servers. There was no expenditure on mainframe computers. Including ancillary/related equipment (eg printers, cabling and network hardware), total capital costs amounted to some £11 million.

These figures (which are VAT inclusive) exclude related consultancy, support and running costs, as provision of this information would incur disproportionate cost. However, as a further indication of expenditure on IT technology in core-MAFF (only), total IT programme expenditure for 1997–98 amounted to some £41 million.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52588]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry has signed up to the New Deal programme but has not given any commitment to employ a specified number of young people under either category.

Forest of Dean

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors underlay the decision not to include the Forest of Dean as an area to receive part of the £11 million grant to farmers involved in tourism. [52043]

Mr. Morley: The figure of £11m refers to the total cost of four farm tourism projects approved under the Northern Uplands Objective 5b Structural Funds Programme. The European Commission designated the areas eligible for Objective 5b support in 1994 using criteria which required areas to have a low level of GDP along with a high share of agricultural employment in total employment, a low level of agricultural income and a low population density and/or a significant depopulation trend. A number of other economic, social and environmental factors were also taken into account. The Forest of Dean was not among the areas designated. Only those who live and work within a designated area are able to receive grant from projects supported under an Objective 5b programme.

Drift Nets

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which EU countries permit the use of drift nets. [52055]

Mr. Morley: Drift nets are widely used from the Baltic to the Mediterranean to catch a range of fish species. Because their use is permitted under European Community rules, all Member States must permit the fishermen of other Member States to use drift nets in their waters where there are rights of access. However, the June 1998 Fisheries Council agreed to ban from the end of 2001 the use of drift nets by Community fishermen to catch certain species, including tuna, swordfish, sharks and cephalopods. These particular drift net fisheries are responsible for a high level of casualties among dolphins and other non-target species.

Tobacco (EU Subsidies)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total cost to the EU of subsidies for tobacco production in the EU per individual member state for the most recent five years for which figures are available. [52106]

Mr. Rooker: Expenditure on subsidising tobacco production for the last five years to the nearest £ million is as follows:

	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997
Belgium	8	4	3	3	2
Germany	36	22	21	20	20
Greece	431	326	332	302	254
Spain	86	92	102	113	89
France	54	60	66	71	59
Italy	291	302	268	328	287
Austria	n/a	n/a	0	1	0
Portugal	11	4	11	11	13
Total (EU)	916	810	802	852	725

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the reviews his Department and its predecessors, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48519]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The following is a list of published review reports initiated in the years 1979–80 and 1992–93. No published reports of reviews initiated in 1974–75 have been identified.

1979–80:

Consultation Paper on the review of inland and coastal fisheries in England and Wales. MAFF, Welsh Office, 1981.

Mineral, trace element and vitamin allowances for ruminant livestock. The report of an interdepartmental Working Party set up to consider the findings contained in the ARC (1980) Technical Review "The nutrient requirements of Ruminant Livestock". ADAS, MAFF, DAFS, FANI, UKASTA, BVA, ADAS, 1983.

Review report on food safety and food quality and spoilage. MAFF, 1981.

Review of statistical services. MAFF, 1982.

Survey of mycotoxins in the United Kingdom: the fourth report of the Steering Group on Food Surveillance. HMSO, 1980.

Survey of vinylidene chloride levels in food contact materials and in foods: the third report of the Steering Group on Food Surveillance. HMSO, 1980.

1992–93:

Food Advisory Committee review of food labelling: table of recommendations and the government's final response. Food Advisory Committee, 1992.

Hill livestock compensatory allowances: review of the economic conditions in the hills and uplands 1992. MAFF, 1993.

Report on the review of the emulsifiers and stabilisers in food regulations. HMSO, 1992.

Report on the review of the use of additives in foods specially prepared for infants and young children. HMSO, 1992.

A review of radioactivity in the Irish Sea: a report prepared for the Marine Pollution Monitoring Management Group. MAFF, Directorate of Fisheries Research, 1992.

Sources of mortality and associated life-cycle traits of selected benthic species: a review. MAFF, Directorate of Fisheries Research, 1993.

Review of the rules for sewage sludge application to agricultural land: food safety and relevant animal health aspects of potentially toxic elements: report of the Steering Group on Chemical Aspects of Food Surveillance. MAFF, 1993.

Review of the rules for sewage sludge application to agricultural land: soil fertility aspects of potentially toxic elements: report of the Independent Scientific Committee. MAFF, 1993.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for (a) his Department and (b) bodies listed in the National Asset Register, how many vehicles are currently (i) owned and (ii) leased; if he will indicate their (A) fuel types and (B) engine cubic capacities; and how many vehicles are expected to fall due for replacement in each of the years (1) 1998–99, (2) 1999–2000 and (3) 2000–01. [49228]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 July 1998]: The Department and its Agencies currently own 533 vehicles—none is leased. Detailed information about engine capacities, fuel type and projected replacement dates is not maintained centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to change the method by which the incidence of TB in cattle is calculated to one based on cattle numbers. [52857]

Mr. Rooker: The definition of incidence in EU legislation has recently changed, but it is still based on the number of confirmed herd breakdowns as a percentage of the total number of herds. We will be reviewing the testing frequencies to be used in different parts of the country on this basis.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend the trial areas in which badgers can be culled. [53021]

Mr. Rooker: An independent scientific group was established in February this year to advise on the implementation of recommendations in the Krebs Report, including the design of the culling trial which will produce scientifically robust results. The Group's advice has just been presented to Ministers. An announcement will be made once this advice has been fully considered.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the incidence of TB in cattle in areas where badgers are rare. [53013]

Mr. Rooker: A report by Wilson, Harris and McLaren entitled "Changes in the British badger population 1988 to 1997", published in 1997 by the People's Trust for Endangered Species, shows the areas of lowest badger main sett density in Great Britain to be Scotland and East Anglia, with the north of England also being estimated to be relatively low. Outside areas of high incidence of TB in cattle in the west of England and in south Wales, the incidence of TB in cattle herds in Great Britain is less than 0.1 per cent. However, Professor Krebs concluded that there was a considerable local variation in risk of TB incidents and recommended that further work should be done to assess the reasons for this.

Office of Veterinary and Phytosanitary Inspection

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each establishment producing meat in third countries which exports to the United Kingdom, indicating when it was last inspected by the Office of Veterinary and Phytosanitary Inspection or its approved agents. [53191]

Mr. Rooker: Lists of the many hundreds of establishments in third countries from which imports of fresh meat are permitted can be found at the Ministry's Internet site. We do not have information on the dates on which these establishments were last inspected by or for the European Commission.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how frequently the Office of Veterinary and Phytosanitary Inspection visits plants in each country of the EU. [53199]

Mr. Rooker: Regular inspections and audits covering all parts of the food production chain are carried out by the Commission's inspectorate. They involve visits to all EU Member States and to countries outside the EU. Most visits are carried out by small, multidisciplinary, inspections teams. We do not have data on the frequency of visits to each member state.

Animal Waste

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1998, Official Report, columns 317–18, what guidance his Department has issued on how the livestock industry will dispose of waste in a safe and sustainable manner. [53234]

Mr. Rooker: In March 1998, the Department wrote to representatives of the farming industries, asking them to urge their members to continue to use knackers' yards or hunt kennels to dispose of their fallen stock, particularly for larger animals. The letter reminded them that, if carcases are buried on-farm, the provisions in the Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Water (published in 1991) must be followed to minimise the risk of causing water pollution. On 2 July 1998, the Department issued a guidance note on the disposal of animal waste, including burial.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's consultation with farming representatives on disposal of fallen stock. [53194]

Mr. Rooker: It is for the livestock industry to take responsibility for disposing of its waste in a safe and sustainable manner, and to work out how best to achieve this. Nevertheless, the Department is willing to facilitate a solution and met with representatives of the National Farmers' Union, the National Farmers' Union of Scotland, the Farmers' Union of Wales, the Ulster Farmers' Union, the Tenant Farmers' Association, the British Pig Association, the National Sheep Association and the National Cattle Association on 9 February 1998, and with the National Farmers' Union on 19 March 1998, to discuss the disposal of fallen stock and possible future arrangements. Officials are continuing to maintain contact with the National Farmers' Union.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards the building of incineration plants. [53195]

Mr. Rooker: The Government recognise that, in the absence of a viable market for some animal waste products, incineration plants could play a useful role in their disposal. Such plants must, however, comply with all relevant environmental legislation and be subject to the usual requirements of Local Planning Authorities.

Meat Imports

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the inspection, approval and monitoring of establishments producing meat in third countries. [53200]

Mr. Rooker: Council Directive 72/462 provides for lists of establishments from which Member States may authorise the importation of fresh meat or meat products to be drawn up by the Commission and considered by the Standing Veterinary Committee. In deciding whether an establishment should appear on the lists, particular account is taken of the guarantees offered by the third country with regard to compliance with Community rules; regulations with regard to administration of substances which might affect the wholesomeness of the meat; the establishment's compliance with the conditions for approval of fresh meat plants situated in the Community; and the organisation, powers and supervision of the country's meat inspection services. The Directive also provides for inspections to be carried out on the spot by veterinary experts of the Member States and the Commission to verify whether the conditions for approval of establishments are being applied in practice.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each occasion when an approved border inspection post has refused meat imports from third countries. [53192]

Mr. Rooker: It is not possible to list all occasions on which meat has been rejected at a Border Inspection Post, except at disproportionate cost. But in the first quarter of this year 186 consignments of products of animal origin (which included meat) were rejected at Border Inspection Posts. The numbers of rejections because of failure to comply with national legislation concerning specified risk material are set out in the Ministry's monthly BSE Enforcement Bulletin, copies of which can be found in the Library of the House.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the means by which the European Commission enforces harmonised Community rules in third countries. [53197]

Mr. Rooker: The principal means by which Community standards are upheld in third countries is through the negotiations of bilateral and multi-lateral trade agreements by the Commission on behalf of the European Union.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that consumers are informed of the country of origin of imported meat by labelling. [53240]

Mr. Rooker: Food labelling rules already require the place of origin of any food, including meat, to be given if omitting it could mislead the purchaser about the true place of origin of that food.

More specifically, the labels on pre-packaged poultrymeat must give an indication of the country of origin when it is imported from outside the Community and we are currently taking steps to require this information to appear on labels, tickets or notices near where unpackaged poultrymeat is offered for sale. Poultrymeat produced in the Community must include the registered number of the slaughterhouse or cutting plant which supplied the produce (except where cutting and boning is carried out at the place of sale). These registered numbers are prefixed with the initials of the member state concerned.

Livestock Carcases (Classification)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1998, Official Report, column 415, if he will list the criteria used to measure the performance of British livestock. [53180]

Mr. Rooker: The criteria used to classify carcases of livestock are set out in Council Regulation 3220/84 (as amended) for pigs; Council Regulation 2137/92 (as amended) for sheep; and Council Regulation 1208/81 (as amended) and Commission Regulation 2930/81 (as amended) for cattle.

Genetically Modified Maize

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food following the Court of Appeal judgment on Tuesday 21 July, Regina v Watson, if he will instruct NIAB to de-tassle the genetically modified maize at Hood Barton. [52850]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1998]: No. The Court of Appeal drew a clear distinction between the health and safety implications of releasing genetically modified organisms dealt with by the Environment Protection Act 1990 and the National List regime, which is essentially concerned with marketing. The Court rejected the application to order destruction of the genetically modified maize. Moreover, it said explicitly that the Minister himself could not properly destroy or require destruction of these plants under the National List regime.

Seed Listings

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 May 1998, Official Report, columns 198–99, how many National Seed List applications have been made since 14 May; and how many of those (a) are now listed, (b) were unsuccessful and (c) are still awaiting approval. [52848]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Since 14 May 1998 a total of 11 National List applications have been made. As indicated in my answer of 14 May 1998, DUS tests and VCU trials are conducted on such applications pursuant to Regulation 11 (1) of the Seeds (National List of Varieties) Regulations 1982 as amended. Such tests and trials normally involve a minimum of two growing seasons and therefore in answer to (a) none is currently listed, (b) none is yet unsuccessful, and (c) none will be considered for approval until completion of the necessary tests and trials.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 May 1998, Official Report, columns 198–99, on which date in 1995 the decision was made not to require applicants for National Seeds Lists to comply with Regulation 11(3) and by whom; and for what reasons the information was deemed of little value. [52847]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The requirement to submit the results of replicated trials was introduced (in 1979 initially) to reduce the volume of National List applications for the common species to a manageable level. Its purpose was to encourage breeders to screen varieties before entering them into the statutory system and to deter them from entering varieties which had little chance of addition to the National List, at a time when the trialling system was overloaded and also heavily subsidised by the tax payer.

A fundamental review of the National List trials system was undertaken in 1992, in consultation with plant breeders. Following this, a streamlined system of trials for Value for Cultivation and Use (VCU) was introduced, which reduced the burdens on the trials system. The staged reintroduction of fees for official VCU trials in 1994 and 1995 reinforced these measures. The requirement to submit the results of replicated trials had no value once the pressure on the system was relieved. So far as we can tell from the records, no formal decision was taken that applicants need not comply with Regulation 11(3), though industry representatives were aware that the requirement was not enforced as the need for it no longer existed. It appears that enforcement of the requirement finally ceased on or around April 1995.

Seed and Biotechnology Companies

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the dates of each meeting he or other members of his Department have had with (a) seed and (b) biotechnology companies since 9 July 1998 and in each case the names of those met. [52849]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The meetings listed have taken place between officials and Ministers with seed and biotechnology companies since 9 July 1998.

The then Minister, the right hon. Jack Cunningham MP, met Mr. H. Grant and Ms A. Foster from Monsanto on 15 July.

Officials met on 15 July with Mr. J. Gilbert from Germinal Holdings and Mr. N. Bark from British Seed Houses, and on 24 July with Mr. H. Manning from AgrEvo and Mr. M. Coy from the English Sugar Beet Seed Company.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will have responsibility for investigating cases of carbon monoxide poisoning following the introduction of competition into the domestic gas market. [50928]

Mr. Battle: I am advised that Regulation 7(14) of the Gas Safety (Management) Regulations 1996 places a specific duty on the person who has supplied the gas to cause an investigation to be carried out to establish, as far as is reasonably practicable, the cause of the escape and accumulation of the carbon monoxide gas. During last Autumn and Winter, my Department circulated a safety advice leaflet on the dangers of carbon monoxide, through doctors' surgeries and direct to 19 million households with their gas bills. A new campaign is planned for later this year, to coincide with the onset of colder weather.

Energy Review

Mr. Gummer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with environmental groups since her statement on the Government's energy review on 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–85. [51282]

Mr. Mandelson: My office has received six written representations from environmental groups since the statement. None has sought a meeting.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her oral statement of 25 June 1998, Official Report, columns 1169–72, when she expects to announce the conclusions of her Department's energy review. [52636]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: My Department is giving careful consideration to all the contributions we have received in response to the Consultation Document dated 25 June 1998. It is our intention to reach and announce conclusions on the Review shortly, after assessing the material we have received.

UK Firms' Competitiveness

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to improve the competitiveness of UK firms. [52390]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Improving productivity is at the heart of the Government's drive to improve the competitiveness of UK companies.

The responsibility for this lies largely with business itself, but Government have a role in partnership with business. It is for this reason that my predecessor set up six business-led working parties last year to make recommendations about how such a partnership can help to promote competitiveness. I am also co-hosting, with the Chancellor, a series of seminars on the UK's productivity gap over the Summer and Autumn.

This work will contribute to a White Paper on competitiveness to be published in the Autumn.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has evaluated into the competitiveness of UK firms, with particular reference to their funding, management and production functions. [52391]

Mr. Mandelson: My Department monitors research into factors affecting competitiveness, including funding, management, and production functions. The results are used to produce reports such as the Competitiveness UK document 'Benchmarking for Business' published in November last year.

Foresight Programme

Mr. Cotter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assessment she has made of the outcome of the Foresight Programme. [53084]

Mr. Battle: The Foresight Programme develops visions of the future to guide today's decision-makers and stimulate innovation. It aims to increase wealth creation and enhance quality of life but, given the nature of its objectives, it will inevitably be some time before its ultimate impacts can objectively be assessed.

In the meantime, it is clear that Foresight is creating new networks of people from business, academe, and Government working together for mutual advantage. Well over £350 million has also been committed since 1995 to public and private sector collaborative research programmes and projects reflecting Foresight priorities. These include:

Nineteen new LINK programmes worth some £160 million which have been launched in Foresight priority areas.

The Foresight Challenge Competition which brought together £30 million of public funds with over £60 million from the private sector in a range of projects, some involving businesses with no history of collaboration with the science base and

The Foresight LINK Awards which have stimulated an exciting range of proposals for further projects. £10 million of public funds will be matched by at least the same amount from the public sector.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact on the United Kingdom science base and the competitiveness of the United Kingdom's science-based industries of the burden of regulation on applications for research and development projects involving animals. [50701]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 27 July 1998]: It is important that the use of animals in regulated procedures is properly controlled to ensure that animals are used only where it is fully justified. Applications need to be carefully scrutinised and processed. There is a responsibility to ensure that alternatives which replace or reduce animal use, and which refine procedures to minimise suffering, are used wherever possible.

We do not consider that scientific research and the competitiveness of the UK's science-based industries is unduly hampered. The Animal Procedures Committee is carrying out a review of the operation of the Animals (Scientific procedures) Act 1986 which is due to be published later this year.

Management Costs

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of management costs on the competiveness of UK firms. [52392]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: My Department has not made any assessment of the impact of management costs on the competitiveness of UK firms. The focus of my Department's work in this area is on the 'quality' of management in companies.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of EU structural funding for the United Kingdom will go to rural areas in (a) 1998, (b) 1999 and (c) 2000. [52596]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Rural areas of the United Kingdom receive funding under Objective 1 in the Highlands and Islands, and under Objective 5b and the LEADER Community Initiative. Structural Funds allocations for these programmes for both 1998 and 1999 are some 9 per cent. of the total Structural Funds allocation to the United Kingdom. Allocations for 2000 are not yet known. Part of the funding under the national Objective 3, 4, and 5a programmes and under the Northern Ireland Objective 1 programme, also goes to rural areas; however, the amount is not separately identifiable without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much EU structural funding rural areas of the United Kingdom received in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997. [52595]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Rural areas of the United Kingdom receive funding under Objective 1 in the Highlands and Islands, and under Objective 5b and the LEADER Community Initiative. Structural Funds allocations for these are shown in the table. Part of the funding under the national Objective 3, 4, and 5a programmes and under the Northern Ireland Objective 1 programme also goes to rural areas; however, the amount is not separately identifiable without incurring disproportionate cost.

Gas Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what external forecasts on job losses in the gas industry resulting from the moratorium on gas-fired power status she has evaluated. [52601]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: A great deal of material has been submitted to my Department in response to the Consultation Document dated 25 June 1998, and it is being evaluated.

Inward Investment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what mechanisms prevent the Scottish and Welsh Offices from competing against (a) each other and (b) her Department for inward investment. [52597]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Neither Scotland, Wales, or any other part of the UK do not compete with my Department for inward investment. The Invest in Britain Bureau chairs the Committee on Overseas Promotion, part of whose role is to monitor rules agreed by Departments to avoid wasteful competition between the inward investment agencies of Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, and the English regions.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if she has completed her discussions on the co-ordination of inward investment; and when she expects to announce her conclusions; [52598]

(2) when the Concordat on Inward Investment will be published. [52599]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: There will be an announcement when, through collective discussion and agreement, Ministers have concluded arrangements which will ensure that offers made to inward investors are value for money for the taxpayer and fair to all parts of the UK.

European Regional Aid

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much European regional aid the UK received in each of the last five years; and how much is forecast in the next three. [52603]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: Total allocations to the United Kingdom under the EU Structural Funds for the last five years (1994–98) and for 1999 are shown in the table. No decisions on funding post-1999 have yet been made.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to announce the conclusions of her review of the pool price for electricity. [52602]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The recent Report on Pool Price Increases in Winter 1997–98 is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Nuclear Material

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will set out the number of withdrawals of nuclear materials from safeguards that have been notified to the relevant authorities under the 1978 United Kingdom-EURATOM-IAEA tripartite safeguards agreement since it entered into force; how many were permanent withdrawals; what quantities and types of nuclear material were involved in the permanent withdrawals; and if she will provide details of the purpose to which the materials involved in the permanent withdrawals were put in each case. [53096]

Mr. Battle: A total of 591 advance notifications of the withdrawal of nuclear material from safeguards have been made in accordance with the provisions of Article 14 of the UK/Euratom/IAEA Safeguards Agreement. The majority of these have involved either the temporary withdrawal of the material concerned or, in the case of permanent transfers to MOD sites, the withdrawal from safeguards of material such as depleted uranium for source shielding or small amounts of other nuclear materials for R&D or analytical purposes.

As part of the Strategic Defence review, the Government have indicated that future withdrawals of nuclear material from safeguards will be limited to small quantities of material not suitable for explosive purposes, and that information on these withdrawals will be published from time to time.

Post Office

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action she will take to increase investment in the Post Office. [52094]

Mr. Mandelson: Individual decisions in investment within the Post Office are for the Post Office Board within the overall framework of financial targets set by Government. We plan to give the Post Office greater commercial freedom so that it can meet the challenges of domestic and international markets. The second phase of the Post Office Review, which my predecessor announced on 6 April 1998, Official Report, column 63, will be making recommendations on the Post Office's future structure, organisation, and financing that will best deliver greater commercial freedom for the Post Office within the public sector. In the meantime, my right hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) announced, with immediate effect, limited freedoms for the Post Office to enter into joint ventures in the domestic market in a similar way to those they have in the international market. Further details are set out in the Government's observations to the Trade and Industry Select Committee on the third report of the 1997/98 session on the Post Office, which was published by the Committee on 14 April.

Private Office Staff

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many private office staff have left the offices of each Minister in his Department in the past 12 months. [52859]

Mr. Mandelson: Twelve staff out of a total of 53 have left private offices in the Department of Trade and Industry over the past 12 months. This movement rate of 23 per cent. is slightly lower than the average for DTI Headquarters as a whole, which is 28 per cent.

Gas Storage Bullets

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will instruct OFGAS to draw up plans for the removal of pressurised gas storage bullets from residential areas; and if she will make a statement. [52324]

Mr. Battle: Gas storage bullets are a means of providing the short-term storage capacity necessary to handle short-term (within the day) fluctuations in demand for gas, and are an integral part of the gas transportation system. In order to fulfil this function, they must be situated near to the gas consumer. Their location is an operational matter for the public gas transporter concerned, subject to planning considerations and to meeting the requirements of safety legislation enforced by the HSE. The HSE has the power to prohibit any activity, including the storage of gas, if it involves the risk of serious personal injury.

Research Studentships

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council financial level of research studentships for postgraduate students. [52071]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 24 July 1998]: I am pleased to announce that additional funds are being made available to the Research Councils. As a result, from this Autumn, the minimum stipend for a Research Council student will be £6,455 which, for the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, is £1,000 above the previously planned level. The Government attach much importance to the investment which the Research Councils' provision for post graduate students represents.

The Research Councils will be publishing further details, and I will ensure that my hon. Friend receives a copy.

Written Answers

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the average time taken by her Department to provide a substantive reply to a written question tabled for answer on the first available named day since 1 May 1997. [52334]

Mr. Mandelson: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, up to 24 July, my Department has answered 77.33 per cent. of the named questions within five sitting days of the named day, with 29.24 per cent. of these being answered on the day.

Dounreay

Sir Robert Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much spent fuel, in tonnes, is currently in storage in the Dounreay nuclear establishment; and of this total how much is (a) fast reactor spent fuel, (b) UK research reactor spent fuel and (c) foreign research reactor spent fuel. [48029]

Mr. Battle: There are 58 tonnes of spent fuel in storage at Dounreay. Of this, fast reactor fuel, including breeder material, accounts for 99 per cent. This includes a small amount (less than half a per cent.) from foreign fast reactors. The remaining 1 per cent. comes from foreign power reactors. There is no spent fuel from other UK research reactors, and the only spent fuel from other foreign research reactors is the 4.364 kilogrammes from Georgia.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what cumulative net increase in compliance costs has been estimated in compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52943]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The net cumulative increase in compliance costs, as estimated in final compliance cost assessments published by my Department between 1 May 1997 and 31 May 1998, is as follows:

Title of regulation	Compliance Costs (£) Recurring	Non recurring
The Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) (Amendment) Order 1997	62,360	144,720
The Telecommunications (Voice Telephony) Regulations 1997	20,000 to 60,000	180,000
The Wireless Telegraphy (Control of Interference from Videosenders) Order 1997	375,000 to 450,000	—
The Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997	1,700,000	810,000
The Copyright and Rights in Database Regulations 1997	3,500,000	17,500,000
The Telecommunications (Interconnection) Regulations 1997	250,000	250,000 to 300,000
The Consumer Credit (Increase of Monetary Limits) (Amendment) Order 1998 The Consumer Credit (Further Increase of Monetary Amounts) Order 1998 The Consumer Credit (Realisation of Pawn) (Amendment) Regulations 1998	40,000	60,000
The Offshore Petroleum Production and Pipelines (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1998	10,000,000	—
The Packaging (Essential Requirements) Regulations 1998	11,372,000	5,021,000
The Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours (Amendments) Regulations 1998	2,000,000 to 4,000,000	—
The Restriction on Agreements and Conduct (Specified Domestic Electrical Goods) Order 1998	2,200,000 to 4,400,000	250,000 to 500,000
Total	31,519,360 to 35,834,360	24,215,720 to 24,515,720

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52942]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Details of all published compliance cost assessments are contained in the bi-annual Command Papers of Compliance Cost Assessments. Details of final compliance cost assessments published by my Department between 1 May 1997 and 31 May 1998 are as follows:

June 1997

The Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) (Amendment) Order 1997

July 1997

The Telecommunications (Voice Telephony) Regulations 1997

The Wireless Telegraphy (Control of Interference from Videosenders) Orders 1997

May 1998

The Packaging (Essential Requirements) Regulations 1998

The Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Restriction on Agreements and Conduct (Specified Domestic Electrical Goods) Order 1998.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52944]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: There is presently no requirement for Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where regulatory proposals are expected to be cost neutral or result in a saving to business. However, between 1 May 1997 and 31 May 1998 my Department laid eight amending regulations which resulted in compliance cost savings to business. These are as follows:

The Wireless Telegraphy (Network User Stations) (Exemption) Regulations 1997

The Gas Act 1986 (Exemption) Order 1997

The Insurance Companies (Accounts and Statements) (Amendment) Regulations 1997

The Restrictive Trade Practices (Non-Notifiable Agreements) (Sale and Purchase, Share Subscription and Franchise Agreements) Order 1997

The Restrictive Trade Practices (Non-Notifiable Agreements) (Turnover Threshold) Amendment Order 1997

The Cosmetic Products (Safety) (Amendment) Regulations 1997

The Wireless Telegraphy (Licence Charges) (Amendment) Regulations 1998

The Trade Marks (Amendment) Rules 1998.

Motor Industry

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the number of jobs in the UK which are dependent upon the motor industry. [53185]

Mr. Battle: It is estimated that 714,600 jobs at the end of March 1998 were directly reliant on the UK automotive industry: 222,300 in vehicle and component manufacturing and 492,300 in the retail, distribution, servicing and repair (but excluding petrol sales) sectors.

Labour Market Trends.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs in Britain are accounted for by the production of cars and automobile components. [53184]

Mr. Battle: The vehicle and component manufacturing sectors at the end of March 1998 were estimated to employ 222,300 people in the United Kingdom.

WALES

NHS Staff Absences

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many working days were lost through sickness, ill health or injury by NHS staff in Wales for the latest year for which figures are available; and what was the estimated total cost of those lost days. [51237]

Mr. Ron Davies [holding answer 17 July 1998]: The information requested is not available centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. However, deaths and injuries at work are reported to the Health and Safety Executive. Based on provisional estimates, there were 686 cases reported to them relating to NHS employees in Wales in 1997–98. However, the HSE do not collect the number of working days lost due to injuries more generally, or to sickness absence.

Social Exclusion

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the Government's priorities for expenditure in tackling social exclusion in Wales; [52429]

(2) how much money will be dedicated to tackling social exclusion in Wales in 1999–2000; [52426]

(3) what assessment he has made of the factors underlying differences in his Department's spending priorities for tackling social exclusion in Wales relative to those in (a) England and (b) Scotland; [52431]

(4) what initiatives his Department (a) has taken and (b) proposes to take to tackle social exclusion in Wales; [52435]

(5) what funding will be made available for tackling social exclusion in Wales in 1998–99. [52450]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Social Exclusion Programme for Wales—"People in Communities"—was launched on 1 May. It aims to tackle social exclusion in a co-ordinated way through community development with an emphasis on action research. We have invited local authorities to put forward bids from which we will select, this autumn, around six pilot communities on which the programme will focus. The programme has been drawn up in response to the particular needs of Wales, and taking account of existing development programmes. We have, however, taken note of the work of the Social Exclusion Unit in England in devising our programme for Wales.

£750,000 is being made available for the initial twelve month development phase. This will enable the six or so selected communities to undertake an extensive needs assessment to identify local priorities for action. In the second stage of the programme, funding will be made available through mainstream Programmes, and my Department will be seeking ways to ensure that pilot communities have access to a wide range of sources of support.

We want to identify and to promote what works in securing long-term and sustainable community-based regeneration. We will look, for example, at the way we bring on board initiatives such as Employment Zones and New Deal Pilot Projects, or handle Capital Challenge and Strategic Development Scheme money. We will aim to disseminate good practice as widely as possible across Wales.

In addition to the "People in Communities" Programme, my Department is taking account of the impact on social exclusion in developing policies in other areas such as the "Better Health Better Wales" Green Paper and housing policy.

My Department is also taking forward for Wales the commitments given in relation to England in the Social Exclusion Unit report on Exclusions and truancy to reduce levels of permanent and fixed term exclusions from school and unauthorised absence.

Rough Sleeping

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which health authorities in Wales have dedicated resources for initiatives related to the problem of rough sleeping; how much they spent in the last year for which figures are available; and on what projects. [52430]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information requested is not held centrally. I understand that Bro Taf, Iechyd Morgannwg and Gwent Health Authorities directly support projects, including the provision of GP sessions and district nurse hours, to help meet the health needs of people sleeping rough.

Millennium Stadium

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure the effective supervision of the Millennium Stadium project and its timely completion; and if he will make a statement. [47243]

Mr. Ron Davies: On 3 July in response to proposals from Millennium Stadium PLC, I announced that I would be prepared to make available a grant of £3 million towards the River Walk project, which is necessary to ensure the timely operation of the stadium at full capacity for the Rugby World Cup finals next year. My Department is in discussion with the company on the detail of those proposals including the company's plans to make fresh appointments to the PLC Board. The Chairman of Millennium Stadium PLC has assured me that the construction of the new stadium will be completed on time.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent on IT itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52890]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office has a Private Finance Initiative contract for the supply of IT services to the desk. These services consist of personal computer workstations, a suite of office automation products, the underlying network infrastructure, hardware and software maintenance and education and training. The inclusive cost for 1997–98 was £3.878 million. The contract serviced 1,965 personal computers and 27 file servers at the end of the year. In addition, in 1997–98 the Department spent £0.031 million on a mainframe computer and £0.892 million on minicomputers.

Reviews

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what internal and external reviews have been established by him; and what is the remit, starting and concluding date of each. [53097]

Mr. Ron Davies: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the size and location of landfill sites in Wales; and if he will make a statement on his plans to tackle pollution from these sites. [53690]

Mr. Ron Davies: Details of landfill sites which are licensed or registered as exempt from licensing are available in public registers held by the Environment Agency at its principal Area Offices. The Agency monitors these sites on a regular basis and if pollution is detected, they will take appropriate action.

Full information is not available on landfill sites that closed prior to the introduction of licensing. However, when the new contaminated land regime is implemented in Wales, this will provide for the identification of such sites, and for their remediation where necessary.

North Wales Coast

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many incidents of illegal dumping of dredged material have been recorded off the North Wales coast in each of the last 20 years. [53691]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

A licence is required under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to dispose of dredged material at sea: licences involving deposits in waters adjacent to Wales are issued on my behalf by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Data on illegal dumping are not readily available prior to 1991 when amendments to the 1985 Act introduced under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 required information about convictions to be held on a public register. Since 1991 a number of alleged breaches of licence conditions and other infringements under the Act have been investigated but none has involved the disposal of dredged material off the North Wales coast.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which (a) organisation's and (b) company's working computer models of the hydrographic regimes of the North Wales coastal region have been commissioned by the Environment Agency. [53686]

Mr. Ron Davies: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 629.

Clinical Psychologists

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current waiting time for a child to be referred to a clinical psychologist in each of the health authorities in Wales. [53688]

Mr. Ron Davies: The information requested is not available centrally.

Welsh Language Board

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make changes to the membership of the Welsh Language Board prior to the establishment of the National Assembly. [53369]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have no such plans at present. The terms of office of none of the Board's members expires before or soon after the establishment of the National Assembly.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in each health authority area were waiting for treatment under the NHS in January each year since 1992 for (a) six months and under, (b) six to 12 months, (c) 12 to 18 months and (d) over 18 months; and if he will make a statement. [48189]

Mr. Ron Davies: Information on waiting lists by area of residence was not collected in January until 1997. Data for 31 March are therefore, provided for each year since 1992.

Agricultural Payments

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors underlie the delays in payments of (a) HLCA, (b) sheep annual premium and (c) suckler cow premium. [53246]

Mr. Ron Davies: Payments were delayed because of the need to comply with additional EC finance data requirements, requirements under the SCP Scheme to administer a BSE-related compensation scheme, and to process Agrimonetary compensation schemes under SAP and SCP on top of the usual business commitment. The need to complete Integrated Administration and Control System (IASC) Whole Farm Inspections was also a delaying factor.

HEALTH

Cancer Services

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for a centralised audit to ensure Calman-Hine plans are being implemented across the country. [50214]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 13 July 1998]: We are committed to improving the quality of and speed of access to cancer services, including breast and cervical screening and palliative care, to deliver a consistently high standard of care for all patients and thereby maximise their chance of cure and increase their quality of life. The measures set out in A First Class Service will strengthen our capacity to monitor and evaluate all aspects of care; providing information which can be used to improve standards still further. We will work with the National Cancer Forum, regional and professional groups and the voluntary sector to ensure that we meet national quality and evidence-based clinical standards within the National Service Framework for the provision of cancer screening and the ongoing implementation of the Calman/Hine recommendations.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to correspond electronically with (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public. [49851]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 13 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 July 1998, Official Report, column 315, regarding corresponding electronically with hon. Members.

The Department has set up a number of mechanisms to correspond electronically with members of the public. On the central DH internet site, a number of specific email boxes are available covering a number of areas, including open government, research and development and the regional offices. In addition, a number of committees, including the Royal Commission for the Long Term Care of the Elderly, the Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, the Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment also have email boxes. Among the Department's Agencies, the Medical Devices Agency have an email mailbox for general inquiries, the Medicines Control Agency have an email mailbox for the Committee on Safety of Medicines, and National Health Service Estates has an email mailbox used for complaints and general inquiries.

The Department's internet site also has a number of web pages with electronic feedback forms, including those for the Chief Medical Officer, performance tables, NHS Annual Report 95/96, as well as a general feedback form for the whole site.

As well as the range of specific email boxes the Department has, it is also currently examining the setting up of a corporate email box for general correspondence.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 16 March, 18 May and 22 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to support of the section 64 funding application by HIV Alliance. [53259]

Mr. Dobson: I have replied today to my right hon. Friend's letter of 16 March 1998. The Department has no record of receiving the letters dated 18 May or 22 June, but I understand that they were reminders relating to his earlier letter.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how staff numbers in his Department have varied between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1998. [48879]

Ms Jowell: Staff in post information is provided to the Cabinet Office on a quarterly basis from 1 April each year so is not available for the exact dates requested. It is provided in the table for the nearest available dates. For the purposes of staff in post information, staff are counted as full-time equivalent (FTE)[1] not headcount.

Lariam

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on the basis of what prior trials and other research Lariam (Mefloquine) was granted marketing authorisation in the UK in 1989; and if he will make a statement. [48749]

Ms Jowell: The decision to grant a marketing authorisation for lariam (mefloquine) was based on all the available evidence, published or unpublished and whether or not favourable to the application. The data submitted by the company were assessed by the Medicines Control Agency, who sought the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM), the Government's independent drug safety advisory body. The CSM was satisfied as to the safety, quality and efficacy of the product, the sole criteria under both European Community and national legislation.

Breast Implants

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many silicone gel breast implants were undertaken in the past five years by (a) the NHS and (b) the private sector. [51676]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 22 July 1998]: The available information is in the table. We record the number of episodes in which a breast implant was inserted; whether the implants were filled with silicone-gel or another material is not known. There are no equivalent figures for the private sector.

This will, over time, give fuller data on the annual number of operations carried out in the United Kingdom.

Smoking

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department is currently providing to initiatives to tackle (a) under-age smoking, (b) teenage smoking and (c) passive smoking. [52154]

Ms Jowell: In 1998/99, we are funding:

the "Respect" anti-smoking campaign at a cost of £1 million, which is targeting 11–15 year olds, addressing why young people start smoking and seeking to create a positive lifestyle as relevant to the two thirds of teenagers who don't smoke as to the third who do; and the Health Education Authority's adult anti-smoking campaign at a cost of £5.5 million, which especially targets young people (and in particular women) in the 16–24 age range.

Both the teenage and adult smoking education campaigns include information on the dangers associated with passive smoking.

Our future plans to tackle smoking prevalence will be set out in the forthcoming White Paper on Tobacco Control.

Group B Streptococcus

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies were born with meningitis as a result of the mother carrying the Group B streptococcus bacteria in each of the last three years. [52039]

Mr. Boateng: The figures presented are derived from laboratory reports of culture-confirmed cases in England presenting in the first week of life. This may not be a complete estimate of neonatal disease due to Group B streptococci since not all cases are reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service. The laboratory reports are either from blood or cerebrospinal fluid or other specimens which indicate meningitis as a clinical feature.

The disease in neonates may present as bacteraemia or meningitis or both. It is difficult to establish, beyond doubt, whether Group B streptococcal infection is the result of vertical transmission, but infection in the first week of life is highly likely to have been acquired from the mother. This association decreases as the age of the baby increases.

Year	Number of reports
1995	243
1996	220
1997[1]	258

[1] Data for 1997 are provisional at this stage. Data supplied by Public Health Laboratory Service

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will carry out a comparative cost analysis of conducting a standard urine test for all pregnant mothers to detect Group B streptococcus and the cost of treatment for babies born with meningitis; [52040]

(2) if a standard urine test is carried out for all pregnant women to determine if they are Group B streptococcus carriers. [52042]

Mr. Boateng: The National Screening Committee considers the effectiveness and feasibility of individual population screening programmes and advises Ministers about their introduction. It is currently not known whether the introduction of screening for asymptomatic urinary infection (including Group B streptococcus) would be beneficial in reducing the risk of meningitis in new-born babies, but all the related research evidence will be taken into account by the National Screening Committee's Antenatal sub-group in its forward programme, before making recommendations to Ministers.

The standard urine test given to all pregnant women checks for, among other things, signs of protein which may indicate the presence of an infection. If an infection is indicated, a urine sample is sent for further laboratory investigation which would identify women who are Group B streptococcus carriers.

HIV-AIDS

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the percentage change in the number of HIV positive cases has been over the last five years. [52225]

Ms Jowell: The number of new HIV diagnoses reported each year has remained constant at about 2,500 but the number of deaths among people with HIV infection has fallen, especially since the introduction of combination antiretroviral therapy. This increasing life expectancy means that the number of HIV-infected people in the population has increased but data are not available to calculate the percentage change.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the percentage change in the number of HIV-positive cases in the next five years. [52228]

Ms Jowell: Projections for AIDS cases and severe HIV disease for 1995 to 1999 were published in November 1995 and work is currently under way to evaluate the effect on these projections of introducing combination therapy.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been unable to take up places in HIV wards in the United Kingdom over the last five years owing to a lack of beds. [52438]

Ms Jowell: The Department is aware that the length of in patient stays needed by people with HIV/AIDS has been declining since the introduction of combination therapies. The Department does not have any evidence that any patient with HIV has been denied in-patient treatment because of a lack of beds.

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of advances in drug treatments for people with HIV/AIDS; and what plans he has to introduce drug resistance testing for people with HIV/AIDS to ensure that new drug treatments are used as cost effectively as possible across the whole of the United Kingdom. [52300]

Ms Jowell: We are aware of the continued success of combination therapies in the treatment of people with HIV/AIDS, in that the onset of symptoms is delayed, more people are being managed on an out patient basis and the number of deaths has fallen. The latest surveillance data show that the numbers of deaths from HIV/AIDS in the United Kingdom have declined since 1995 and this decline in deaths has accelerated with the introduction of combination therapies in 1996. Between 1995 and 1997, the numbers of deaths fell by nearly two thirds, from 1533 to 525, in men and by nearly a half, from 234 to 125, in women.

The issue of testing for drug resistance—as are all the complicated issues around the prescribing and monitoring of combination therapies—is one for the physician in discussion with the patient. The current clinical guidelines on the use of combination therapies, issued by the British HIV Association, contain guidance in the event of drug failure due to resistance, and how best to avoid this. The Department continues to monitor developments in drug treatment and draws such guidelines to the attention of health authorities in the annual guidance circular on HIV/AIDS.

Stroke Patients

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted to hospital in (a) the North West and (b) England in each of the past five years having suffered a stroke. [52289]

Mr. Boateng: The information is shown in the table for the financial years 1992–93 to 1996–97 (the latest year for which figures are available).

Primary diagnosis of stroke—number of admissions in North West Regional Office (RO) and England, National Health Service hospitals, England

NHS Costs

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to the NHS of (a) treating non-United Kingdom residents for all medical care and (b) providing abortion services to Irish citizens in the last year for which figures are available. [52180]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally.

Juveniles (Secure Accommodation)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answers of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 203 and 18 March 1998, Official Report, column 614, how many places in local authority secure accommodation the Government plan in addition to those referred to in his answers. [52382]

Mr. Boateng: The review of juvenile secure accommodation was completed at the end of March and we have decided now on a programme of further work to be undertaken. A summary has been placed in the Library. This further work will include consideration of the creation of a new mechanism to determine the volume of places provided in juvenile secure accommodation, the cost of these and the standards which apply. It is proposed that the Youth Justice Board should take on this responsibility which should help ensure the appropriate volume and geographical spread of secure places.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52959]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 28 July 1998]: There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or resulting in a saving to business.

Two compliance cost assessments which identified savings were:

Proposal for a Council Directive on the Advertising of Tobacco Products

The Medicines for Human Use and Medical Devices (Fees & Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations 1998.

Medical Devices Agency

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the 1997–98 Annual report and Accounts of the Medical Devices Agency. [54139]

Ms Jowell: We have received the Report and Accounts of the Medical Devices Agency and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of Sections 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921.

Plymouth Hospitals NHS Trust

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the remit of the independent inquiry into the situation at Plymouth Hospital NHS Trust concerning the postgraduate qualifications of a thoracic surgeon; who will chair the inquiry; which individuals he has appointed to the inquiry; when it will report; to whom it will report; and what plans he has to extend the investigation into similar instances in other NHS trusts. [53255]

Mr. Milburn: On Thursday 23 July 1998, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced the establishment of an independent review of the investigation by Plymouth Hospitals National Health Service Trust into concerns raised about Mr. Joe Rahamim and the thoracic surgical services at the trust. The membership of the review team, its remit and its terms of reference will be announced shortly.

Adoption

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to prevent individuals from evading established procedures by making private arrangements for the adoption of children from overseas. [52199]

Mr. Boateng: Guidance issued by the Department to social services departments and voluntary adoption agencies sets out the arrangements put in place for adoption from overseas. The procedures are designed to safeguard the welfare of children who are to be adopted, and to assist with the process of obtaining entry clearance for such children to enter the United Kingdom. The Department makes no secret of its opposition to the use of private home study reports, which attempt to circumvent the proper procedures for intercountry adoptions. The commissioning of private home study reports has recently been found to be illegal by a recent High Court judgment. The Department continues to oppose privately commissioned home study reports both in its guidance and in correspondence.

Officials continue to liaise with authorities overseas seeking their co-operation in accepting only those homestudy reports which have been prepared by social services departments in the United Kingdom and are accompanied by the Department of Health's Certificate of Eligibility. In addition, officials are negotiating with a number of countries to obtain formal agreements about the handling of adoption applications. An agreement with Romania came into force earlier this year. These agreements are drafted on the principles and procedures outlined in the 1993 Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption.

Applications to courts in the United Kingdom to adopt children under the Adoption Act 1976 who have been adopted overseas with the help of a privately commissioned home study report are normally referred to the High Court.

Ms Beverley Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to enable the United Kingdom to ratify the 1993 Hague Convention on intercountry adoption. [52200]

Mr. Boateng: Legislation to ratify the 1993 Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption will be introduced when Parliamentary time allows.

Sunburn and Sunstroke

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating sunburn and sunstroke in each of the last three years. [53142]

Ms Jowell: There has been no study specifically into the costs to the National Health Service of sunburn and sun stroke. However, sunburn is a risk factor for certain types of skin cancer, notably the most dangerous form, malignant melanoma. It has been estimated that in 1992/93 in England, malignant melanoma accounted for 0.06 per cent. of total hospital in and out patient expenditure of about £16,200 million[1]. There are about 3–4,000 new cases of malignant melanoma and approximately 1,300 deaths from this cancer in England each year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received treatment in National Health Service hospitals for sunburn and sunstroke in each of the last three years. [53141]

Mr. Milburn: The information shown in the table is for in-patient treatment in National Health Service hospitals for the financial years 1994–95 to 1996–97 (the latest year for which figures are available), and is based on Finished Consultant Episodes, which represent the number of episodes of care under individual consultants.

	Primary diagnosis
Year	Sunburn	Heatstroke and sunstroke
1994–95	385	38
1995–96	156	82
1996–97	88	42

Notes:

ICD Coding

1. 1994–95—ICD-9 codes—Contact dermatitis due to solar radiation (sunburn)—692.0; heatstroke and sunstroke—992.0

2. 1995–96 and 1996–97—ICD-10 codes sunburn L55; heatstroke and sunstroke T67.0. Because of the change in classification, data for 1995–96 and 1996–97 may not be directly comparable with 1994–95

3. 1994–95 and 1995–96 data are grossed for both coverage and unknown invalid clinical data

4. 1996–97 is derived from ungrossed HES data, and may not be directly comparable with earlier years

Bradford (Funding)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funds have been allocated to the Bradford area since 1 May 1997 over and above previous plans listed by (i) capital and (ii) revenue, indicating for each whether they were subject to a bidding process. [53211]

Mr. Milburn: The table shows Bradford Health Authority's share of the additional resources announced to date since 1 May 1997. These additions were all for revenue and comprise proportions of:

The extra £10 million for breast cancer services announced in May 1997

The extra £1 billion announced in July 1997

The extra £300 million announced in October 1997

The extra £500 million announced in March 1998

Bradford health authority—additional funding—1997–98

Purpose	Addition (£000)
Winter pressures[1]	1,700
GMS Cash Limited—salaried doctor scheme	37
Breast cancer services[1]	93
Initial revenue allocation for 1998–99 includes an additional £11.229m growth/uplift, £6.323m higher than sustainable under the previous plan	6,326
Waiting list addition	2,883
Whole systems support for waiting lists[1]	659
Total	11,698

Women Doctors

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the proportion of (i) all and (ii) women medical graduates from medical schools who are practising medicine 10 years after qualification (a) full-time and (b) part-time. [52862]

Mr. Milburn: Studies commissioned by the Department in respect of medical students who graduated in 1983 (the latest cohert for which data are currently available) show that, in 1993, the patterns of employment of those doctors working in the National Health Service were:

Percentage

	Women	Total
Full time employment	57.6	81.35
Part time employment	42.4	18.7

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to encourage women doctors back to work in (a) hospitals and (b) primary care. [52863]

Mr. Milburn: The increasing numbers of women in medical schools and at all levels within the medical profession is producing more demand for flexible working and training opportunities in the National Health Service, including facilities for taking a career break and then returning to practice. There is also a more general trend in the economy which is seeing a greater demand from both men and women for working arrangements which reflect domestic and family responsibilities; and we are committed to supporting working parents in balancing the demands of their work and home life.

A number of measures are already in place to make the NHS a more "family friendly" place for women doctors to work. The new arrangements for flexible training, which were introduced with the specialist registrar (SpR) grade, devolved the funding of flexible training to the postgraduate deans where it could be more responsive to local and specialty demands. The National Training Number (NTN) allows new entrant SpRs who want to train flexibly to have a place reserved for them so that they can take up training as quickly as possible without further competitive barriers. If a complete career break is needed, they have a "passport" back into training via their personal NTN which they hold throughout training. Trusts are continuing (under the New Deal on Juniors' Hours) to introduce working patterns and practices that enable doctors to balance the demands of work with family life. The Quality Framework for hospital and community medical staffing, which was issued as a draft compendium of guidance in April last year, emphasises the need for trusts to develop flexible working and training arrangements as part of their medical workforce planning.

Over the past year, we have introduced a new retainer scheme and a salaried general practitioner scheme for NHS general practitioners each of which will encourage women doctors back to work in primary care.

Information about the career paths and working needs of women doctors is collected regularly through the Medical Careers Research Group, whose work is funded by the Department and informs the medical workforce planning process. A separate survey is also under way at present, examining the working preferences and career development needs of doctors now in higher specialist training. The results are intended to inform the design of hospital consultant posts, helping to ensure that women doctors with family responsibilities are able to work within the NHS at a level commensurate with their skills and abilities. The Department is also funding a support network for consultants who are working part-time.

A number of initiatives are under way to support family friendly working and to encourage women doctors to return to the NHS. The Don't Waste Doctors project in the North West Region looked at ways to prevent doctors from leaving the service, or to bring them back. In Wessex, a pilot scheme has been running to assess the needs of unemployed GPs and to help them back into the NHS. We hope that both schemes will provide models for wider use. The Department has also funded trials of a self-rostering software package in the NHS. Most of the participants in the trials have been nurses, but the package may have much wider application. This scheme is currently being carefully evaluated, and a report is expected early in the autumn.

Health Authorities (Overspending)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities which overspent in 1997–98. [52864]

Mr. Milburn: No health authorities overspent their cash limits in 1997–98.

Radiotherapy

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to replace cobalt sources with linear acceleration machines in radiotherapy units. [52813]

Mr. Boateng: We have made no central plans, as this is a matter for local decision making. A report about availability of radiotherapy was published by the Royal College of Radiologists on 8 July 1998; it provides valuable information for the local planning of services. The report indicates that in 1997 there were 22 cobalt machines in use in the United Kingdom, of which only 3 were less than five years old. This suggests that recent purchases have been of linear accelerators; it is expected that this trend will continue as cobalt machines reach the end of their useful lives and are replaced.

Breast Cancer

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a list of the measures which NHS trusts have taken using the funding made available for breast cancer services in 1997–98. [52812]

Mr. Boateng: Over 300 projects are being supported by the £10 million made available recurrently in 1997–98 for improvements to breast cancer services. These focus primarily on rapid access to diagnostic services, speedy access to treatment and the provision of high quality care delivered in line with published guidance by specialist multi-professional, multi-disciplinary teams.

Health authorities are monitoring achievement of all the approved funding and will provide a comprehensive report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State this autumn on the measurable improvements delivered in the services they provide.

Health Spending

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected annual average percentage increase in health spending between 1999–2000 and 2001–02 for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom. [53130]

Mr. Milburn: The projected annual average real-terms percentage increase in National Health Service Total Expenditure between 1999–2000 and 2001–2002 is 4.2 per cent. net in England. The United Kingdom net figure is 4.0 per cent.

Radiotherapists

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans to increase the number of radiotherapists in the National Health Service. [53144]

Mr. Milburn: The Department maintains an overview of the supply of trained personnel for the National Health Service.

Local employers should plan the numbers of radiotherapists (doctors) and therapy radiographers needed to deliver their radiotherapy services. These plans are used in assessing levels of training needed to produce the required numbers of fully-trained staff for the future.

At the same time, Specialty Workforce Advisory Group (SWAG) advises the National Health Service Executive and the Welsh Office on the number of higher specialist trainees needed, to ensure an adequate supply of properly trained doctors in each specialty. It carries out annual reviews of each specialty's need for consultants. SWAG has identified the specialty of radiotherapy (or clinical oncology) as having significant shortages.

For 1998–99, SWAG recommended further increases in the number of higher specialist trainees, in radiotherapy. It has recommended that these increases be treated as a priority.

NHS Waiting Lists

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients were suspended from National Health Service waiting lists for reasons other than clinical unfitness for surgery in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997; [53016]

(2) what projection he has made of the number of patients who will be suspended from National Health Service waiting lists for reasons other than clinical unfitness for surgery in 1998; [53015]

(3) what proportion of the estimated reduction in waiting lists based on provisional figures is accounted for by (a) administrative clean-up and (b) reprioritisation of the list; and if he will make a statement; [53140]

(4) if he will estimate the number of patients who have been removed from waiting lists since 2 May 1997 without their consent and without having received the treatment originally intended; and if he will make a statement. [53008]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Cancer Surgeons

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if cancer surgeons are currently receiving higher rates of remuneration for waiting list operation surgery than for other surgery performed as part of their regular duties; [53007]

(2) if he will make a statement on pay disparities between health authorities for cancer surgeons. [53014]

Mr. Milburn: The national salary rates applicable from 1 April 1998 for hospital consultants are specified in Advance Letter (MD) 1/98, copies of which are available in the Library. The salary rates apply to all consultants on national terms regardless of the speciality concerned. However, under arrangements introduced by the previous administration, trusts do have the flexibility to employ consultants on individual contracts of employment which may be remunerated on a higher basis than national terms and conditions of service. Trusts must ensure that the expenditure incurred represents good value for money and it will be open to scrutiny by auditors at the end of the financial year.

GP Resignations

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of GP resignations since the publication of his White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [53020]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the number of general practitioner resignations and their causes is not held centrally.

Spending Statistics

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual percentage average increase in health spending between 1990–91 and 1992–93 for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom. [53143]

Mr. Milburn: The information is in the table.

Real Terms Growth in National Health Service total expenditure

Percentage

	1990–91 and 1992–93
England (net)	6.3
England (gross)	5.8
United Kingdom (gross)	5.8

Notes:

1. UK net figure is not available on a comparable basis
2. Consistent with Gross Domestic Product deflator figures used in the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the actual annual average percentage increase in overall health spending for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) England in real terms between 1979–80 and 1996–97. [53131]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is in the table.

Percentage

	Real terms annual average growth in NHS total expenditure between 1979–80 and 1996–97
England net	3.1
England gross	3.3
UK gross	3.1

Notes:

1. United Kingdom net figure is not available on a comparable basis
2. Consistent with the Gross Domestic Product deflator figures used in the Comprehensive Spending Review White Paper

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected annual average percentage increase in overall health spending for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom in real terms between 1997–98 and 2001–02. [53133]

Mr. Milburn: The projected annual average real terms percentage increase in National Health Service total net expenditure between 1997–98 and 2001–02 is 4.1 per cent. in England and 3.9 per cent. in the United Kingdom.

Millennium Compliance

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the planned timescale for the verification of equipment replaced or altered in order to achieve year 2000 compliance for all systems within the Health Service and his Department. [53179]

Mr. Milburn: Chief Executives of health authorities and trusts have been instructed to ensure that by 31 December 1998 they have identified and resourced effective solutions for all Year 2000 problems that would otherwise compromise the safety of patients and staff, and the continuity of services.

In addition, chief executives have been instructed to ensure that by 30 September 1999 all parts of the National Health Service are fully prepared with compliant equipment or effective contingency plans in place.

The Department plans to complete Year 2000 compliance testing on all business critical systems by September 1999.

The plans were analysed by the Central Information Technology Unit and the Central Communications Technology Agency and their conclusions reported to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He arranged for the completed questionnaires and a summary to be placed in the Library and published on the internet. An update on the progress by the Department will be available in the autumn.

Ashford Hospital

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to oppose further transfers of services from Ashford (Middlesex) hospital to St. Peter's hospital, Chertsey; [53219]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the intensive care unit at Ashford (Middlesex) hospital. [53215]

Mr. Milburn: Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals National Health Service Trust was established on 1 April 1998 from the merger of two neighbouring acute NHS trusts. The trust is currently reviewing its services and the configuration of these between the two sites at Ashford and St. Peter's. We expect the trust and its health authorities to consider the interests of patients in any changes to service delivery. There will be public consultation on any significant service changes.

The trust is reviewing the capabilities of both hospital sites in view of the need to provide hospital services, including intensive care, that are fit for the 21st century. The trust must be able to meet accreditation standards for training doctors, and must be able to deliver high quality treatment and care. In considering its reconfiguration plans, the trust will be expected to maintain a broad range of services on site for the local population.

Mental Health Act 1983

Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the Mental Health Act 1983; and if he will make a statement. [53678]

Mr. Dobson: I am setting up a review of the Mental Health Act 1983. The aim of this review will be to ensure that mental health legislation supports the safe and effective delivery of modern patterns of clinical and social care for people with a mental disorder, and to ensure that we achieve a proper balance between individual rights and the requirements of the safety of both the individual and the wider community.

As a first step in this process, I am going to appoint a small team of experts to advise me on the areas of the current legislation which need to be revised or supplemented to support effective, modern mental health services. The group will comprise representatives from the legal profession, professional groups involved in the delivery of mental health services and user/public interests, and they will report to me next spring. I will specifically want their advice to include consideration of possible measures such as compliance orders and community treatment orders.

We aim to ensure that the legal framework that we will put in place for the new millennium is appropriate to deliver a full range of services in line with our proposals for a national service framework for mental health services, and will provide a prompt and effective legal basis to ensure individuals get supervised care if they fail to comply with their medication or if their condition deteriorates for any other reason.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Resettlement Grants

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been awarded resettlement grants each year since 1972 to relocate to avoid the troubles in Northern Ireland; what was the average resettlement grant; what criteria govern eligibility for such a grant; and if she will make a statement. [52770]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive whose Chief Executive has advised me that the information requested is as follows (for the purposes of the question Resettlement Grant has been interpreted as reference to Emergency Grant):

Emergency grant

Year	Number of people	Fixed amount of grant £
1995–96[1]	59	175
1996–97	200	180
1997–98	180	184
April-June 1998	35	189

[1] The information from 1972 would be available only at disproportionate cost

Criteria

Emergency Grant is payable to public and private sector tenants who are awarded A1 status (Intimidation) under the Housing Executive's Housing Selection Scheme as a result of civil disturbance, bomb damage, sectarian intimidation and subsequently permanently rehoused in the public or private sector.

Guardsmen Fisher and Wright

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to meet members of the families of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright or their representatives; what requests she has received on this matter; and what was her response. [53598]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to meet with members of the families of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright. She met my hon. Friend the Member for Carrick, Cummock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes), Constituency MP for the Fisher family, on Tuesday 10 March 1998. She also met my hon. Friend the Member for Cinlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on Thursday 22 January 1998. The purpose of these meetings was not to discuss the detail of the cases but rather to explain the Northern Ireland life sentence review process and how it applied to the Guardsmen's cases.

Mr. Peter McBride

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what occasions (a) she and (b) her officials have met members of the family of the late Mr. Peter McBride or their representatives; and on what occasions (i) the case of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright and (ii) the death of Mr. Peter McBride were discussed. [53597]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of the McBride family on Wednesday 8 July 1998. The details of the life sentence review of these cases were not discussed.

Benefit Information

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance she plans to issue to the Benefits Agency on its forthcoming obligations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to produce generic benefits information and information on individual benefits in a range of formats which blind and partially sighted people can access. [54069]

Mr. McFall: The Northern Ireland Disability Council and the Department of Health and Social Services will shortly be consulting on proposals for a revised Code of Practice and supporting regulations to take account of the next phase of implementation of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The Code of Practice will give practical guidance to service providers on how to prevent discrimination against disabled people in accessing the goods, facilities or services they provide.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the difficulties which blind and partially sighted people experience in obtaining access to information on benefits. [54068]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Thompson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Chris Thompson to Rev. Martin Smyth, dated 29 July 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what assessment has been made of the difficulties which blind and partially sighted people experience in obtaining access to information on benefits.

The Social Security Agency has not yet carried out any formal assessment of the needs of blind and partially sighted people. However, as you are aware the Benefits Agency are looking into the needs of these customers as part of the research for "Project Access". The findings of this project will be considered by the Social Security Agency.

However, I am giving further consideration to the issue in Northern Ireland and I will write to you again shortly.

Ulster Hospital

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what effect the recent events at Drumcree had on the availability of theatres at the Ulster Hospital for emergency casualties; and if she will make a statement. [54071]

Mr. McFall: The Ulster Hospital has six theatres, all of which could be utilised in an emergency situation. On Saturday, 11 July and Monday, 13 July two emergency theatres were utilised, while on Sunday, 12 July and Tuesday, 14 July one theatre was used.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Driving Offences

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes) of 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 103–04, on driving offences, if he will provide similar figures in respect of motorists in Gloucestershire for the most recent five years for which figures are available. [52286]

Mr. Michael: Figures for the years 1993–96 are as follows. The data for 1992 have been archived and are not readily available. Figures for 1997 are not yet available.

Number of proceedings and findings of guilt for certain motoring offences in England and Wales and the Gloucestershire Police District 1992–96

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) of 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 380, on asylum seekers, if he will list the more efficient working practices referred to in the answer; and if the plans for computerisation of casework are those plans in respect of which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), undertook to write to the hon. Member for Hertsmere in his answer of 7 May, Official Report, column 452. [52222]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 27 July 1998]: We have in hand organisational changes in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, which will result in a new Integrated Casework Directorate. This will handle the casework currently dealt with in five separate Directorates. We will get rid of the present hierarchical system of decision-making, in which wasteful duplication often causes delay.

We will devolve decision-making to the appropriate level, in teams which will deal with a case from start to finish. The teams will be fully supported by up-to-date information and we will have in place quality assurance mechanisms to audit decisions. We are well on the way to establishing this new Directorate. A pilot of the working methods will start in August.

The computerisation plans referred to in my answer to the right hon. Member for Caernarfon of 20 July are the same plans about which I undertook to write to the hon. Member for Hertsmere in my answer of 7 May. We still await proposals from Siemens Business Services for completing the next stage of the computerisation; the company has indicated that these will be available by 28 August.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide central Government funding to local authorities for the (a) social services, (b) health and (c) education costs incurred by asylum seekers. [53725]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the proposals set out in the White Paper published by my right hon. Friend on 27 July, from April 1999 the Home Office will have a budget for the cost of providing food, shelter and daily living expenses for asylum seekers. Detailed arrangements for the management of this budget have not yet been made. No changes are proposed in the funding of health care, education or other facilities used by asylum seekers.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory authority determines the United Kingdom's ability to return asylum seekers who have travelled to the United Kingdom through safe third countries directly to their country of origin. [53724]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Secretary of State may decide to consider the asylum application of any person who claims asylum in the United Kingdom, notwithstanding the fact that they may have previously travelled through one or more safe third countries, and, if he refuses the claim, he may seek to return the person to their country of origin under the provisions of the Immigration Act 1971 (and in particular paragraphs 8–10 of schedule 2 to that Act). Once the person has been notified of the Secretary of State's decision, they may not, under Schedule 3 to the 1993 Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act and Part II of Schedule 2 to the 1971 Act, be returned whilst any appeal they may have made against the decision to grant or vary leave to enter or remain is pending.

In practice, the Dublin Convention affects our ability to return people to third countries.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral statement of 27 July 1998, Official Report, columns 35–53, what external legal advice he has sought on the applicability of the provisions of the Dublin Convention as they relate to those of the Geneva Convention concerning asylum seekers. [53723]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has received external legal advice on various matters which have arisen during the course of legal challenges to decisions to transfer asylum seekers to other member states under the Dublin Convention. The Dublin Convention is primarily concerned with the issue of which European Union (EU) member state is to consider an asylum application made within the EU; it does not deal with the merits of that claim, which are the concern of the 1951 Geneva Convention.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers arriving at Heathrow Airport in each month since 1 May 1997 have sought asylum upon arrival; what was their country of origin; and how many of them remain in the United Kingdom. [53826]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information relating to persons who applied for asylum on arrival at Heathrow airport between 1 May 1997 and 31 May 1998, by nationality and month, is given in the table.

The available information is that, as at 30 June 1998, some 740 of those asylum seekers had been granted leave to enter as recognised refugees or on other grounds and a further 800 had been removed or departed voluntarily.

In addition, a number of the applicants will be awaiting a decision on their claim or the outcome of an appeal.

Firearms Compensation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much compensation has been paid as a result of the ban on the ownership of handguns to date; [52830]

(2) what the staff and overhead costs have been to date of operating the compensation scheme for owners of handguns; and what estimate he has made of the total costs.

Mr. Michael: The estimated total cost of operating the compensation scheme over two years is £3.0 million. The staff costs to date are £1.2 million out of total Firearms Compensation Section capital and running costs expenditure of £2.08 million. £53.8 million has been paid in compensation so far.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to expedite the payment of Category C claims under the Firearms Compensation Scheme. [52361]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 29 July 1998]: The Firearms Compensation Section (FCS) is taking all possible steps to clear the remaining Option C payments under the large calibre handgun surrender scheme and the ex gratia surrender scheme for small-calibre pistols as quickly as possible, having regard to the need to scrutinise claims closely to ensure that payments are made in accordance with the requirements of the compensation scheme and to guard against fraud. A number of measures are being taken to increase the processing rate, while maintaining these safeguards.

Two examining teams have been allocated specifically to dealing with the numerically few but very complex claims from firearms dealers, which present particular problems relating to the evidence of value of the surrendered goods, and consideration is being given to alternative forms of evidence where a dealer is unable to provide the precise evidence of value required by the terms of the scheme. The FCS is working closely with dealers and their representatives to resolve the outstanding issues as quickly as possible.

Arrangements have been made with the Forensic Science Service to identify unfamiliar items included in compensation claims, so that a quick decision can be made on their eligibility for compensation, and we are looking at the scope for flexibility within the scheme to make offers of payment other than through the time-consuming process of independent valuation in suitable cases. We are also streamlining administration where possible to reduce unnecessary work, for example by returning the evidence of value to claimants on request, rather than automatically, and by simplifying the database of values used by FCS as a payment guide by reducing the range and values of guns and equipment recorded.

The staff resources devoted to the operation of the compensation scheme have increased to 56, including 11 Agency staff. Given the expertise required to operate this complex part of the scheme, staff numbers have reached the maximum practical level, and recruitment efforts are aimed at sustaining that level. Staff are working regular weekend overtime in order to complete the task as quickly as possible.

Because of the complexity of dealers' claims and the wide variety of guns and equipment surrendered under Option C, much of it ineligible, progress with the payment of claims has been initially slow since work started full time on these claims at the end of May. The processing rate is expected to increase as the measures outlined above take effect and, although it no longer appears possible to clear all the claims by the end of the year, payment offers should be made on the great majority of claims by that time. We will work continuously to reduce this timescale if at all possible.

The Agency staff who have been registering the claims received under the statutory compensation scheme for small-calibre pistols surrendered in February 1998 have completed their work and will begin the processing of Option A and B claims under this scheme at the beginning of August. This work will continue in parallel with the work on the remaining Option C claims under the large calibre and ex gratia schemes.

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for Option C compensation for firearms remain outstanding in the Avon and Somerset Police Authority area. [53430]

Mr. Michael: There are currently 578 claims from the Avon and Somerset Police Force area where payment has not yet been made under Option C of the compensation scheme. The great majority of these have already received a payment under Options A or B. In 22 of these cases, an offer of payment has been made and is awaiting acceptance by the claimant.

British Nationality (Applications)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the average time taken to process applications to his Department on (a) Form ELR, (b) Form FLR (m), (c) Form FLR (s), (d) Form FLR (o), (e) Form SET (m), (f) Form SET (f), (g) Form SET (o), (h) Form AN and (i) travel document applications. [52779]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The average time taken to process postal applications received by staff in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's caseworking groups for further, indefinite and exceptional leave to remain (excluding refugees) is:

ELR: 147 days
FLR(M): 240 days
FLR(S): 111 days
FLR(O): 116 days
SET(M): 119 days
SET(F): 177 days
SET(0): 150 days.

In the second quarter of 1998, these types of case amounted to 46 per cent. of all decisions.

In the same period, a further 30 per cent. of decisions were dealt with by the Public Inquiry Office, which resolves over 90 per cent. of inquiries and applications on the same day, and a further 24 per cent. of decisions on postal applications were dealt with under the fast track procedures introduced last year for applications identified as straightforward. In the first six months of 1998, these procedures enabled cases to be processed within three days of receipt.

Settlement applications are also made by refugees, using the form SET(0). The average time taken to deal with these applications is two weeks.

The average time taken to process an application for a travel document is between 12 and 14 weeks.

The average time taken to process an application for naturalisation using the form AN is 19.8 months.

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants refused British nationality have been detained prior to removal since 1 January. [53329]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No one would be detained on the sole ground that they had been refused British nationality. It is possible that someone detained as an illegal entrant or deportee might also have been refused British nationality, but we have no records to determine this.

Freemasons

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to implement the measures outlined in the Government's response to the Third Report of the Home Affairs Committee Session 1996–97, on Freemasonry in the Police and Judiciary; if he will set his proposed timetable for any remaining steps; and if he will make a statement. [52917]

Mr. Michael: I wrote to the United Grand Lodge of the Freemasons on 27 March, requesting the Freemasons Society to disclose names of its members working within those professions and occupations listed in the Government's response to the Third Report. The United Grand Lodge replied on 24 April without providing this information. On 11 May, I wrote to the United Grand Lodge informing the Freemasons that the Government would press on with the process of implementing their policy of declaration and registration. The categories in relation to which the Government are currently considering implementation of its policy are: police; all members of the Judiciary, including the lay magistracy; Crown Prosecution Service legally qualified staff; Probation; Prison Service; Coroners; and members of police authorities.

Since May, officials have been discussing the mechanics of how to implement this policy, including a timetable for establishing a voluntary register and its format. The first step in the implementation process is the collation of names of serving office-holders and employees. This has already begun. As far as new office-holders and employees are concerned, including those transferring to new posts, relevant Departments are considering how to revise their recruitment procedures in order to meet the terms of the Government's policy. This process will continue in parallel with the implementation of arrangements for serving office-holders and employees.

Voluntary Workers

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to provide greater assistance to voluntary organisations and charities when they wish to screen the police records of their personnel; and if he will make a statement; [52774]

(2) what targets his Department has set for the percentage of voluntary workers working in contact with vulnerable groups, who will have had their records screened by the police; and if he will make a statement. [52775]

Mr. Michael: We have decided to implement Part V of the Police Act 1997 which provides for the establishment of a Criminal Records Agency. Once established, the Agency will be responsible for the issue of the three forms of certificates described in the Act. Priority will be given to the issue of Enhanced Criminal Record Certificates which will be available for those applying for positions which involve regular caring for, training, supervising or being in sole charge of persons under eighteen. The Agency will also issue Criminal Record Certificates, for posts or purposes which are exceptions to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, including duties involving regular contact with persons under eighteen; and Criminal Conviction Certificates, for general employment purposes. Consideration is being given to the arrangements for charging and the phasing in of certificates.

At present, only a limited number of voluntary organisations have access to criminal record checks. The establishment of the Criminal Records Agency will enable all voluntary organisations to consider which of their posts and personnel require police record checks and the type of certificate to be sought. It will be for organisations to decide this on the individual circumstances involved, assisted by a Code of Practice to be developed in consultation with interested parties. Any application to the Agency for disclosure of information will then require the consent of the person on whom the check is sought.

Alcopops

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the new code of practice relating to the marketing of alcopops; and what measures are in place to continue to monitor the behaviour of industry in its marketing of alcopops. [53694]

Mr. George Howarth: The Ministerial Group's statement last July welcomed the Portman Group's revised code on packaging and marketing alcohol products. The statement also set out recommended action by all interests. The Group plans to review progress this autumn, and will consider then both the impact of the new code and the question of further monitoring.

Prostitution

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent surveys have been undertaken by his Department to obtain information on the number of young people involved in prostitution. [53698]

Mr. Michael: Information on the numbers of persons cautioned and convicted of offences involving prostitution is collected on a continuous basis for our Cautions and Court Proceedings databases. No separate survey has been carried out by my Department.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what services his Department provides to (a) police and (b) local authorities to encourage young people to abandon prostitution; and if he will make a statement; [53701]

(2) how many young (a) females and (b) males are recorded as having been involved in prostitution in England and Wales in each of the last three years; and what measures his Department has taken to counter child prostitution. [53696]

Mr. Michael: The Information requested is given in the table.

Persons aged 10 to 17 cautioned and convicted for prostitution related offences[1] by sex—England and Wales, 1994–1996

	Cautions		Convictions
Year	Male	Female	Male	Female
1994	8	303	0	142
1995	3	263	4	101
1996	6	291	3	177

[1] Includes offences of soliciting by a man or a woman and kerb crawling

The Government recognise that children involved in prostitution are primarily victims of abuse and that those who exploit and use them should be treated as child abusers. We are determined to ensure that there are effective inter-agency arrangements to help children who have become involved in prostitution to leave it and to ensure that abusers are punished.

Against this background, we are taking a number of specific measures. First, the Department of Health and the Home Office are preparing new comprehensive guidance for the police and local authorities on the treatment of children in prostitution in collaboration with the police and social services. This guidance will build on the ground-breaking guidelines produced and piloted by the Association of Chief Police Officers, in consultation with others, on the treatment of children involved in prostitution. It will also take full account of the new juvenile justice arrangements in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] and the responses to the Department of Health consultation paper 'Working Together To Safeguard Children: New Government Proposals for Inter-Agency Co-operation'.

We will be consulting interested organisations on draft guidance later in the year.

Second, I announced on 15 June 1998, Official Report, column 10, that there will be a review of all sexual offences with the aim of ensuring that the framework of the sexual offences and penalties is coherent and effective. The review will cover the offences and penalties for those who use and abuse children who become involved in prostitution.

Third, we have introduced measures in the Crime and Disorder Bill which may help in dealing with the problem of children who have become involved in prostitution. For instance, the Bill places a duty on local authorities and the police, in partnership with other agencies, to carry out an audit of crime and disorder in their area. This should help to determine the extent of the involvement of children in prostitution in a local area, on the basis of which the partners will be able to devise a strategy for dealing with the problem.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women have been convicted of living on the immoral earnings of prostitution in each of the last three years. [53697]

Mr. Michael: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings database, including number of cautions, is given in the table.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial support his Department currently provides to organisations encouraging young people to leave prostitution. [53699]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office does not directly fund organisations which encourage young people to leave prostitution. This is essentially a local function. Central Government do provide grants to local probation committees through the probation service, some of which may be used on work which encourages young people to leave prostitution. Details of how the money is spent are not held centrally.

The Department of Health awards both core and project grants to a number of organisations each year through the General Section 64 Scheme (S64). Barnardos is receiving funding over three years to contribute to the cost of a National Development Officer who will evaluate present and proposed services for children who are involved in or at risk of sexual exploitation, including commercial sexual exploitation, and to support various projects.

Police (School Contact)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he proposes to promote contact between the local police forces and schools. [53577]

Mr. Michael: Liaison between local police forces and schools provides an important first contact with the police for young people and the opportunity to create positive relationships. Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary's thematic inspection of police community relations, whose report was published last October, found clear evidence that the use of schools liaison officers had a positive effect on police/community relations and recommended that the value of such officers to foster links and enhance the image of the police should be recognised by forces. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary will be conducting a follow up inspection of 15 forces in the autumn to assess progress.

Joint guidance issued by the Department for Education and Employment and the Home Office last December on schools security covers police assistance to schools in helping them to develop security strategies and in responding to incidents on school premises. It should also help promote partnerships between local police forces and schools.

A range of measures in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] will encourage joint working between the police and education services, including schools. For example, use of the new power for the police to remove truants will involve the drawing up of strategies by the local education authority and schools in conjunction with the police to address identified local truancy problems while schools will have an important role in the local crime and disorder reduction partnerships and in the development of Youth Action Groups.

Police (Norfolk)

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of police officers in Norfolk took voluntary early retirement in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the national average. [53576]

Mr. Michael: Statistics are not held in the specific form requested, but the number of voluntary resignations from Norfolk Constabulary in 1997–98 was 12, which was 14 per cent. of the total who ceased to serve in the force of that year. This compares with a total of 924 voluntary resignations from forces in England and Wales, also 14 per cent. of the total who ceased to serve in that year, and 712 or 14 per cent. from provincial forces in England and Wales (excluding the Metropolitan Police). Voluntary resignations do not include early retirement with an ill-health pension, which is for management to determine.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many working hours were lost by the Norfolk Police due to sick leave in the last year for which figures are available, and what was the national average. [53575]

Mr. Michael: Information on police sick leave is collected on the basis of days lost rather than hours. In 1997–98, 15,053 police days were lost through sickness in Norfolk Constabulary (4.6 per cent. of the total working days), compared with a national average in England and Wales of 37,084 police days (5.6 per cent.) and a provincial average (excluding the Metropolitan Police) of 28,573 police days (5.3 per cent.).

Constitutional Change

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to date of his Department's role in educating and informing the public on constitutional changes introduced by the Government. [53557]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The White Paper "Rights Brought Home—The Human Rights Bill", which preceded the Human Rights Bill, cost £1,800.

We have made a grant of £15,000 to the Institute for Citizenship to support their "Get the Vote Out! Europe 1999" campaign.

On-line Lotteries

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report the outcome of consultation on the draft Bill to restrict the operation of on-line lotteries; and if he will make a statement. [54148]

Mr. Michael: We published the draft Lotteries (Frequent Draws) Bill on 7 January for comments. We received responses on behalf of 127 organisations and individuals.

Among those we consulted, 46 respondents supported legislation. These included other gambling sectors, churches, regulators and organisations concerned with problem gambling. 74 respondents opposed legislation, predominantly charitable organisations which had hoped for an additional source of finance for their sector. The remaining seven respondents were neutral or expressed no overall view.

Most of those in favour of legislation supported or accepted the draft Bill's proposal for a limit of one draw a day in all premises. Most of those against it suggested that we should await research on the effect of rapid on-line lottery draws or a general review of gambling legislation.

We have concluded that on-line lotteries do need to be brought under proper statutory controls. We intend to legislate when the legislative programme allows.

As previously proposed, the legislation will be used to limit on-line lottery draws to one a day in any particular premises, with the detailed provisions being amended in the light of points made in consultation.

We also consulted on possible increases to stake and proceeds limits. As previously indicated, it will not be appropriate to proceed with that matter until legislation restricting the frequency of on-line lotteries is in place. In the light of the consultation, we will further consider whether such increases are desirable in due course.

I am making available an analysis of the responses to the consultation and paper setting out the Government's views on the main points raised. I have placed copies of these documents in the Library, together with the responses.

Sexual Offences

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he anticipates that the review group looking into abuse of trust in the context of sexual relationships with people aged under 18 years will report. [53916]

Mr. Michael: The Working Group will look both at preventing unsuitable people from working with children and at abuse of trust. It is due to report by the end of the year at the latest, and I have asked the Group to give priority to looking at issues concerning abuse of trust.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects his review of discriminatory provisions of existing sexual offences laws to be complete; with whom the review group is consulting; and when it commenced its deliberations. [53917]

Mr. Michael: We are considering how best this review can be undertaken. Its membership and terms of reference will be published in due course.

Age of Consent

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with which sponsors of the Age of Consent amendment to the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords], he held discussions prior to 28 July. [53932]

Mr. Michael: Over a period of time, I have had discussions with Stonewall and with a wide variety of individuals and organisations with an interest in the age of consent. My right hon. Friend and I also had a number of conversations with several of the sponsors of the age of consent amendment.

Passport Office

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next proposes to review future options on the Passport Office in Newport, Gwent. [53280]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no plans to review options on the Passport Office at Newport. The Passport Agency undertook a review of the role and location of its offices in 1995 and concluded that its six regional passport offices (sited in Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, London, Newport and Peterborough) were able to meet anticipated levels of demand in the most effective way and there was no case for altering the number or location of offices. This remains the Agency's position and we are not considering any changes.

Sussex Police

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what progress was made by the Sussex Constabulary in the recruitment of more police officers from ethnic minorities in the last year for which figures are available; [53439]

(2) what progress was made by the Sussex Constabulary in the recruitment of more women constables in the last year for which figures are available. [53438]

Mr. Michael: In 1997, Sussex Police recruited 39 female officers and 2 officers from ethnic minorities (the information is given in the table). The Chief Constable tells me that the Sussex Police Force is aware of the under-representation in the force of female and ethnic minority officers, and is exploring means of removing any barriers to recruitment. Vacancies will be published in local and national ethnic newspapers.

Number of female and ethnic minority recruits to Sussex Police in 1997 and 1998 (to date)

	Start of 1997	End of 1997	1998 (to date)
Force establishment	3,109	3,056	3,060
Female officers	464	484	504
Female recruits	—	39	[1]44
Ethnic minority officers	21	23	23
Ethnic minority recruits	—	2	2

[1] 28 female candidates still being processed

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53350]

Mr. Straw: The Welsh Language Board asked the Home Office to prepare a draft scheme in September 1996. A number of consultations have taken place with the Welsh Language Board on working drafts of the scheme since then.

The Welsh Language Board has seen and commented on the most recent working drafts and a final version of the scheme is currently in development for submission to the Welsh Language Board for approval.

Correspondence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Spelthorne, dated 28 May, concerning Mr. S. Wolf of Shepperton, reference 10766/98. [53786]

Mr. Michael: I replied to the hon. Member on 26 July.

Surrey Fire and Rescue Service

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet Spelthorne Borough Council to discuss Surrey County Council's proposed changes to their provision of fire services in the borough. [53790]

Mr. George Howarth: I have written to the hon. Member to explain that I would be prepared to consider further written representations from Spelthorne Borough Council. Because of the technical nature of the issues involved, it is normally more appropriate for representations against changes to the provision of fire cover to be made in writing. However, I have asked to be informed if there are particular reasons why points which the Borough Council might wish to make could be made to me direct only at a meeting.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed strike action by the staff of Surrey Fire and Rescue Service; and if he will hold talks with Surrey County Council and the Fire Brigades Union. [53791]

Mr. George Howarth: Responsibility for resolving this local dispute rests primarily with the County Council, as the fire authority, and its employees, and I have no plans to hold talks with either the County Council or the Fire Brigades Union. To ensure the continuing safety of the public, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has, however, agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence that, at the request of the County Council, military personnel should be deployed, when needed, to provide emergency fire cover.

Youth Justice

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has received from the Youth Justice Task Force. [54869]

Mr. Straw: The Youth Justice Task Force delivered its final report, which incorporates all the advice it has given, this month. That advice has helped frame the youth justice measures now reflected in the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords] and provides a steer for the early work of the new Youth Justice Board for England and Wales. Copies of the Task Force's final report have been placed in the Library and will be made available on the internet. The Task Force has now been wound up.

Terrorism Legislation

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the consultation paper on future legislation against terrorism will be published. [54876]

Mr. Straw: Work on the preparation of the consultation paper is well advanced and we now envisage that it will be published in the autumn.

Prison Service

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the performance of Her Majesty's Prison Service in 1997–98. [54878]

Mr. Straw: I am pleased to report that I have today laid before Parliament the Prison Service's Annual Report and Accounts. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to conduct a quinquennial review of the Prison Service Agency. [54883]

Mr. Straw: The Prison Service was established as a Next Steps Executive Agency on 1 April 1993. Since then there have been a number of changes to the relationship between the Service and the main Home Office. Most importantly, as promised in the Labour Party manifesto, since the general election the Government have acted to take proper Ministerial responsibility for the Service. Against this background and taking the opportunity of the quinquennial review of Next Steps Agencies which is now due, I am today announcing an evaluation of the performance of the Agency, reconsideration of Prior Options relating to Agency Status and, if appropriate, a review of the existing framework document.

The terms of reference for the review are as follows:

to conduct an evaluation of the performance of the Agency since its inception; in the light of this evaluation to consider whether, among the available options, Agency Status remains the most cost effective way of achieving Home Office aims within the context of proper Ministerial responsibility; and if the review concludes that the Prison Service should continue to function as an Executive Agency, to consider what changes, if any, are required to the framework document and financial memorandum in light of the findings of the review and the changes we have made to the arrangements for Ministerial responsibility for the Service; if, however, the review concludes otherwise, to recommend the transitional arrangements necessary to facilitate transformation of the Service from Executive Agency to another organisational entity.

The review will be conducted by officials from the main Home Office working with officials in the Prison Service. It will draw on and take account of other relevant work, for example the Prison Service Review which was published earlier in the year and the Prison-Probation Review.

I welcome the views of all interested parties and, in particular, the review team will seek the views of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Probation, the Parole Board and the Prison Ombudsman. My noble Friend the Lord Williams of Mostyn is today writing to the Chairman of the Boards of Visitors National Advisory Council, the Home Office Trade Union Side, the Prison Service Trade Union Side, the Prison Officers Association, the Prison Governors' Association, the Secretary of the Prison Service Joint Industrial Council, the Association of Chief Probation Officers, the National Association of Probation Officers, the Central Probation Council and the Directors of the Prison Reform Trust, the Howard League for Penal Reform and the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders, inviting their views. We shall also be seeking the views of the Criminal Justice Consultative Council and organisations associated with it.

It is hoped to publish the outcome of the review around the end of the year.

Horserace Betting Levy

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the third report on the impact of the National Lottery on the horserace betting levy. [54882]

Mr. George Howarth: An update on the impact of the National Lottery on the horserace betting levy has been published today and will be placed in the Library. This fulfils an undertaking made during the passage of the National Lottery Bill.

The paper, which has been prepared by the Economics Unit of the Home Office, examines continuing trends in off-course betting expenditure, on which the Levy closely depends.

The statistical analysis indicates that, in 1997, off-course betting expenditure was about 12.8 per cent. below the level it would have reached in the absence of the National Lottery. Horserace betting accounts for about 69 per cent. of off-course betting expenditure, and therefore the levy yield is likely to have been similarly affected. This can be only an approximate figure, and the effect of the Lottery may vary over time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Youth Justice

32. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Government's fast track prosecution of juveniles. [51720]

The Attorney-General: Since the Government announced their commitment to tackle delays in the youth justice system, there has been a significant increase in the number of court areas operating or planning to introduce fast-tracking schemes. From a figure shortly after the election of 12 youth court areas operating fast track schemes, there are now over 150 youth court areas either operating or planning to introduce schemes. The effect of these schemes cannot be fully evaluated yet but it is clear that real efforts are being made at a local level to respond. An example of a successful scheme is North Hampshire where the average time between charge and sentence has been reduced from 133 days to 89. The Government are confident that, taken together with the measures contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill, they will lead to a significant reduction in delays in the youth justice system.

Court Waiting Times

33. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received concerning the length of time between the arrest and conviction of offenders; and if he will make a statement. [51721]

The Attorney-General: I have not received any representations on this subject. The Lord Chancellor's Department and the Court Service collect statistics on the time taken by cases dealt with in the magistrates' courts and the Crown Court respectively. The latest figures show a decrease in the time taken from charge or summons to completion for defendants in indictable—including triable either way—cases in magistrates' courts, and a slight increase in disposal times in the Crown Court for cases committed for trial.

The Crime and Disorder Bill includes measures to reduce delay throughout the whole process.

Prosecution Policy

34. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Attorney-General under what circumstances community interest is taken into account by officers of the Crown Prosecution Service in determining whether to proceed with a prosecution. [51722]

The Attorney-General: The twin criteria set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors require, first, that there should be sufficient evidence to afford a realistic prospect of conviction; and, secondly, that prosecution should be in the public interest. The prevalence of an offence in a particular area is a factor which should be taken into account and may require a prosecution where otherwise that might not be the case. The Crown Prosecution Service expects to work in conjunction with the statutory partnerships provided for by the Crime and Disorder Bill to implement local strategies for reducing crime and disorder.

Crown Prosecution Service

35. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General when he proposes to allow barristers employed by the Crown Prosecution Service to represent it in all courts. [51724]

The Attorney-General: All CPS lawyers, whether barristers or solicitors, are able to appear as advocates in the magistrates' courts. Bar Council and Law Society rules govern the exercise of rights of audience in the higher courts by employed barristers and solicitors respectively. Employed solicitors were granted limited rights of audience in the higher courts in February 1997. Employed barristers have not yet been granted the same limited rights. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has recently published a consultation paper on the future of rights of audience which contains proposals for modernising the system and removing the current restrictions which discriminate between barristers and solicitors, and between employed lawyers and those in private practice. I support these proposals and welcome the publication of the consultation paper.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received on his proposals for the reorganisation of the Crown Prosecution Service. [51719]

The Attorney-General: My Statement to the House on publication of the Glidewell Report invited comments from interested parties. The numerous responses so far received reflect the same warm welcome which the Report initially received. I have been particularly pleased to note wide acceptance for the "whole system approach" to criminal justice issues which this Government have adopted as well as for the proposed restructuring of the CPS into 42 Areas.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the task forces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by his Department since 1 May 1997, indicating in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers, (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53285]

The Attorney-General: On 12 June 1997 I established the Review of the Crown Prosecution Service under the chairmanship of the right hon. Sir Iain Glidewell, a retired Lord Justice of Appeal. He was assisted by Sir Geoffrey Dear (a retired HM Inspector of Constabulary) and Mr. Robert McFarland, a retired Chief Executive of a multi-national company. Their Report was published on 1 June 1998.

The terms of reference for the Review were set out in my written answer to the House on 12 June 1997, Official Report, column 533. Sir Iain Glidewell was remunerated according to the daily sitting rate established for retired members of the Court of Appeal who discharge judicial duties and that was £556.00 per day. Sir Geoffrey Dear and Mr. Robert McFarland were each remunerated at the rate of £440.00 per day each. Subject to some outstanding items, the overall cost of the review was £652,466.00.

Crown Counsel

Mr. Stott: To ask the Attorney-General if the working party which he established to review the system of appointing counsel to act for the Government in civil cases has reported to him. [54617]

The Attorney-General: In February I established a working party to review the system of appointment counsel to act for the Crown in civil cases and to monitor the use of barristers appointed to act. The working party was chaired by the then Solicitor General (Lord Falconer QC) and included representatives from the Bar Council (Laura Cox QC and Lincoln Crawford), the two First Treasury Counsel (Philip Sales and Jonathan Crow) and officials from the Government Legal Service.

The working party has now reported to me and I have accepted their recommendations. I am grateful to the members of the working party for their thorough consideration of the appointment process. A copy of the working party's report has been placed in the Library of each House of Parliament.

Rape Prosecutions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what further steps he plans to take to assist the Crown Prosecution Service to bring successful prosecutions in rape cases, with particular reference to the gathering of evidence. [53588]

The Attorney-General: The gathering of evidence in all criminal investigations is a matter for the police. The Crown Prosecution Service reviews and conducts cases in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors, once the police investigation is complete. The Home Office is conducting research on the attrition rate in rape cases, the results of which will be published. The Crown Prosecution Service will carefully consider the results of that research to identify whether changes need to be made to Crown Prosecution Service guidance or practice.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53352]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service launched its Welsh Language policy on 11 April 1994 and was commended for this by the Welsh Language Board. On 14 October 1997, an informal discussion took place between members of the Crown Prosecution Service and the Welsh Language Board on the preparation of a formal Crown Prosecution Service Welsh Language Policy in accordance with the provisions of the Welsh Language Act 1993. On 30 October 1997, the Welsh Language Board wrote to the Director of Public Prosecutions to invite the Crown Prosecution Service to prepare a Welsh Language Scheme and submit it to the Board for approval by 31 July 1998. The Director confirmed that the Crown Prosecution Service was happy to comply and the draft Welsh Language Scheme was submitted to the Welsh Language Board for approval on 17 July 1998. When the Board's comments have been received, the Crown Prosecution Service will advertise the details of the draft Scheme for comment from interested parties.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Attorney-General how much his Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figure are available. [52894]

The Attorney-General: For the financial year 1997–1998 the figures for IT hardware spending for my Departments were:

	Expenditure (£)
	[1]a	b	c	[2]d
Crown Prosecution Service	523,476	—	—	23,265
Serious Fraud Office	44,000	—	—	53,000
Treasury Solicitor	181,577	—	—	31,930
Government Property Lawyers Agency	19,498	—	—	715
Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	52,172	—	—	16,089

TREASURY

Home Births

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children in (a) 1990 and (b) 1998 were born at home; and if he will make a statement. [52923]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 30 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the number of children born at home in 1990 and 1998.

The numbers of children born at home in England and Wales in 1990 and 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, are shown in the table below.

Numbers of children born at home, England and Wales

Year	Number
1990	7,317
1997	14,351

Debt (Foreign Governments)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure greater transparency and public access to information on debts owed by other Governments to the United Kingdom Government. [53233]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD publishes details on its recoverable claims on other countries in its Annual Report and Trading Accounts.

The Government are pressing the IMF and World Bank to consider the case for publishing in a timely and systematic way all key surveillance and programme documents, including publication of Press Information Notices for all Article IV consultations, publications of all letters of intent and policy framework papers, and publication of Country Assistance Strategies (CASs).

Weekly Wages

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Greater London and (c) each constituency in Greater London the average weekly wage for (1) manual, (2) non manual and (3) all workers. [53558]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 30 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on average weekly wages.

The latest available information, from the New Earnings Survey 1997, is contained in the attached tables. These tables are voluminous and copies of them are being placed in the Library of the House rather than reproduced in Hansard.

Euro

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much his Department will spend in 1998 on informing the public about the introduction of the euro; [53832]

(2) what resources his Department will allocate towards public education in respect of the introduction of the euro; [53702]

(3) what resources his Department will allocate in 1999 to educating and informing the public about the introduction of the euro. [53833]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's communication campaign on the euro is not a general public education campaign but is specifically targeted at ensuring UK businesses, especially small and medium sized firms, are aware of the implications of the introduction of the single currency from 1 January 1999 and have the information they need to address the issues arising from this.

To meet this objective, the Treasury Euro Preparations Unit has received Summer Supplementary Estimate provision of £7.5 million to help raise business awareness during 1998–99. No expenditure has been authorised beyond this.

Banking (Micronesia)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to seek to improve the standard of banking regulation in Micronesia. [53968]

Ms Hewitt: Banking regulation in the Federated States of Micronesia is the responsibility of the Micronesian authorities. The UK, however, supports moves to strengthen national financial systems, and is working in various international groupings to encourage improved standards of banking regulation and supervision.

Financial Services

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of his plans for reform of financial services regulation. [54816]

Mr. Byers: The Government have today published a draft of the Financial Services and Markets Bill for consultation, together with a consultation paper and explanatory material.

The draft Bill will give effect to the proposals to reform the financial services regulatory structure, announced in broad terms by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement to Parliament of 20 May 1997, Official Report, columns 537–46. It is intended that the draft Bill will make the Financial Services Authority the single, statutory regulator for the United Kingdom's financial services industry. It equips it with all the statutory functions and powers needed to operate a single regime for authorisation and regulation of financial services business. It allows it to operate with great flexibility whilst ensuring that any burdens or restrictions imposed by regulation are proportionate to the benefits.

The Bill will provide the framework for single ombudsman and compensation schemes and a single appeals tribunal. It will introduce important new powers to deal with market abuse. It will also provide for a major element of external accountability for the regulation of Lloyd's.

The first stage of the legislative process was completed when the Bank of England Act 1998 came into force on 1 June, transferring the prudential supervision of banks to the FSA. Publication of the draft Bill is the next, important stage in the process. Full public consultation will be beneficial to ensure that the new system is efficient and effective. Comments are sought on any aspects of the Government's plans to implement the modernisation of financial services regulation by 30 October 1998. The Government also welcome the likelihood that the Treasury Select Committee will wish to be involved in the consultation.

Copies of the draft Bill and the other documents have been placed in the Vote Office and the Library of the House and can be found on the HM Treasury website (http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk).

Since 1 June, the Financial Services Authority has made considerable progress in bringing together operations under the Banking Act 1987 and the Financial Services Act 1986. The Government have now decided, with the agreement of the Authority, that it should take further steps towards the full integration of financial services regulation that will be completed when the legislation is enacted. Accordingly, it will take responsibility for supporting the Building Societies Commission, the Friendly Societies Commission and, in relation to credit unions, the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies in the exercise of their functions, and for acting on behalf of the Treasury in the conduct of insurance supervision under the Insurance Companies Act 1982, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

To this end the Government propose to make an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to contract out the relevant insurance supervision functions to the Authority. The Authority will enter into contracts with the Treasury and with the Building Societies Commission, the Friendly Societies Commission and the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies setting out its responsibilities in these areas. These arrangements will be in place to enable the Authority to take on these additional responsibilities in January 1999.

Tax Law Rewrite Project

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further developments there have been on the Tax Law Rewrite project. [54877]

Dawn Primarolo: The Tax Law Rewrite project aims to bring clarity to our direct tax legislation, making the law more accessible to taxpayers and their advisers. The Inland Revenue have today published the project's second Exposure Draft, containing draft clauses relating to savings and investment income of individuals and a detailed commentary. Numerous innovative techniques have been adopted; in particular, the rewritten legislation incorporates easier to understand language, a more logical structure and shorter sentences. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

This Exposure Draft is the first of six planned for 1998–99. We are committed to proceeding with them all on the basis of the full and open consultation that has been the hallmark of this project from the beginning. I urge everybody with an interest in tax law to take this further opportunity to comment.

Teenage Mothers

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many children have been born to mothers under the age of 20 years in each year since 1990. [52919]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 30 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the number of children who have been born to mothers under the age of 20 years in each year since 1990.

The numbers of live births to mothers aged under 20 in England and Wales for the years 1990 to 1996 are published in Table 3.1 of the annual reference volume 1996 Birth Statistics FM1 No. 25. This publication is available in the House of Commons Library.

In England and Wales during 1997, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 46,316 live births to mothers aged under 20.

International Debt Relief

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the international debt relief total is owed to the United Kingdom (a) Government and (b) financial institutions. [52246]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 28 July 1998]: (a) World Bank figures state that the total debt owed by the twenty countries identified by the IMF as eligible for debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative is about $100 billion, of which the UK government is owed about $1.3 billion.

(b) The Government do not keep records of the debts held by private sector financial institutions.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those compliance cost assessments since 1 May 1997 in which there is a net reduction in compliance costs resulting from a legislative proposal. [52962]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 28 July 1998]: There is presently no requirement on Departments to carry out compliance cost assessments where legislative proposals are expected to be cost neutral or result in a saving to business.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by her Department since 1 May 1997. [52961]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Details of compliance cost assessments published by the Chancellor's departments are contained in the 6 monthly command paper of compliance costs assessments.

Between 1 May 1997 and 30 June 1998 twelve compliance costs assessments covering the period have been published:

The Building Societies Act 1997 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1997;

The Financial Services Act 1986 (Extension of Scope of Act) Order 1997;

The Gaming Duty Regulations 1997.

The Industrial and Provident Societies (Credit Unions) (Amendment of Fees) Regulations 1998

The Friendly Societies (General Charge and Fees) Regulations 1998.

The Building Societies (General Charge and Fees) Regulations 1998.

The Industrial and Provident Societies (Amendment of Fees) Regulations 1998.

The Bank of England Act 1998.

Arising out of the Finance (No. 2) Bill 1998:

The Modernisation of the Transfer Pricing Legislation

The Controlled Foreign Companies Legislation and Self Assessments

A Modern System for Corporation Tax Payments

The Capital Gains Tax Reform.

Statistical Areas

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) which Government departments were charged with drawing up the criteria in respect of the review of NUTS 2 statistical areas; and what criteria were used in each area; [51838]

(2) what consultations were undertaken with Her Majesty's Government, by Eurostat in respect of the review of NUTS 2 statistical areas, with specific reference to Northumberland and Durham. [51839]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Denis Murphy, dated 30 July 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary questions on the new NUTS-2 statistical areas for the UK.

Following a public consultation exercise in Summer 1996, the Government Statistical Service Committee on Regional Statistics drafted proposals for a new NUTS structure for the UK which were submitted to Eurostat in July 1997. The document "Proposals for the UK Nomenclature of Territorial Units (NUTS) (May 1997)" describes the departments involved and the criteria taken into account, including those principles applied by Eurostat. Copies of this document are available in the House of Commons library.

Throughout the subsequent negotiations, Eurostat stressed that in their view the UK proposals contained too many NUTS-2 areas and that changes from the old structure were unjustified. Within the North East, the old structure contained two NUTS-2 areas—(i) Cleveland and Durham, and (ii) Northumberland and Tyne & Wear. The proposals suggested the creation of three NUTS-2 areas within the North East—(i) Cleveland and Darlington, (ii) Durham and Northumberland, and (iii) Tyne & Wear. The sizes of the existing two areas, in population terms, were already smaller than the EU average, and creating three areas would reduce the UK average further. Also, in Eurostat's view this proposal was not consistent with their criteria.

We continued to press the case for the UK proposals in respect of the North East throughout the negotiations. However, after a lengthy impasse, Eurostat made it clear that this proposal was not going to be accepted. In order to reach agreement for the UK as a whole, we had to accept their position. In the absence of an agreement, Eurostat, with whom the final decision on the classification rests, would have continued to use the existing NUTS-2 structure for the UK with virtually no change in any region.

The NUTS structure finally agreed with Eurostat was published in a News Release on 29 June, and copies are also available in the House of Commons Library.

Inflation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what date he plans to reduce inflation to its target level. [53433]

Ms Hewitt: Under the monetary policy framework introduced in May 1997, the Government's role is to set the inflation target. The Bank of England is responsible for taking operational decisions to meet the inflation target.

The inflation target is 2½ per cent. at all times. However, monetary policy affects inflation with a lag and the actions taken by the MPC will not yet have had their full effect on inflation.

Written Answers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of written parliamentary questions tabled for answer by his Department on a named day under S.O. No. 22(4) have been answered substantively on the named day since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [53453]

Ms Hewitt: 30.1 per cent. (473 out of 1,569).

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53070]

Ms Hewitt: The numbers of (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years employed by (i) HM Treasury and (ii) the Chancellor's other departments and agencies on 1 January 1998, or as near as possible where figures at that date are not readily available, are as follows:

Department or Agency	Men	Women
HM Treasury	3	9
Debts Management Office	0	0
Office for National Statistics	16	24
National Savings	23	40
Royal Mint	48	0
HM Customs and Excise	250	146
Inland Revenue	39	36
Valuation Office Agency	8	6

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53047]

Ms Hewitt: The numbers of (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years employed by (1) HM Treasury and (2) the Chancellor's other departments and agencies who have contracts of employment permitting them to retire after their 60th birthday are as follows:

Department or Agency	Men	Women
HM Treasury[1]	5	27
Debts Management Office	0	0
Office for National Statistics	39	95
National Savings	13	33
Royal Mint[1]	783	172
HM Customs and Excise	8,934	9,257
Inland Revenue	0	0

Euro Preparations Unit

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a breakdown of the £1 million initial information programmes budget for the Euro Preparations Unit. [53736]

Ms Hewitt: The Euro Preparations Unit was established last December, with an initial programmes budget of £1.1 million which was allocated to:

- printing and publishing of information, including business preparations factsheets, to help UK business prepare for the introduction of the single currency on 1 January 1999;
- development of a communications campaign strategy;
- running Ministerial EMU awareness seminars and regional conferences;
- conducting surveys to assess the level of preparedness amongst UK small and medium sized firms.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what steps he has taken to ensure the impartiality of publications which are (a) published and (b) distributed in the United Kingdom with the aid of public funds, as part of the information campaign on the single currency; [53731]

(2) if he will list the publications produced by the Euro Preparations Unit since December 1997. [53742]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

"EMU: Report from the Business Advisory Group"—January 1998

"EMU: The euro and your business"—March 1998

"EMU: Steps for 1999"—May 1998

"business preparations for the euro"—June 1998

"getting ready for the euro"—first report July 1998

"Local Government Preparations for the euro"—July 1998.

All these publications, except "EMU: Steps for 1999" and "Local Government Preparations for the euro", focus on helping UK businesses understand the strategic and practical implications of the launch of the single currency on 1 January 1999.

All the publications are factual and impartial in that they neither promote nor denigrate the euro. The Government have been assisted by the Business Advisory Group and the Information Steering Committee in preparing these booklets.

"EMU: Steps for 1999" is aimed at organisations in both the private and public sectors. The booklet sets out the steps that the Government are taking to prepare for the introduction of the single currency. Our most recent publication, "Local Government Preparations for the euro", aims to help local government prepare for the launch of the euro.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to announce the final regulations regarding the launch of ISAs. [53711]

Ms Hewitt: Regulations will be laid before the House as soon as possible after the Finance Bill receives the Royal Assent.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate how many ISA providers will be in place by April 1999; [53768]

(2) how many approaches he has had from financial companies wishing to register as ISA providers; [53767]

(3) what minimum target his Department has set for approved ISA providers to be reached before the new system goes live on 6 April 1999. [53769]

Ms Hewitt: ISAs will not be available until 6 April 1999 but those who wish to become ISA managers will be able to seek approval from an earlier date to be specified in the regulations. Based on the existing number of PEP and TESSA providers, it is expected that around 500–600 bodies will become ISA managers. No minimum target number of approved managers has been set and the Revenue aims to complete the approval process, for all those who apply promptly and meet the qualifying conditions, in good time for April 1999.

"Talking about the Euro"

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the nature of the European Commission document "Talking about the Euro". [53739]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor has received no such representations.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 July 1998, Official Report, column 750, how many of the 45 surveys referred to were published prior to the publication of the Comprehensive Spending Review; and how many of the surveys published after the publication of the Comprehensive Spending Review were more pessimistic than the assumptions used by the Treasury in the EFSR. [53914]

Ms Hewitt: The most recent edition of the Treasury's regular comparison of independent forecasts was published in July. It is available in the House of Commons Library and more widely via the Treasury's Internet site.

Twenty-seven out of the forty-five surveys were new in July and so followed the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report which set out the key information on the new spending plans, subsequently confirmed in the Comprehensive Spending Review. The average forecast for growth in 1999 in these new forecasts is almost exactly in line with the Treasury assumption adopted in the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report. Around half of them show higher growth, and around half are lower.

Unemployment

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent changes he has made to his estimate of future unemployment levels in UK manufacturing. [53766]

Mr. Byers: In line with the convention adopted by previous Governments, the Government do not publish any forecast of unemployment.

Interest Rates

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what circumstances he would consider taking control over interest rates from the Bank of England. [53435]

Ms Hewitt: The Bank of England Act 1998 has given the Bank of England operational responsibility to set interest rates to meet the Government's inflation target. The Treasury's reserve powers are set out in Chapter 11, part II, section 19 of that Act.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out for each year from 1998–99 to 2001–02 the increase in Personal Social Services in (a) cash terms, (b) real terms and (c) as a percentage adjusted for the amount provided in Special Transitional Grant in 1998–99 and subsequently increased in line with the Government's inflation assumptions. [52609]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 27 July 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

After allowance has been made for the transfer of responsibility for asylum seekers from the Department of Health to the Home Office, the increases in total resources from 1998–99 to 2001–02 for personal social services in England are as set out in the table.

	Planned provision (million)	Cash increase (percentage)
1998–99	8,387	—
		6.2
1999–2000	8,915	3.6
		5.5
2000–01	9,408	3.0
		5.3
2001–02	9,906	2.7

The figures are for total provision. Thus, figures for 1998–99 include the special transitional grant, and all other revenue grants in that year, except support for asylum seekers.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Social Landlords

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the low cost home ownership incentive schemes offered by registered social landlords and to enable more registered social landlords to offer flexible tenure schemes. [54622]

Ms Armstrong: We plan to simplify the range of low cost home ownership schemes available through Registered Social Landlords (RSLs) in England by offering a new scheme based on the Homebuy scheme that has run successfully in Wales since 1994.

Qualifying tenants will receive interest-free equity loans to meet 25% of the cost of buying a home of their own. Funding for the scheme will be provided by the Housing Corporation, and RSLs will be able to bid for funds from their Approved Development Programme (ADP).

Homebuy will replace two existing schemes, the Tenants Incentive Scheme and Do-It-Yourself Shared Ownership. It will open to RSL tenants, those nominated from the local authority waiting list who would otherwise receive permanent social housing and local authority tenants, subject to appropriate eligibility rules.

In common with the two schemes it replaced Homebuy will be available only in areas where the scheme can help relieve a shortage of social housing by assisting tenants or those on the waiting list into home ownership.

Homebuy will not normally be offered in areas where there is no shortage of social housing. Support through the ADP for the development and sale of dwellings by RSLs on shared ownership terms will continue.

I believe that Homebuy will prove to be an attractive scheme for tenants, and I have asked the Housing Corporation to consult interested parties on detailed proposals for the new scheme. I will be laying a Statutory Instrument before the House in due course to add Homebuy to the permitted purposes of RSLs.

We also plan to give RSLs greater scope to offer flexible tenure schemes to help households who have bought on shared ownership terms and who face repossession because of a change in their financial circumstances. Working within rules set by the Housing Corporation RSLs will be allowed to use recycled Social Housing Grant to buy back from shared owners some or all of the equity of their property.

Flexible tenure schemes are already offered by a small number of RSLs and enabling more to do so will be an important step in avoiding homelessness and maintaining stable communities. I have also asked the Housing Corporation to consult on detailed proposals for this new measure.

English Partnerships

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a report on the progress of English Partnerships. [54623]

Mr. Caborn: I have today laid before Parliament English Partnerships' Annual Report and Accounts for 1997–98, which sets out their achievements last year. The Report provides details of the Agency's £315 million development programme and illustrates the varied range of their projects across the English regions. It explains that 545 projects were approved in 1997–98 and a total of over 2000 have been completed in the Agency's first four years. The Agency's key outputs for 1997–98 were as follows:

Outputs for 1997–98
Jobs created/safeguarded	29,000
Land regenerated (Ha)	1,350
Private finance attracted (£m)	767
Housing units facilitated	7,540
Commercial/industrial floorspace developed (sq.m)	860,000

City Challenge

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's research on the final evaluation of City Challenge will be published. [54624]

Mr. Caborn: The first output from the final evaluation of City Challenge, "What Works; Learning the Lessons", is published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the House Library. This report is based on a preliminary review of the monitoring data and interviews with representatives of City Challenge Partnerships. The full evaluation report is due in October 1998.

Business Aviation

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has undertaken into business aviation in the South East; and if he will make a statement. [54627]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department of Transport and the Department of Trade and Industry published a report on Business Aviation in 1995. My Department has also recently let a consultancy contract for a study of business aviation in the South East, to update that earlier report. The consultants are undertaking a two-part study which should provide consistent background information, amongst other things, on the size of the current market, likely future demand, and availability of facilities and capacity, against which local and Central Government, airport operators, business aviation operators and other interested parties can base future decisions about the provision of Business Aviation.

The first part of the study, which involved an audit of demand and capacity, has not been completed and copies of the interim report have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about progress with the review of planning policy on opencast coal and the appeal cases which are currently before him for decision. [54686]

Mr. Caborn: Planning policy for coal extraction, including opencast coal mining, is set out in Minerals Planning Guidance Note 3 (MPG3). Following the completion of the Energy Fuels Review, my Department will be preparing a revised draft of MPG3 for England which will be issued this autumn for a period of full consultation with all interested parties. This revised draft will take into account our pre-election commitments on opencast coal, the responses to our consultation in 1997 on Labour's 10-point plan for opencast coal, and, when available, the final conclusions of the Energy Fuels Review on the future of coal as a fuel for UK power generation.

Meanwhile, my Department has issued the Secretary of State's decisions on 4 opencast appeal cases which have been delayed whilst the Energy Fuels Review has been in progress. It would not have been reasonable to delay these any longer. In deciding future cases after the publication of the revised draft of MPG3 for England, its emerging policies, as well as those in the current MPG3, will in appropriate cases be relevant considerations both for mineral planning authorities and for the Secretary of State, and as such will need to be taken into account.

Greater London Authority

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions where the Greater London Authority will be located; and if he will make a statement. [54811]

Mr. Raynsford: We have now drawn up a list of eight possible locations for London's new Mayor and Assembly. This has been selected from information on over 50 buildings, new developments and sites sent to Knight Frank, our agents.

They are:

Camelford House, SE11 (refurbishment of a Thamesside building)

Canary Wharf, E14 (site WF-9—overlooking the Thames and the City)

Dean Ryle Street Building, SW1 (refurbishment—formerly part of Westminster Hospital)

London Bridge City, SE1 (a site between Tower Bridge and London Bridge on the Thames)

Regent's Place, Euston Road, NW1 (new development close to Regents Park)

St. George's Court, New Oxford Street, WC1 (refurbishment of a former Ministry of Defence building)

Vauxhall Cross, SE11 (the Effra site by Vauxhall Bridge)

Victoria House, Bloomsbury Square, WC1 (refurbishment).

The next step will be to provide the owners, managers and developers of these buildings and sites with details of the GLA's likely requirements and to invite them to submit details on how they can fulfil these, how quickly and at what cost. Some of the eight options are also being considered for other uses and may fall out. Some will need planning and other approvals and these will need to be considered by the appropriate authorities. If other possible locations come forward in the next few weeks, these too will be considered.

I anticipate that there will be strong competition to provide the high quality building which the Mayor and Assembly deserve. I hope to announce the final decision around the end of the year.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date he plans the elections for the Greater London Authority to take place. [53586]

Mr. Raynsford: As stated in paragraph 1.28 of the White Paper "A Mayor and Assembly for London" (Cm 3897), elections for the Mayor and the Assembly could be held in the autumn of 1999 or in Spring 2000. We hope to announce our preferred date in the autumn.

Flooding (Midlands)

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide financial assistance to (a) Warwick District Council, (b) Wychavon District Council and (c) Northamptonshire Police Authority under the Bellwin scheme in respect of costs incurred following the severe flooding on the weekend of 9 to 12 April. [54815]

Ms Armstrong: I am satisfied that financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme is justified in these cases. Schemes will, therefore, be established under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Grant will be paid to each authority to cover 85 per cent. of eligible costs which are above a threshold and which have been incurred by the authority in dealing with the flooding.

Sefton

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce his decision on the Local Government Commission's recommendations on the future of local government in the Metropolitan Borough of Sefton; and if he will make a statement. [54873]

Ms Armstrong: I am today announcing that we have decided to accept the Local Government Commission's recommendation for no change in the structure of local government in Sefton. I believe this will be the most satisfactory way forward for the whole of Sefton in terms of effective and convenient local government. We have also decided to accept the Commission's recommendations for minor changes to electoral arrangements in the borough.

World War II Bombs, Chippenham

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide financial assistance to North Wiltshire District Council under the Bellwin scheme in respect of costs incurred following the discovery of two World War II bombs in Chippenham on 12 and 13 February. [54874]

Ms Armstrong: I am satisfied that financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme is justified given the exceptional circumstances in this case. A scheme will, therefore, be established under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Grant will be paid to cover 85 per cent. of eligible costs which are above a threshold and which have been incurred by North Wiltshire District Council in dealing with this incident.

Environmental Information

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has reached conclusions on his review of policy on environmental information for consumers, and on the Financial Management and Policy Review of the United Kingdom Ecolabelling Board; and if he will make a statement. [54155]

Mr. Meacher: These reviews have been taking place against a background of helpful developments at EU level. EU institutions have recently been considering the future direction of the EU ecolabelling scheme, while interest has been growing in a more integrated approach to policy on consumer products and the environment. The UK Presidency tabled these issues for discussion at the Council of Ministers in June. There was a very constructive debate, which gave some clear guidance about future revision of the ecolabelling regulation and confirmed a close interest among member states in work being developed by the Commission on an integrated policy for products and the environment.

Against this background, the Government propose to look afresh at ways of stimulating a more sustainable market in consumer products, including more effective ways of informing consumers about the benefits. This will involve consideration of a range of approaches depending on the specific characteristics of products and the way they are consumed. I shall be issuing a strategy paper later this summer which will set out our analysis of the issues, our view on the part that can best be played by different instruments, and some specific propositions for future action on which we will be seeking views.

To help take matters forward, I intend setting up a new advisory panel to assist my Department across the range of product-related issues. The panel will be asked to advise on the development of strategic product policies, priorities and mechanisms for national approaches to labelling, and practical action to raise the standard of information available in the market. Membership of the panel will be drawn from a range of stakeholder interests, and make use of experience already available within the UK Ecolabelling Board (UKEB).

On the "prior options review" of UKEB itself, copies of the report are being placed in the Library of the House. The text is also available on request from my Department and will be placed on its Internet site.

UKEB was set up under the European Communities Act 1972 with the sole purpose of administering the EU ecolabelling scheme. Unfortunately, that scheme has had only limited impact in the market; the level of take-up is still low and is not expected to increase dramatically in the foreseeable future. The review found that UKEB has done a good job in these difficult circumstances. I endorse this view and pay tribute to the dedicated work done by the Board members and staff of UKEB to advance the EU ecolabelling scheme. However, in the circumstances of low market take-up of the label, and bearing in mind that UKEB's duties could not be widened without new legislation, the Government would not feel justified in retaining an executive Non-Departmental Public Body solely to administer this function.

The Government will therefore be formally winding up UKEB later this year, at which point the role of "UK Competent Body" under the EU ecolabelling regulation will be taken on by my Department while wider policies are being developed. The new advisory panel will be asked to assist the Department in this work by offering advice on strategic ecolabelling issues. The EU scheme is a valuable voluntary instrument, with potential for influencing consumer choice across the single market, but experience has shown that it will need to operate within a wider framework of measures if it is to make a significant contribution. In aiming to develop a more comprehensive approach to consumer products and the environment, the Government hope to unlock more of the potential which schemes such as this offer.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what analysis his Department has undertaken of the incidence effects of changing the basis of charging for domestic water and sewerage services. [54136]

Mr. Meacher: My Department will today publish research carried out by the consultancy firm Maxwell Stamp to examine the incidence effects of changing the basis for charging for domestic water and sewerage services in England and Wales. The alternatives to the current rateable value based bills examined as part of this research are council tax based charges, flat rate charges and a number of measured tariffs.

This research was taken into account when writing the "Water Charging in England and Wales—A New Approach" Consultation Paper, and will also inform our decisions in light of responses to that Consultation Paper.

Packaging Waste Regulations

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will be consulting on options for amending the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997; and if he will make a statement. [54156]

Mr. Meacher: I am today placing in the Library a copy of the Government's consultation document on amendments to the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997.

The consultation document puts forward a number of options and proposals for modifying the Regulations and many of those reflect the recommendations made at the end of June by the Advisory Committee on Packaging (ACP), chaired by Sir Peter Parker. The ACP undertook a review of the Regulations in the first part of this year and have, in particular, advised that, at this early stage, adjustments to the Regulations should be kept to the minimum in order to minimise uncertainty, and encourage investment in the collection and reprocessing infrastructure for packaging recycling and recovery. The Government also need to be assured that the requirements of the Regulations will be sufficient to enable the UK to meet the targets in the EC Directive on Packaging and Packaging Waste in 2001. The options and proposals in the paper are therefore designed to ensure the smooth working of the Regulations in order to meet our objectives.

The document invites views on the options presented for changes to the Regulations. Decisions on any changes to the system will be made on the basis of the views received in response, and will of course be subject to Parliamentary approval later in the year.

Hon. Members may wish to note that this document is relevant to a number of the issues that were raised by the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee in its Sixth Report, Substantial Waste Management. The Government are preparing a full response to the Committee's recommendations, including those relating to the management of packaging waste, and hope to publish it shortly.

Housing (Unsafe Structures)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement concerning the case of R v. Bristol City Council ex parte Everett (The Times 21 May 1998) with reference to the implications for the health and safety of tenants whose properties may be structurally unsafe. [50738]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 16 July 1998]: The circumstances of this case do appear to be somewhat special. I understand that it is likely that there will be an appeal and no further comment would be appropriate at this stage.

House-Builders Federation

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the meetings held between Ministers in his Department and the House-Builders Federation in the last six months and the dates of those meetings. [52266]

Mr. Raynsford: I met representatives of the House-Builders Federation on 23 February and addressed a luncheon at their annual general meeting on 7 April.

Wind Farms

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding the proximity of wind turbines to bridleways and other public rights of way and their impact on equine welfare. [52097]

Mr. Raynsford: One, from the British Horse Society.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the advantages and disadvantages of amending PPG 22 to introduce a minimum required distance between wind farms and bridleways and other public rights of way. [52098]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning Policy Guidance notes are not intended to be prescriptive. We have no evidence that the existing guidance is not robust enough in this area. Planning Policy Guidance note 7, 'The Countryside—Environmental Quality and Economic and Social Development', already alerts local planning authorities to take into account the impact of proposed developments on public rights of way when deciding planning applications. Experience indicates that properly designed and maintained wind turbines are a safe technology.

London Underground

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what contingency plans he has to finance London Underground in the event that his public/private partnership plans are not in place by 2000–01. [52175]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport is developing plans to award one, two or three infrastructure contracts to finance, maintain and modernise the Underground's infrastructure by April 2000. If it appears that this timetable will not be achieved, the Government will consider with LT what interim funding arrangements may be necessary.

Coach Services (London)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of services interchanging at London coach terminals for passengers in transit to locations outside London. [52750]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Coach services interchange at several locations in London including Victoria Coach Station, Bulleid Way, Heathrow Airport, King's Cross, and Russell Square. The Government do not compile information about these services. However, I understand that, according to recent sample surveys, around 30 per cent. of passengers departing from Victoria Coach Station were estimated to have transferred from other coach services in and around the station.

Hospital Transport Services

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he held with the Secretary of State for Health over hospital transport services prior to the publication of the Integrated Transport White Paper. [52317]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Ministers and officials in both Departments have been working closely on issues relating to hospital transport services prior to the publication of the Integrated Transport White Paper, and will continue to do so.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he made of the advantages of including hospital transport services within the scope of the Integrated Transport White Paper. [52318]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Hospital transport services are included in the Integrated White Paper as part of a wider initiative to encourage employers to adopt green transport plans in an effort to change travel habits of employees. Hospitals have a vital role to play in sending the right messages to their communities by acting responsibly on health issues. We are, therefore, strongly encouraging health facilities to produce green transport plans.

A3, Hindhead

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about pollution, traffic congestion and consequent environmental damage arising from traffic on the A3 at Hindhead. [52319]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have receive a considerable number of representations in response to the Roads Review consultation about pollution, traffic congestion and environmental damage arising from traffic on the A3 at Hindhead. In addition, over the last twelve months the Highways Agency has received a number of representations relating to traffic congestion in this location.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what was the cost of removing (a) pesticides, (b) nitrates and (c) phosphates from water supplies to make them potable, in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98; [52546]

(2) what was the cost of removing from water supplies phosphate derived from (a) point sources and (b) diffuse sources to make them potable, in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [52547]

Mr. Meacher: The costs in England and Wales of removing pesticides and nitrates from drinking water for 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 are listed. This information is derived from companies' July returns and published annually by Ofwat on CD-ROM, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Information for 1997–98 is not yet available. There is not normally a requirement to remove phosphates from drinking water supplies from (a) point sources and (b) diffuse sources; indeed in some cases phosphates are added to reduce plumbo-solvency.

Expenditure on nitrate and pesticide removal at water treatment works (in millions of pounds, at 1997–98 prices)

Year	Nitrates	Pesticides
1994–95	20	134
1995–96	9	155
1996–97	5	117

Ospar Commission

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Ospar meeting in Sintra, Portugal. [52713]

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ministerial conference of the Ospar Commission in Portugal. [52752]

Mr. Meacher: The first Ministerial meeting of the Ospar Commission for the protection of the marine environment of the North East Atlantic successfully reached agreement on a wide range of issues, thereby laying the foundation for an agreed international programme of work to implement the Ospar Convention.

We agreed a decision to end the potential opt-out for France and the United Kingdom on the dumping of radioactive waste. We adopted a new annexe to the Convention to authorise the Commission to adopt programmes and measures to control human activities that can have an adverse impact on the marine environment, with safeguards to ensure that there is no duplication or contradiction of work in other international forums, especially in respect of the management of fisheries. We adopted a binding decision to ban the dumping of all steel installations. This decision also bans the dumping of concrete installations and leaving both steel and concrete installations in place, but provides for possible derogations for sea-disposal of concrete installations and leaving in place the footings of steel installations over 10,000 tonnes. Consideration of the possibility of such derogations is subject to agreed assessment and international consultation procedures.

Looking ahead, we adopted long-term strategies to guide the work of the Commission on:

- hazardous substances (where the ultimate aim will be concentrations in the marine environment near background values for naturally occurring substances and close to zero for man-made synthetic substances, and the goal for 2020 will be to make every endeavour to move towards the target of cessation of discharges, emissions and losses by the date);
- radioactive substances (where the ultimate aim will be concentrations in the marine environment near background values for naturally occurring substances and close to zero for artificial radioactive substances; in achieving this objective, we shall take into account legitimate uses of the sea, technical feasibility and radiological impacts to man and biota; the goal for 2020 will be the reduction of discharges, emissions and losses to levels where the additional concentrations in the marine environment above historic levels, resulting from such discharges, emissions and losses, are close to zero);
- eutrophication (where the aim is to eliminate eutrophication where it occurs in the North East Atlantic and to prevent further occurrences); and
- the protection of ecosystems and biological diversity (where the first aim will be the entry into force of the new Annexe, and the identification of human activities that need to be addressed under it, and the preparation of programmes and measures to do so, along with promoting the establishment of a network of marine protected areas).

We also agreed, now that the decision on the disposal of disused offshore installations has been adopted, to develop a similar strategy, for adoption at next year's meeting of the Commission, on setting environmental goals for the offshore oil and gas industry and establishing improved management mechanisms to achieve them.

Finally, we approved the work on the production of a Quality Status Report on the North East Atlantic by 2000 to provide a sound, scientific basis for identifying and prioritising future tasks and for revising the strategies at the next Ministerial meeting of the Commission in 2003.

A copy of the Sintra Statement, summing up the conclusions of the Ministers, is being put in the Library.

The agreements which we reached at Sintra are good for the environment, good for jobs and good for the UK's reputation abroad, as underlining, in the World Year of the Oceans, our commitment to protecting our common heritage in the oceans.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. George) of 16 June 1997, Official Report, column 39, on council tax for mobile homes, if he will make a statement on progress with his discussions on possible changes to the existing structure of valuation bands. [53085]

Mr. Raynsford: The consultation paper 'Improving local financial accountability' invited views on whether there is a case to change the council tax. The deadline for responses was 1 June. Our proposals will be set out in a White Paper shortly.

Noise Insulation

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the decibel noise levels at which noise protection funding has been made available since 1968. [52896]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Noise Insulation Regulations 1975 were made retrospective to roads opened to traffic on or after the 17 October 1969. The qualifying noise level as described in my previous answer has remained unchanged since it was originally introduced.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions at what decibel level Government funding is available for noise insulation. [52895]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Government funding is available only in cases where the noise level is expected to exceed a specified noise level and to have risen by at least 1 decibel above the prevailing noise level as the result of the creation or alteration of a trunk road. The level of road traffic noise specified in the Noise Insulation Regulations 1975 (as amended in 1988) is 68 decibels measured as an average level exceeded for 10 per cent. of the time between the hours of 6 am and midnight.

A13 Underpass

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the plans for the A13 underpass development at Prince Regent Lane. [52834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following the decision in 1996 to adopt a slightly more southerly alignment for the A13 Prince Regent Lane Improvement, a full environmental assessment is being carried out and we hope to hold a full public consultation on the new alignment in the Autumn.

Trains (Capacity)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of trains operated by Virgin Rail classed as short trains. [52768]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Virgin Trains is required by the franchise agreements for West Coast Trains and CrossCountry Trains to use all reasonable endeavours to provide sufficient capacity on each train that it operates. For certain services, notably peak service to and from London Euston and Birmingham New Street, there is a more detailed capacity requirement in the Passenger Service Requirement (PSR). The Office of Passenger Rail Franchising checks twice a year that Virgin plans to deliver sufficient capacity. It also monitors what actually happens on a four weekly basis. Failure to achieve 97.5 per cent. of the planned capacity in a four week period is a breach of the Franchise for the West Coast; the equivalent figure for the CrossCountry is 94 per cent. There was no breach of these limits in 1997–98. In addition, Virgin West Coast must pay a penalty for every train that is short of the planned number of seats. It paid a total of £167,907 to the Franchising Director in 1997–98.

Rail Operators (Targets)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will take steps to ensure that the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising uses his powers to the full extent to ensure that rail operators meet the targets set. [52769]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Objectives, Instructions and Guidance which we issued to the Franchising Director in November last year require him to manage franchises in a way which ensures the prompt and effective delivery of the terms of the franchise agreements and he uses his powers to that end. As our White Paper on the Future of Transport makes clear, we intend to set up a Strategic Rail Authority with stronger powers of enforcement and to seek more demanding performance standards for franchise operators.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many decisions after receipt of planning inspector's reports have been delayed for longer than (a) three, (b) six and (c) nine months in the last three years. [52399]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Department holds information on the number of appeal and call-in cases outstanding at the end of each quarter which have been with the Department, following receipt of an inspector's report, for 8 weeks or more in the case of appeals, and 13 weeks or more in the case of call-ins. The latest available figures relate to the quarter ending 30 September 1997. In the three years up until this date, the returns provide the following information:

	Outstanding for 13 weeks or more	Outstanding for 26 weeks or more	Outstanding for 39 weeks or more
1 October 1994 - 30 September 1995	26	10	32
1 October 1995 - 30 September 1996	11	12	16
1 October 1996 - 30 September 1997	40	25	21
Total	77	47	69

Each case is recorded in this table only once (ie cases outstanding for 39 weeks or more are not also recorded as being outstanding for 13 and 26 weeks). Some cases outstanding for less than 26 weeks and decided between quarterly returns will not be included in these figures.

Incinerators

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incinerators in the United Kingdom have emitted levels of dioxins above the statutory level set by his Department in each of the past 10 years. [52827]

Mr. Meacher: There has been a statutory emission limit for dioxins only since January 1998 when a direction was issued by my Department to the Environment Agency in relation to hazardous waste incinerators so as to implement the EU Hazardous Waste Incineration Directive. However, the Environment Agency and its predecessor body (HM Inspectorate of Pollution) have set their own dioxin limits in authorisations for certain incinerators in England and Wales for several years. Information from the Environment Agency is that the statutory emission limit has not been exceeded at any incinerator to which it applies, and that their own/HMIP's limits have been exceeded at two incinerators.

Ecolabelling

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) of 15 June 1998, Official Report, columns 39–40, if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the discussion on the European Community's ecolabelling system at the Council of Ministers meeting of 16 and 17 June. [53828]

Mr. Meacher: The United Kingdom Presidency initiated an orientation debate at the Council of Ministers on 17 June, which was successful in enabling member states to exchange views on the Commission's Proposal for a Council Regulation to revise the Community's existing eco-label award scheme. The debate focused on two aspects of the Proposal which had been of particular concern to member states. These were the proposal for future administration of the scheme of a new "European Ecolabelling Organisation", financed by member states; and the proposal to withdraw national eco-labels within five years in the case of product areas covered by the European eco-label. The Council had a useful discussion of these points, and related policy issues, in the light of which the Commission indicated that it would be revising its Proposal.

I also refer the hon. Gentleman to a reply by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Singh) on 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 542, on the overall outcome of this Council of Ministers.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the compliance cost assessments published by his Department since 1 May 1997. [52936]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Between 1 May 1997 and 31 May 1998, twenty nine compliance cost assessments have been published by my Department. These are:

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the regeneration spending review indicating revised priorities for the single regeneration budget. [53684]

Mr. Caborn: The CSR announcement on 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–94, included a re-shaped Single Regeneration Budget. This is one of two strands of the New Deal for Regeneration, the other being the New Deal for Communities.

The re-shaped SRB will receive over £2.3 billion over 3 years, of which £800 million is new money. In order to make a real and sustainable difference in the most deprived areas, 80 per cent. of new resources will be targeted on the areas of greatest need. This will provide for over 50 major new schemes of about £20 million to be running by the end of this parliament.

The balance of resources (20 per cent.) will be used to tackle pockets of need elsewhere, including in rural areas, where SRB resources will combine with the former Rural Challenge resources of the Rural Development Commission to form an integrated rural regeneration element of the SRB.

The re-shaped SRB will include an emphasis on strengthening local partnerships and on value for money:

- a new emphasis on partnership capacity building so that the local community is equipped to fully participate in the regeneration of its area
- partnerships will have to demonstrate that local communities are directly involved and supportive of schemes
- the release of funding will depend on adequate management systems including project appraisal.

East Midlands Airport

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Department has to regulate noise nuisance from East Midlands Airport if the airport obtains permission to extend its activities. [53343]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. It is our policy that noise nuisance from airports should, wherever possible, be discussed and resolved locally. The planning system allows measures for alleviation of noise associated with new development to be agreed where appropriate. We announced in the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport" our intention to consult on detailed proposals for legislation on aircraft noise.

Passenger Train Services

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government will propose to the Director of Opraf to increase the number of passenger train services that run according to schedule. [53564]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Last November, we issued new Objectives, Instructions and Guidance to the Franchising Director which require him to secure a progressive improvement in the quality of passenger railway services and to maintain a comprehensive and rigorous programme of performance monitoring. As announced in our White Paper "A New Deal for Transport", we will amend the Railways Act 1993 so that financial penalties for poor performance can be imposed much faster and past infringements penalised. Train operators will also be judged on their current performance before any new contracts are agreed.

Cycling (London)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of security restrictions on cycle parking in Central London on the level of cycle use. [53687]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The City of Westminster have made representations to the Metropolitan Police about the need for properly constituted cycle parking facilities to be improved in the Whitehall area, while paying proper regard to considerations of public safety. A number of new locations have been suggested, and the Police currently have the matter under review. I welcome the prospect of such improvements, as being consistent with Government policy to encourage the use of cycles as a healthy, sustainable and environmentally friendly mode of transport.

A12 Relief Road

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the projected completion date, and what was the original estimated date, for completion of the A12 relief road between Leytonstone and Redbridge roundabout and what factors underlie the differences [53704]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Amess, dated 30 July 1998:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road scheme.

The section of the scheme between the Green Man Roundabout at Leytonstone and the Redbridge Roundabout began in September 1993. The original four year contract had been extended due to complications in the diversion of public utilities equipment and, more recently, difficulties with the provision of specialist mechanical and electrical equipment.

We now expect completion of this section of the scheme around the turn of the year but this is not expected to affect the overall scheme completion date.

Eastern Regional Development Agency

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what level of resources the Eastern Region RDA will receive; when it will be paid; and what conditions will be applied to its use. [53583]

Mr. Caborn: Resources for individual RDAs will be announced later this year and expenditure programmes will be transferred to them in April 1999. The conditions applied to the use of the resources will be set out in the Financial Memoranda and other guidance issued to RDAs when they are established following enactment of the Regional Development Agencies Bill, which is currently before Parliament.

Speed Limits

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the Government's policy towards the introduction of 20 mile per hour speed limits outside schools. [52137]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have recently consulted on proposals to provide freedom for local traffic authorities to make 20 mph limits without the need to obtain central government consent. The responses to the consultation are currently being considered. Under the proposed new system it will be for the authorities to decide where to place 20 mph speed limits; but we would recommend that schools should be set in the context of their surrounding areas and local experience of traffic problems rather than being treated in isolation.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the task forces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by his Department since 1 May 1997 and in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers and (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53145]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are six Task Forces and three Advisory Groups with independent members which have been set up by my Department since 1 May 1997. I have today placed in the Library of the House the information requested for each of these bodies.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53053]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Staff in DETR (Central) with contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday.

Men: 404

Women: 763.

Staff in the Department's agencies with contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday.

Men: 2,840

Women: 3,298.

Driving Test Centres

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost of the building lease for the (a) Crosby, (b) Norris Green, (c) Southport, (d) Garston and (e) St. Helens driving centres in the last year for which figures are available. [53814]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The licence payment under the Memorandum of Terms of Occupation held with the Employment Services Agency for Crosby was £13,416 p.a. Under similar arrangements with the Department for Social Services, the licence payment for the driving test centre at Southport was £3,420 in 1997–98. Lease costs for the test centres at Norris Green and St. Helens were £3,600 and £3,480 respectively. Garston is a freehold property.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the long-term future of (a) Southport, (b) Norris Green, (c) Garston and (d) St. Helens driving test centres; how many years are left before the leases expire for each driving test centre; and what penalty clauses are associated with the leases. [53815]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Under the terms of the Driving Standard Agency's agreement with the Department of Social Security the lease on the driving test centre at Southport will expire on 31 March 2001. The Agency's test centres at Norris Green and St. Helens are purpose built premises with ground leases that will expire on 15 March 2081 and 15 November 2080 respectively. The test centre at Garston is freehold.

If any of these centres were to close, then the Agency would seek to assign or sell its interest in the property. If an alternative occupant or purchaser could not be found, the penalty would be having to pay the continuing cost of the property.

The Agency keeps its test centre estate under regular review to ensure that centres can provide tests of a satisfactory standard whilst maintaining acceptable local levels of service in a cost effective manner.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors led to the closure of Crosby Driving Test Centre. [53812]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Crosby driving test centre had to close because the major occupier of the building—the Employment Service Agency—required the Driving Standards Agency to vacate the premises.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the advantage of establishing regional driving test centres to replace existing test centres. [53811]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driving Standards Agency has made no assessment of replacing the current network of local driving test centres with centres serving each region.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the income generated by the (a) Crosby, (b) Norris Green, (c) Southport, (d) Garston and (e) St. Helens driving test centres relative to the expenditure associated with the each test centre. [53810]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The table compares the income from car driving test fees with the property and staff costs at each of the test centres in the financial year 1997–98:

Test centre	Income from car test fees	Property and staff costs
Crosby	123,910	109,249
Norris Green	174,707	121,069
Southport	104,486	45,872
Garston	139,883	111,053
St. Helens	110,375	69,491

Private Hire Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions following the introduction of a licensing scheme for private hire vehicles in London, if he will review the legislative provisions which prohibit any signage on private hire vehicles. [54526]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Private Hire Vehicles (London) Act 1998 will repeal the London Cab Act 1973. The question of signage on private hire vehicles in London will be dealt with in regulations under section 30 of the 1998 Act. We shall consult before making regulations.

Millennium Compliance (Train Operators)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what responsibility OPRAF have to ensure that systems used by train operating companies are millennium compliant. [54529]

Ms Glenda Jackson: OPRAF has no specific responsibility for this. Millennium compliance is the responsibility of the train operating companies. OPRAF has a clear interest in the delivery of train operators' obligations and would be concerned with any failure to deliver, whatever the cause.

Mark 1 Rolling Stock

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with OPRAF regarding the phasing out of Mark 1 rolling stock. [54520]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department has had regular discussions with the Office for Passenger Rail Franchising (OPRAF), which have touched on many different railway matters including the use of Mark 1 rolling stock.

Airlines (Gatwick-Channel Islands)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the airlines operating between Gatwick and the Channel Islands in each of the last five years. [54528]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The following list of airlines operating between Gatwick and the Channel Islands has been compiled using information supplied by the Civil Aviation Authority:

Calendar Year	Airlines

Notes:
1. The list includes all services both Scheduled and Charter and Passenger and Cargo
2. Air Taxi operations have been excluded
3. The list is based on the Last/Next airport, this means that the Channel Islands airport may not be the ultimate destination of the aircraft

Airlines (Slots)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of slots held by airlines at (a) Gatwick, (b) Heathrow and (c) Stansted in each of the last 10 years. [54527]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Information on the slots allocated is collected and held by Airport Co-ordination Ltd., but it is not readily available for the last 10 years.

Airports (South-East England)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the ownership of the south-east of England airports will be considered as part of his Department's work on the aviation White Paper. [54523]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The question of the three main London airports being under the same ownership was raised by the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee in its report this week on Regional Air Services. The Government will be addressing this point as part of their response to Parliament in the normal way.

The Knowledge Examination

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlie the increase in the time taken by applicants for the knowledge examination to progress from (a) initial talk to first appearance and (b) first appearance to becoming licensed. [54524]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The increase in time over the years between initial talk and first appearance has been due to different factors at different times. These include the introduction of a requirement to learn all the designated runs before a first appearance, rather than only a proportion, in order to reduce the overall time taken to complete the Knowledge; the limited number of knowledge examiners at various times; the introduction of a written test which must be passed before the first appearance, in order to reduce the demand on Knowledge examiners' time; and the increasing complexity of the information candidates need to learn, arising from changes in London traffic management systems.

The increase in time between first appearance and becoming licensed is partly due to the increasing complexity of what needs to be learned, but also to the significant increase in the number of candidates studying for the Knowledge. The Public Carriage Office have recently recruited extra examiners.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how long the average waiting time was for the first appearance for the knowledge examination in (a) 1980, (b) 1985, (c) 1990, (d) 1995 and (e) 1997. [54525]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The answer of 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 549, gave comparisons of the period of time between initial talk and first appearance for the years 1987, 1992 and 1997. The Public Carriage Office do not keep separate records of the period between the first appearance being requested and being granted.

Correspondence

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to reply to the letter from Mr. Moore of 15 April on the Vehicle Inspectorate. [53915]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Vehicle Inspectorate has no record of a letter from Mr. Moore dated 15 April. If the letter concerns operational matters for which the Inspectorate is responsible and the hon. Member would like to send a copy to the Chief Executive, Mr. Newey would be happy to reply.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will reply to the letters of 11 May and 1 July from the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton regarding a constituent. [53896]

Ms Armstrong: The former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), replied on 28 May. I responded to another letter dated 11 May from the hon. Member on 8 June.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the Government's proposals for the route of the cross-channel rail link line from the coast to London. [53591]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The route of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link between Cheriton in Kent and St. Pancras in the London Borough of Camden is set out in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996.

MFV Gaul

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 1998, Official Report, column 532, who was given access to the National Maritime Institute report (Project 207001) on the 'Gaul' following its completion; and to whom it was distributed. [52362]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Departmental records show that thirty copies of the Report were printed. We do not have a complete distribution list but we believe copies were provided to the interested parties, who were the builders, Brooke Marine Ltd., and the owners, British United Trawlers, and Hellyer Brothers, a subsidiary company of British United Trawlers, and to Messrs. Graham & Rosen, solicitors acting on behalf of the next of kin. Copies were also sent to the solicitors representing Brooke Marine Ltd. and British United Trawlers. The Department of Trade and Industry retained an unspecified number of copies.

Teesside Development Corporation

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost of (a) providing and (b) erecting obelisks in memory of Teesside Development Corporation at sites in Teesside. [53394]

Mr. Caborn: £151,000.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on the structural problem identified in the Tees Barrage and ancillary works by external consultations appointed by the Teesside Development Corporation; [53444]

(2) if he will make a statement on the current contractual obligations of the main contractors for the Tees Barrage. [53393]

Mr. Caborn: These matters are now the responsibility of the Commission for the New Towns. I will write to my hon. Friend when I have made further inquiries.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that the audit of the accounts of Teesside Development Corporation for the year ended 31 March includes a full financial and technical audit of the TDC's activities over its lifespan and is made public. [53360]

Mr. Caborn: The audited financial statements for the year ended 31 March 1998 were published earlier this month.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list the members of (a) the newly formed Teesside Environmental Trust and (b) its board and their former links with the Teesside Development Corporation; [53446]

(2) if he will investigate the contractual agreements made between the Teesside Environmental Trust, the Teesside Development Corporation and Messrs H. J. Banks Ltd in the last three months of the Teesside Development Corporation's life. [53445]

Mr. Caborn: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the cost of the press and television advertising campaign that the Teesside Development Corporation undertook in the last six months of its life. [53395]

Mr. Caborn: These costs were contained within the approved marketing budget of the Corporation.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will investigate the links between former employees of Teesside Development Corporation, the Hartlepool Marina and the projected tall ships centre; [53397]

(2) if he will investigate the links between Mandale Properties Ltd. and former employees of Teesside Development Corporation. [53396]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend has no reason to do so.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate the arrangements whereby the Teesside Development Corporation arranged loans from a merchant bank via intermediaries for the purposes of funding development at Middlesbrough Docks and at the Teesside Park Retail Centre; and if he will list the size of the loans. [53359]

Mr. Caborn: Such financial arrangements were a matter for the Board of the Corporation.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate the arrangements for (a) the market testing and (b) the disposal of remaining land within the Teesside Development Corporation's ownership at the Teesdale site and at Hartlepool Marina. [53440]

Mr. Caborn: These arrangements were a matter for the Board of the Development Corporation and are now the responsibility of its successor, the Commission for the New Towns.

Aircraft (Disease Transmission)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 466, what research underlay his conclusions that no evidence exists to suggest a link between cabin air quality, flow rates and the spread of disease. [53898]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The research which indicates that there is no evidence of a link between cabin air quality, flow rates and the spread of disease is as follows:

1. Report No. DOT-P-15-89-5. December 1989. Airliner cabin environment: Contaminant measurements, health risks, and mitigation options (Section 8).

2. "Methods and Results of the Measurements of Aerogenic Micro-biological Contamination in Airplane Cabin Air"—Opinion of the Institute for Hygiene and Environmental Medicine, Medical University of Lubeck, Germany. December 1995. (unpublished).

3. "Report on VOC Measurements during the Flights Frankfurt-Dallas-Frankfurt on 19/21 June 1995 and Frankfurt-New York-Frankfurt on 17/19 July 1995—Fraunhofer-Institut fur Umweltchemie und Okotoxikologie, Schmallenberg, Germany. December 1995. (unpublished).

4. "Toxicological Evaluation of Cabin Air Concentrations". Prof. Dr. Med. Th. Eikmann, Institut fur Hygiene und Umweltchemie Universilat Giessen, Germany. December 1995. (unpublished).

5. National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health January 1993. HETA 90–226–2281. Health hazard evaluation report. Alaska Airlines.

The transmission of disease in an aircraft cabin cannot be eliminated. However, there is no evidence to show that technical changes in aircraft cabin environment have increased that risk, or that the risk is as great as infection from any public environment.

Quarrying (Dartmoor)

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if it is his policy to prevent further quarrying on Dartmoor. [53813]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's policy on minerals extraction in National Parks is set out in Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6. The Government consider that major developments should take place in National Parks only in exceptional circumstances. Because of the serious impact that working them may have on the natural beauty of these areas, the Government consider that all minerals applications must be subject to the most rigorous examination and that all mineral developments should be demonstrated to be in the public interest before being allowed to proceed.

The Government have therefore welcomed the recent announcement by the Quarry Products Association of a review of the industry's activities within National Parks.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what he next proposes to review the options for the future of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. [53315]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and the services it provides are currently being reviewed as part of a project intended to improve and to modernise the delivery of the services the Department provides for drivers, vehicle keepers and vehicle operators.

Workplace Parking Taxation

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account he took in his proposals for applying the workplace parking taxation of the position of nursing staff who are charged for parking in hospital staff car parks. [53437]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are aware that some employers already charge their staff for car parking.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce arrangements to exempt (a) nursing staff and (b) teaching staff from workplace parking taxation. [53465]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We shall issue a consultation document shortly that will discuss, among other things, possible exemptions to a levy on workplace parking.

Persistent Inquirers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of his Department's agencies have procedures to identify persistent inquirers for information. [53945]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All my Department's Executive Agencies have signed up to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information and treat all requests for information as a request made under the Code. Each Agency has its own arrangements for monitoring such requests but none has specific arrangements to identify persistent inquiries for information.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from new cars; and if he will make a statement. [54159]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government are pursuing a number of measures which will help to reduce the level of carbon dioxide emissions from new cars and the entire car fleet. In the last Budget on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–112, the Chancellor announced our commitment to the continuation of the fuel duty escalator raising fuel prices by six per cent. per annum in real terms. This encourages drivers to purchase more fuel efficient vehicles as well as use fuel more efficiently.

We also strongly support the European Commission's Strategy on CO_2 from cars which aims to reduce the emissions of CO_2 from new cars sold in the EU to an average of 120 grammes per kilometre, by 2005 or 2010 at the latest. This represents a cut of about a third on the current average. The Commission are continuing their negotiations with the car industry to secure a voluntary agreement which will help to achieve the Strategy. It is hoped that these negotiations will be resolved successfully fairly soon.

We have also set up the Cleaner Vehicles Task Force which aims to create a partnership between the Government and the private sector to promote environmentally friendly vehicles which people actually want to drive and buy. The Task Force will encourage the production, marketing and sales of vehicles which are cleaner and more fuel efficient.

Trunk Roads

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of upgrading the whole of the Core National Trunk Road Network (Cm 3950) to dual carriageway standards or better; [53705]

(2) if he will publish a map of the Core National Trunk Road Network (Cm 3950) showing sections (a) constructed to dual carriageway standards or better and (b) in current programmes designated for upgrading to such standards; [53706]

(3) if he will list for each Shire County (a) in total and b) by constituency (i) the number of miles of road identified as part of the Core National Trunk Road Network (Cm 3950) and (ii) the percentage of such road mileage constructed or in programmes to be constructed to dual carriageway standard or better. [53703]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Further details on the core network and on plans for taking forward improvements will be announced when we publish the Roads Review Report. Inclusion in the core network does not automatically mean that the road should be of dual-carriageway standard. Our approach to upgrading will be to consider problems on the core network and to assess options against our new criteria.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) environmental and (b) other appraisal methods were used by his Department when assessing the forecasts produced by MEL on the Birmingham Northern Relief Road in 1991. [53958]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I do not have access to papers relating to the previous administration's decision to appoint MEL as concessionaire for the BNRR. Our own decision to approve the proposed scheme was made in the light of evidence put before the Public Inquiry and the Inspector's Report on that evidence.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53353]

Mr. Meale: The Welsh Language Board (WLB) invited DETR to prepare a Welsh language scheme in a letter dated 13 August 1997.

The first discussions on a scheme were held with WLB on 2 December 1997, and there have been a number of subsequent contacts.

A draft scheme has been prepared and is currently being cleared within the department. DETR hopes to hold final discussions on the text with WLB shortly, prior to putting the scheme out to public consultation.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation he held with (a) local hon. Members and (b) local authorities before he announced his proposals to change the preferred direction for night flight approaches at Heathrow Airport. [53346]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have neither decided upon nor announced any such proposals. I informed the House on 24 July 1998, Official Report, column 1413, of that. It is expected that this subject will be included in the second consultation later this year on night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports.

DEFENCE

Training Exercises (Denmark)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last training exercise involving the shooting of pigs in Denmark was carried out; why Denmark was chosen as the location; and if he has any plans to carry out similar exercises in the future. [45511]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The last training exercise involving the shooting of pigs in which UK Service personnel took part was in May 1998. The pigs had been anaesthetised and the exercise was designed to train medical personnel in resuscitation and surgical techniques for treating wounds inflicted by different calibre weapons. The exercise was organised by the Danish Armed Forces' Medical Services and the UK, together with NATO allies and other nations, was invited to participate. However, Ministers in this Government had not previously had this training drawn to their attention, and so UK participation was immediately suspended pending a review of my Department's training methods.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the (a) costs, (b) aims and (c) outcome of the Operation Danish Bacon NATO exercise. [45485]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The costs of Exercise Danish Bacon are borne in the main by the organisers, the Danish Armed Forces' Medical Services. The costs incurred by my Department have been the travel and subsistence of UK Service participants and the costs of the animals they used—£550 each. The Exercise is designed to train military medical personnel in resuscitation and surgical techniques for treating those wounded by different calibre weapons. However, Ministers of this Government had not previously been made aware of this activity, and ordered its immediate suspension pending a review of this practice.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what level authorisation was given for the participation of British troops in animal experiments in Jaegerspris, Denmark. [45492]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: British troops do not participate in animal experiments in Denmark. UK military surgical teams have, however, participated in training exercises organised by the Danish Armed Forces' Medical Services which involved the use of pigs that had been anaesthetised. The exercises provided training in resuscitation and surgical techniques for treating wounds inflicted by different calibre weapons. Authorisation for British participation in these exercises came from senior military medical officers.

Ministers of this Government had not previously been made aware of this activity, and ordered its immediate suspension pending a review of this practice.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when British troops have participated in animal experiments abroad; and on which of these occasions such experiments would not have been permitted in the United Kingdom. [45494]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 15 June 1998]: I am not aware of any participation by British troops in animal experiments either overseas or in the UK since 1 May 1997.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in respect of the participation of British troops in experiments which involve firing high-velocity weapons at suspended pigs. [45493]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: British troops do not participate in animal experiments which involve firing weapons at pigs. However, UK military surgical teams have participated in training exercises organised by the Danish Armed Forces' Medical Services which involved firing different calibre weapons at pigs. The purpose of the exercises was to provide training in resuscitation and surgical techniques for treating wounds inflicted by such weapons. Ministers in this Government had not previously had this training drawn to their attention and therefore directed that UK participation be immediately suspended pending a review of this practice.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British Army training exercises involving the killing of animals; at which locations such training has taken place over the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [45768]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 15 June 1998]: Some courses or training exercises run by the British Army include instruction in survival techniques which involves the slaughter of live animals. This type of training has taken place in the UK, Europe and in countries such as Kenya, Brunei and Belize over the last 10 years. Training of Army Catering Corps personnel in butchery techniques has also involved the slaughter of live animals in the UK.

In addition, members of the UK Defence Medical Services have participated each year in exercises in Denmark organised by the Danish Armed Forces' Medical Services. These exercises have involved the use of pigs to provide training in resuscitation and surgical techniques for treating wounds inflicted by different calibre weapons. Ministers of this Government had not previously been made aware of this activity, and ordered its immediate suspension pending a review of this practice.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the shooting of live pigs by British soldiers in Denmark. [46080]

Mr. Doug Henderson: UK military surgical teams have participated in training exercises organised by the Danish Armed Forces' Medical Services which involve Danish marksmen shooting different calibre weapons at pigs. The purpose of the exercises is to provide training in resuscitation and surgical techniques for treating wounds inflicted by such weapons.

Ministers of this Government had not previously been made aware of this activity, and ordered its immediate suspension pending a review of this practice.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on allegations of (a) harassment, (b) breach of contract and (c) sexual discrimination concerning staff in the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. [52046]

Mr. Spellar: MOD does not tolerate or condone any form of harassment, discrimination or persecution of individuals or groups in the workplace and has formal processes in place to facilitate the handling of complaints. Civil servants also have the right to appeal to the Civil Service Appeal Board on more serious matters. This applies as much to staff in the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency as to any other MOD employees.

All allegations are subject to these processes and are dealt with on a confidential basis. It would therefore be inappropriate to identify complainants or their complaints, or to comment on them.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on decommissioning operations at (a) AWE, Foulness and (b) AWE, Cardiff. [52158]

Mr. Spellar: Although AWE vacated the Foulness site in December 1997, trials work has continued in support of the nuclear warhead programme via a contractual arrangement between AWE and the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, DERA. In addition, a number of existing facilities are being retained until the 31 March 2002 on a care and maintenance basis for use in those trials, and against possible future requirements by AWE. A programme of Post-Operative Clear Out, limited decommissioning and demolition was carried out by AWE prior to December 1997. A Land Quality Statement has been lodged with DERA against which future decommissioning of the rest of the site will be done.

A price has recently been agreed with AWE plc for the decommissioning of the Cardiff site.

Colonel Andrew Gale

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what duties were performed by the Defence Attaché in Accra and accredited also to Sierra Leone in 1997–98; [52027]

(2) what duties were performed by Colonel Andrew Gale whilst on service in West Africa. [52030]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Lieutenant Colonel Gale was, from November 1994 until January 1998, Defence Adviser to the British High Commissioner in Accra, Ghana, with non-resident accreditation to Togo, Cote d'Ivoire and Sierra Leone. As Defence Adviser, his duties were to advise the Ambassador/High Commissioner on military matters, including on the security situation, and report information back to the MOD. Lt. Col. Gale spent most of his time working in Accra, but would have visited the other countries within his area of responsibility about twice each year.

Lt. Col. (local Colonel) Gale is currently serving in Sierra Leone, on secondment to the United Nations, as the Military Adviser to the United Nations Secretary General's Special Representative.

Lieutenant Colonel Peter Hicks

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what duties were performed by Lieutenant Colonel Peter Hicks whilst on service in West Africa; [52031]

(2) what duties were performed by the military intelligence liaison officer deployed to Conakry and Sierra Leone in 1998; [52028]

(3) what duties were performed by the military liaison officer deployed to Sierra Leone and Conakry in 1997. [52029]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 23 July 1998]: Major (local Lieutenant Colonel) Peter Hicks visited Sierra Leone for a short familiarisation visit, along with others from the MOD, from 3 to 8 March 1997. On 15 February 1998, Major Hicks deployed to Conakry, Guinea, as a military liaison officer in preparation for possible service in Sierra Leone should the democratically elected government be restored. He was transported, along with the British High Commissioner, to Freetown by HMS Cornwall on 5 March, and returned to the UK on 17 March. Major Hicks's duties in Conakry and Sierra Leone were to provide military advice to the High Commissioner, to liaise with other UK military personnel in the country and to report military information to the MOD. He subsequently visited Sierra Leone from 27 April to 8 May as a follow-up to his earlier period of service.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52312]

Mr. Spellar: The use of asbestos materials is strictly controlled. Guidance is given in the extant Defence Estate Organisation (DEO) Technical Specification 036 "Heating, Hot and Cold Water, Steam and Gas Installations for Buildings" (October 1997), which clearly states that asbestos materials shall not be installed.

The DEO has issued a further Technical Bulletin, Design and Maintenance Guide 16, "Asbestos Based Materials" (April 1997), which details the mandatory requirements and procedures for handling asbestos.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52575]

Mr. Spellar: My Department is committed to making an appropriate contribution to the New Deal programme both on the Service and Civilian networks.

Although the Services are not committed to employing specific numbers of young people through the unsubsidised job option, they are working closely with New Deal personal advisers and Further Education Colleges to identify what self-development is required to make young people more confident and self reliant, and thus influencing their choice of career towards the Armed Forces. The Services are not employing young people through the subsidised job option.

On the Civilian side, New Deal opportunities are considered whenever recruitment campaigns are undertaken. Responsibility for recruitment is delegated to line management areas. We will be monitoring use of the scheme and expect details of the first 6 months to be available from October.

Biological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations his Department has conducted into whether information from the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, was passed to the biological warfare programme organised by South Africa's former apartheid regime in the last 15 years; when this investigation was started and finished; what were the results of this investigation; what action has been taken in the light of this investigation; and if he will make a statement. [53158]

Mr. Spellar: We are aware of allegations that classified information from the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of the Defence and Evaluation Research Agency at Porton Down was obtained by the former South African Government. These claims are being investigated. It is not our policy to comment on investigations in progress.

Trident

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proportion of the overall procurement of Trident D5 missiles will act as a processing margin; [52133]

(2) how many Trident D5 missiles have been test fired to date; and what proportion of the overall numbers procured are expected to be test fired over the programme's life. [52134]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: To date, six Trident D5 missiles have been test fired as part of the work up of the three Vanguard class submarines currently in operational service. On current plans, a further eight missiles will be test fired over the life of the Trident programme. A further four missiles will constitute a processing margin.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department will arrange inspections to demonstrate that 48 warheads per Trident submarine have now been deployed. [52135]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The Government's decision in the Strategic Defence Review to reduce the number of Trident warheads deployed on RN nuclear submarines to 48 was based on our assessment of the minimum necessary UK deterrent force. In the absence of a wider arms control context involving reciprocal obligations from other nuclear states we do not propose to initiate outside inspection to verify this self-imposed limit.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the impact on the number of Trident D5 missiles normally carried on each of the Trident submarines in the operational cycle of the decision not to purchase more than 58 D5 missiles overall. [52132]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: The Strategic Defence Review concluded that the 58 Trident missiles already purchased are sufficient for credible deterrence over the lifetime of Trident. I am withholding details of the number of missiles carried on our Trident submarines on deterrent patrol under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the minimum number of nuclear warheads deployed on each Trident submarine since HMS Vanguard entered service. [52815]

Mr. George Robertson: HMS Vanguard first deployed on patrol with slightly fewer than 60 warheads, prior to the Trident force also assuming a sub-strategic role. The other two Trident submarines currently in service have typically deployed on deterrent patrol with 60 warheads. I am withholding details of the numbers of warheads carried for the sub-strategic role under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information relating to Defence, Security and International relations.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since HMS Vanguard entered service more than 65 warheads were deployed on a Trident submarine at sea. [52814]

Mr. George Robertson: None.

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in discussions with the United States of America on the decision not to proceed with the United Kingdom's planned final Trident missile purchase. [54813]

Mr. George Robertson: Our decision not to proceed with the planned final Trident missile body buy will have implications for the UK/US procurement programme and the long term Trident support arrangements of both countries. We have, therefore, agreed with the United States that, to safeguard production capabilities, we will continue with the planned procurement of missile components. Some of these will be required by the UK as in-service spares; the remainder we will sell back to the United States in future years for use in their continuing production programme. This arrangement has been enshrined in a Memorandum of Understanding that the Deputy Secretary for Defence and I have signed.

Overall our decision to maintain our Trident missile inventory at 58, rather than increasing it to 65 as previously planned, will require the write off of surplus expenditure to the value of some £40 million, over half of which results from advance commitments to the final buy by the previous Government. Our decision is expected to save in the region of £50 million.

Permanent Under-Secretary

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if an open competition was held for the appointment of his Department's Permanent Under-Secretary. [52801]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 28 July 1998]: No. There was, however, internal competition across Government Departments to select a new Permanent Under-Secretary in my Department.

Accommodation

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential dwellings are owned by his Department; how many are currently vacant; and what has been the average length of time they have been vacant. [53910]

Mr. Spellar: As at 30 June 1998, the Ministry of Defence either owned or leased, mainly from Annington Homes, 67,463 family dwellings in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, of which 13,922 are currently vacant. Information on the average length of time a property has been vacant is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Additionally, between 260 and 300 houses are managed by Commands for civilian occupancy but vacancy rates are not held centrally.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service families are accommodated in privately owned homes; and what is the average annual rent of these properties. [53911]

Mr. Spellar: The number of Service families accommodated in privately owned rental properties in England, Scotland and Wales is 914. The approximate average annual rent for this type of property is £9,500. The figures exclude houses leased by MOD from Annington Homes.

Surplus Property

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being take by his Department to implement the National Audit Office's recommendation in paragraph 3.16 of its report identifying and selling surplus property (HC 776, session 1997–98) regarding the timetable for completing the land quality assessments of major sites; and if he will make a statement. [53378]

Mr. Spellar: As the Report says, the Ministry of Defence has set in train a programme of Land Quality Assessments and intends to complete assessments of all major sites within 10 years. We are reviewing the scope for reducing the timetable and shall consider any recommendation the Public Accounts Committee might make on the matter following its investigation.

Defence Council

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 May 1998, Official Report, column 437, if he will place in the Library a list of the items discussed at each of the meetings of the Defence Council since 1 August 1997. [53374]

Mr. George Robertson: The items discussed at the Defence Council meetings held since 1 August 1997 are as follows:

Date	Meeting
24 September 1997	Strategic Defence Review
27 November 1997	Mid-year Performance Report
	NATO Command Structure Review
18 December 1997	Strategic Defence Review
26 January 1998	Long Term Costings 1998
23 February 1998	Strategic Defence Review
2 April 1998	Strategic Defence Review
	1998 Departmental Plan
20 July 1998	End of Year Performance Report
	Future Programme of Business for Defence Council Meetings

Performance Report

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the next edition of his Department's Performance Report. [53376]

Mr. George Robertson: I expect the Ministry of Defence's Departmental Performance Report for 1997–98 to be published in the Autumn.

Chiefs of Staff

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Chiefs of Staff have met since 1 January. [53373]

Mr. George Robertson: Since 1 January 1998, the Chiefs of Staff have met on the following dates:

15 January 1998
27 January 1998
10 February 1998
17 February 1998
24 February 1998
10 March 1998
31 March 1998
28 April 1998
13 May 1998
10 June 1998
23 June 1998
7 July 1998
21 July 1998

Nuclear Stocks

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the stocks of tritium currently held by his Department. [51683]

Mr. Spellar: No. To reveal such information would be contrary to national defence and security interests. I am therefore withholding details under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the stock of plutonium and highly enriched uranium listed in the Strategic Defence Review included the armoury currently located in operational nuclear weapons. [51684]

Mr. Spellar: The details of defence stocks of plutonium and highly enriched uranium published in the Strategic Defence Review included material in our nuclear weapons and nuclear submarine reactors.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the taskforces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by his Department since 1 May 1997 and in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers and (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53147]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53064]

Mr. Spellar: The numbers of staff aged over 60 years employed by the Ministry of Defence at 1 January 1998, excluding those employed by MOD agencies, were 2,212 men and 617 women. The numbers aged over 60 employed by MOD agencies at 1 January 1998 were 2,442 men and 467 women.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53058]

Mr. Spellar: Civil servants have no formal contract of employment. However, under the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme civil servants have an entitlement to retire at age 60, which is the earliest age at which they may receive their full accrued pension benefits. Notwithstanding the entitlement to retire at 60, MOD policy prescribes normal retirement ages for each grade, based on the employment needs of the Department. This gives staff in particular grades an expectation to retire at an age beyond their 60th birthday, if they choose to do so.

The numbers of staff employed by the MOD who have an expectation to retire after their 60th birthday, excluding those employed by MOD agencies, on 1 January 1998 were 17,592 men and 12,937 women. The numbers of staff employed by the MOD agencies on 1 January 1998 who have an expectation to retire after their 60th birthday, were 21,480 men and 11,320 women.

Royal Navy Careers CD-ROM

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will assess the advantages of introducing a similar package to the Royal Navy Careers CD-ROM for all the armed forces. [53801]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Recruiting Shortages

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new initiatives he is taking to address the shortage of recruits in the Army [53802]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

RAF (Recruitment)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new initiatives he is taking to increase the number of recruits to the RAF. [53803]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Enhanced Surveillance Radar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Enhanced Surveillance Radar recently developed at the Defence Evaluation Research Agency; and what plans he has to use this technology in the armed forces. [53806]

Mr. Spellar: The Enhanced Surveillance Radar, ESR, has been designed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and built by GEC Marconi Avionics. It is an airborne surveillance radar and has been developed to meet the needs of a number of military research and development programmes for high-quality, high-resolution, radar data and also for in-flight, real time demonstration of new radar techniques. Currently undergoing commissioning trials, it is envisaged that the ESR will support MoD work on the Airborne Stand Off Radar, ASTOR, programme.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53349]

Mr. Spellar: The Welsh Language Board wrote on 1 May 1998 inviting my Department to prepare a Welsh language scheme. My officials have held discussions with the Board on a number of occasions, and once a draft of the scheme is finalised, we will hold a period of public consultation. The scheme will be submitted to the Welsh Language Board by 31 March 1999 for approval.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those who have accompanied (i) him and (ii) his departmental Ministers on overseas visits since 1 January indicating (a) the venue of the visit, (b) the purpose of the visit, (c) the names of those involved, (d) the job of those involved, (e) the reasons why they were included in the visit and (f) the cost to public funds. [53843]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Gulf Veterans

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a new Head of the Gulf Veteran's Medical Assessment Programme will be appointed. [54620]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following an open competition we have now appointed Professor Harry Lee to be the Head of the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (MAP). Professor Lee has had a distinguished medical and academic career specialising in general medicine, renal medicine and infectious diseases. He is scheduled to take up his post at the MAP on 1 September.

Defence Housing Executive

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Defence Agency status for the Defence Housing Executive. [54872]

Mr. Spellar: Currently, the responsibility for managing, allocating and maintaining suitable housing for the families of Service personnel posted within Great Britain lies with the Defence Housing Executive. The Department owns or leases some 64,000 houses across the country which are controlled by the DHE staff of some 1,200 through a network of 24 Area offices, 7 Regional offices and one Headquarters office.

A "prior options" study is being undertaken to establish whether Agency status or other options would be appropriate. I should welcome comments from interested parties. These should be sent to:

Air Marshal Sir Peter Squire KCB DFC AFC RAF
Deputy Chief of the Defence Staff (Programmes and Personnel)
Ministry of Defence
Room 5327
Main Building
Whitehall
London
SW1A 2HB.

Soldiers (Scotland)

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers are currently based in Scotland; and what was the (a) lowest and (b) highest level in the past five years. [53279]

Mr. Doug Henderson: On 1 June 1998, the total number of regular Army officers and soldiers, including trainees, assigned to units based in Scotland was 3,433.

Comparable strength figures for the last five years are available only in respect of 1 July, and are given in the table:

Year	Strength
1 July 1997	2,953
1 July 1996	3,453
1 July 1995	2,587
1 July 1994	3,444
1 July 1993	3,163

The continual movement of Army units and personnel means that the total Army presence in Scotland fluctuates throughout each year. I regret, therefore, that a more detailed breakdown of figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Asset Sales

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the one-off departmental asset sales, with cash values, which will offset the reduction of defence expenditure from £915 million to £685 million by 2002. [50961]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 17 July 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Maples) on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 605.

Defence Projects

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what defence projects are currently being undertaken with the Government of (a) Belgium, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Spain and (f) the United States of America; what are their durations; what are their total costs; and what percentage of work on the current defence projects being carried out with each Government takes place within the United Kingdom. [51929]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Warheads

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress to date in dismantling WE177 and Chevaline warheads. [52179]

Mr. George Robertson: 97 per cent. of WE 177 warheads have now been dismantled and the programme will be completed by the end of August 1998. Chevaline warhead dismantlement has not started yet and will do so once the WE 177 dismantlement programme has been completed.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the (a) WE177 and (b) Chevaline warhead dismantling programme is expected to be completed. [52250]

Mr. George Robertson: 97 per cent. of WE177 warheads have now been dismantled and the programme will be completed by the end of August 1998.

With regard to Chevaline warheads, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Mr. Taylor) on 7 May 1998, Official Report, columns 436–37.

Agency Newsletters

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of (a) the Medical Supplies Agency, (b) the Naval Training and Recruiting Agency, (c) the Defence Secondary Care Agency, (d) the Meteorological Office and (e) the Defence Intelligence Staff; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. [53380]

Mr. Spellar: Where these matters fall to the Chief Executives of the Agencies concerned. I have asked them to write direct to the hon. Member.

The Defence Intelligence Staff publishes three staff newsletters. "The Mole" is published monthly for its Headquarters staff in London, at a Restricted security classification, and was first produced in July 1997. "Compass" is published monthly for the staff of the Military Survey Agency, is unclassified, and was first produced in June 1996. "Lynx" is published quarterly for the staff of the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre, is unclassified, and was first published in Autumn 1996.

Letter from John Chadwick to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 30 July 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the newsletters produced for the staff of the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency (NRTA) in my capacity as Chief Executive of the NRTA.

I have to advise you that no regular newsletter is currently produced for the staff of my Agency.

Letter from Major General C. G. Callow to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 30 July 1998:

AGENCY NEWSLETTERS

1. I am replying to your letter to the Secretary of State for Defence about Agency Newsletters as this matter, in respect of my Agency, falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA).

2. The DSCA staff magazine is an unclassified publication that is published quarterly. It was first produced in a limited format in December 1995 for those staff already working in the Defence Medical Services who were to become part of the DSCA when it launched in April 1996.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Matthew Taylor dated 30 July 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence regarding what are the current security classifications of the newsletters produced for the staff of the Meteorological Office; how often each newsletter is produced; and when each newsletter was first produced. The information you require is as follows:

Name	Classification	How often	First Produced
Mercury	Unclassified	11 per year	November 1985
Comet	Unclassified	Weekly	January 1996

Mercury contains articles, information and letters covering a wide range of topics of interest to our staff. Comet brings together our administrative instructions plus staff items such as Job Opportunities within The Met. Office and other government departments.

Letter from B. E. Nimick to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 30 July 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Medical Supplies Agency newsletters, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Medical Supplies Agency.

Within the Agency there are two types of newsletter. The first is intended for distribution to all regular customers of the Medical Supplies Agency. This Newsletter is used to inform customers about our procedures, supply problems and general information relating to medical supply.

The second type of newsletter is a Core Brief. This is distributed to managers at the Agency Headquarters and Agency Distribution Centres, for dissemination to all staff. The Core Brief informs all Agency staff of future plans, target and progress.

The current security classification of the Newsletter and Core Brief is unclassified.

Our Newsletter is produced approximately every four months with the first issue being made in May 1997.

The Core Brief is produced once every two to three months with the first issue being produced in November 1996.

Fibre Optic Tank Camouflage

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timescale for the introduction of fibre optic camouflage on tanks. [53807]

Mr. Spellar: We have no current plans to apply fibre optic camouflage to tanks.

NETMA

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed partnership with Norway in the inter-Governmental buying agency NETMA. [53800]

Mr. Spellar: NETMA, the NATO Eurofighter and Tornado Management Agency, represents the interests of the Governments participating in these collaborative programmes. Norway has a requirement to replace her F5 aircraft and is currently evaluating Eurofighter and F16 as possible replacements. Norway may wish to participate in the Eurofighter programme by becoming a member of the NATO Agency. It is for Norway to decide what best meets her requirements.

Shoeburyness Ranges

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 39, what factors led him to exclude the income from the ETC and the demilitarisation facility in his calculation of the income accruing to the ranges at Shoeburyness; and if he will make a statement. [53822]

Mr. Spellar: The income from the ETC and the demilitarisation facility were shown separately so that a direct comparison of the income achieved by the range at Shoeburyness could be made with the income achieved by the other ranges. Similarly, the income from the operation of airfield was not included in the West Freugh income.

The income achieved by the ETC and the demilitarisation facility is not income achieved by the Shoeburyness range, but is income achieved at the Shoeburyness site.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to make a decision on the proposed transfer of work from Shoeburyness to Eskmeals. [53824]

Mr. Spellar: We expect to make a decision shortly.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total income accruing to the Shoeburyness and Eskmeals ranges in respect of all income raising activities in each of the past five years and separately identifying that part of the site income which stems from the strategic pricing initiative. [53823]

Mr. Spellar: The total income accruing to the Shoeburyness and Eskmeals ranges in respect of all income raising activities in each of the previous three years is as follows:

£000

	Shoeburyness	Eskmeals
1995–96	25,603	5,365
1996–97	17,834	5,180
1997–98	20,896	8,759

Information on a comparable basis prior to the inclusion of the ranges in the Trading Agency in 1995 is not available.

The income accruing to the Shoeburyness and Eskmeals ranges in respect of the Strategic Pricing Initiative which operated for 1997–98, and is included in the above figures, was as follows:

£000

	1997–98
Shoeburyness	6,244
Eskmeals	600

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 July 1998, Official Report, column 39, for what reasons in his summary of the income accruing to the various ranges, he included in note 1 the SPI total of £600,000 within the income of the Eskmeals range and in note 3 deducted the SPI total of £6,244,000 from the total income of the Shoeburyness establishment; and if he will make a statement. [53821]

Mr. Spellar: The reported income for the Eskmeals range of £8.759K included the Strategic Pricing Initiative, SPI, support of £600K as this was for a specific facility within the range.

The reported income for the Shoeburyness range of £14,223K was reported net of the contribution from the SPI, as the support payment contributed to the costs of the Shoeburyness site which includes the Environmental Test Centre and the demilitarisation facility as well as the range.

Agency Savings

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what savings he estimates will accrue from the creation of (a) the Defence Transport and Movements Agency and (b) the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency. [53805]

Mr. Spellar: We estimate that the creation of the Defence Transport and Movements Agency will save £5.014 million over a ten-year period. The creation of the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency (Non-Explosive) will result in estimated savings of £62.1 million over the same period, with further estimated savings of £4.1 million as a result of the incorporation of storage and distribution activity for all explosive items into a division of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c) (ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [53855]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence had seventeen Non Departmental Public Bodies on 1 May 1997, and the same seventeen currently remain unchanged as NDPBs. None has been disbanded, and there are no current plans for any to be disbanded in the next 12 months; none has had its functions transferred and none has been renamed while continuing to perform the same role. The Royal College of Defence Studies Advisory Board and the Royal Military College of Science Advisory Council are, however, currently having their status as NDPBs re-examined. MOD's NDPBs are as follows:

Fleet Air Arm Museum

Royal Naval Museum

Royal Marines Museum

Royal Naval Submarine Museum

National Army Museum

Royal Air Force Museum

Oil and Pipelines Agency

Advisory Committee on Conscientious Objectors

Dartmoor Steering Group and Working Party

Defence Scientific Advisory Council and Committees

Independent Board of Visitors for the Military Corrective Training Centre

National Employer Liaison Committee

Nuclear Powered Warships Safety Committee

Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee

Review Board for Government Contracts

Royal College of Defence Studies Advisory Board

Royal Military College of Science Advisory Council.

Defence Intelligence Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the impact of partial privatisation of the Defence Intelligence Service on security. [53804]

Mr. George Robertson: The statement of requirements issued to companies bidding to provide support services to the Defence Intelligence Service under Public/Private partnership arrangements stipulated in detail the security criteria to be met. These are no less stringent than those applying to staff and contractors already working in the organisation. Compliance with these requirements will be a contractual condition and will be carefully monitored.

Plutonium Discharges (Aldermaston)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what unplanned discharges of plutonium took place from Aldermaston in December 1997; with what consequences; and if he will make a statement. [53432]

Mr. Spellar: There were no unplanned discharges of plutonium from AWE Aldermaston in December 1997.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Reviews

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the reviews her Department, and its predecessor, initiated in the years (a) 1974–75, (b) 1979–80 and (c) 1992–93. [48525]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 6 July 1998]: In 1992–93 the Overseas Development Administration published the following reports: "Review of the factors influencing the uptake and impact of ODA-supported renewable natural resource research projects", "Review of agricultural research supported by ODA (Natural Resources and Environment Department) during the period 1988–1991: report of the review panel meeting held at Sevenoaks, Kent January 1992".

I regret that information requested for 1974–75 and 1979–80 is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Fiji

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what assistance her Department has provided to Fiji in terms of (a) healthcare provision, (b) education facilities and (c) information technology in the last five years; and if she will make a statement; [52053]

(2) what projects her Department has sponsored in Fiji over the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [52054]

Mr. Foulkes: I will write to the hon. Gentleman with details of activities in Fiji funded over the past five years. British development assistance to the Pacific island countries is now provided from a single budget under a regional allocation rather than individual country programmes. The emphasis is upon two key sectors—education and rights and good governance—with particular emphasis upon three least-developed partner countries (Kiribati, Solomon Islands and Vanuatu), with assistance also to regional organisations and institutions.

Refugees

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of access for aid agencies to refugees along the Guinea-Sierra Leone border. [52470]

Mr. Foulkes [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Department for International Development makes regular assessments of access for aid agencies to refugees in this area in conjunction with the Office for Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) and non-governmental organisations.

There were problems of access for a period of four weeks during June and July, but from a recent OXFAM assessment and from NGOs working in the camps it is reported that there were sufficient food supplies available during this period. We understand that a humanitarian aid corridor has now been opened, with effect from 11 July.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52891]

Mr. Foulkes: The amounts spent by DFID on IT during 1997–98 were as follows:

IT: £2,056,598

including, inter alia:

(a) Personal computers: £126,421

(b) Main-frame: £0

(c) Mini-computers: £802,879

(d) File servers: £93,136.

Indonesia

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of 6 June 1995, Official Report, column 37, and the answer of the President of the Board of Trade on 15 June 1998, Official Report, column 98, in relation to the Cikampek to Padalarang toll road project in Indonesia, what expenditure has been (a) allocated and (b) incurred by her Department to date; what impact assessment has been made of the delay to the project on the effectiveness of her Department's support for the project; and if she will place in the Library copies of the project appraisal, monitoring and evaluation reports to date. [52900]

Clare Short: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the cost of all research undertaken by her Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by her officials; and if she will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52709]

Mr. Foulkes: The term research covers a wide range of activities from scientific and engineering research through to consultancies and public opinion surveys. The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if she will indicate in (c) (ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies her Department currently is responsible for. [53861]

Mr. Foulkes: The information requested is as follows:

(a) None

(b)(i) The Crown Agents Holding and Realisation Board will be wound up within the next year.

(ii) Subject to passage of the necessary legislation, it is intended that the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be transformed from a public corporation into a company governed by the Companies Act.

(c) None

(d) None

(e) Commonwealth Scholarships Commission

Advisory Committee on Overseas Economic and Social Research

Know-How Fund Advisory Board

Overseas Service Pensions Scheme Advisory Board

India Family Pension Funds Body of Commissioners.

Since 1 May 1997, we have established one new advisory body, namely the Development Awareness Working Group. The Department is currently responsible for eight non-departmental public bodies in total.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the task forces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by her Department since 1 May 1997, indicating in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers, (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53287]

Mr. Foulkes: We established earlier this year a Development Awareness Working Group, whose terms of reference are as follows:

The Development Awareness Working Group will advise DFID on the development and implementation of its strategy on development awareness.

Specifically it will consider:

The relative priority of different target groups and organisations including schools, colleges, providers of adult education, development education groups or centres, employers and trade unions.

Key themes and messages.

The most effective materials and channels for communication.

How to measure progress in improving public awareness of development issues.

How to ensure proper coverage of different parts of the UK, as well as ethnic and religious groups.

How to set DFID activities in the context of wider UK activity on development awareness and to ensure coherence with other Government sponsored or funded activity.

The current membership of the Group is:

George Foulkes, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State

Professor Tim Brighouse

Ms Libby Grundy

Mr. Stephen McCloskey
Mr. John Sutton
Mr. Doug Bourn
Mr. Ashok Ohri
Mr. Tony Robinson
Mr. David Mackenzie
Mr. Scott Sinclair
Mr. Tom Wylie
Ms Bisi Adeleye Fayemi
Mr. Dan Rees
Ms Judith Hemery
Ms Jaya Graves
Mr. John Fisher
Ms Jane Nelson
Mr. Derek Walker
Dr. Kim Howells MP
Ms Tany Alexander
Ms Liz Cumberbatch
Ms Elenid Jones
Mr. Jon Snow
Mr. Phil Hope MP
Mr. Paddy Coulter.

Members are drawn from a range of backgrounds including formal and informal education, the media, churches, business, non-governmental organisations, youth groups and different ethnic groups. We do not have detailed information on the background of all members. However, none has been appointed specifically because of having a background in science, engineering or small business. Members of the group receive no remuneration other than travel and subsistence costs and do not control any budgets.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Agricultural Subsidies

3. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next plans to meet his counterparts in Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic to discuss European Union agricultural subsidies; and if he will make a statement. [51687]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Department maintains regular contacts with representatives of all the countries which are candidates for EU accession. I hope to meet my counterparts in Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic in due course.

Flax

9. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new proposals he has to increase the cultivation of flax. [51696]

Mr. Morley: Farmers who grow flax already benefit from generous support under the CAP. The key to encouraging its use is for the industry to develop new markets.

Farm Incomes

10. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest forecast of the trends in farm incomes; and what assessment he has made of the impact of the comprehensive spending review on them. [51697]

22. Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the level of farm incomes in 1998–99. [51709]

Mr. Rooker: Farm income has been a matter of concern for everyone in the industry. It has therefore been raised in numerous meetings and in correspondence.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on farm incomes over the last 12 months. [51690]

Mr. Nick Brown: The issue of farm incomes is frequently raised. The economic circumstances of farm businesses are monitored regularly and published by the Department. Future trends are difficult to predict, but it is likely that incomes will be depressed in 1998. They are unlikely to be affected by the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Food Standards Agency

11. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress towards the establishment of the Food Standards Agency. [51698]

Mr. Nick Brown: We are making good progress towards the establishment of a Food Standards Agency and intend to publish a draft Bill for consultation soon. Meanwhile, my Department and the Department of Health are working closely together to deliver an open and effective food safety policy.

17. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research funding will be provided to support the Food Standards Agency. [51704]

Mr. Rooker: The Agency will take over responsibility for the existing programme of research on food safety and standards currently funded by MAFF and the Department of Health. The precise sum to be transferred to the Agency is yet to be determined.

27. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations his Department has received from farmers on the proposed Foods Standards Agency. [51714]

Mr. Rooker: A number of organisations representing farmers' interests commented on the Food Standards Agency White Paper. Copies of all the responses are available in the Library of the House.

Exchange Rates

12. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from farmers' organisations regarding current exchange rates. [51699]

Mr. Rooker: I have regular contacts with farming organisations who keep me informed of their views on a wide range of issues, including the effect of current exchange rates on the agricultural industry.

Bovine Tuberculosis

13. Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve compensation payments to those farmers affected by bovine TB. [51700]

Mr. Rooker: The question of compensation for farmers with TB outbreaks will be considered in the light of decisions being taken by the Government on taking forward the recommendations in the Krebs report.

Fish Stocks

14. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the future of fish stocks; and if he will make a statement. [51701]

Mr. Morley: There is widespread concern about the future of fish stocks, underlining the need for cautious management.

Agricultural Competitiveness

15. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the advantages of including in his departmental objectives the requirement for a competitive agricultural industry; and if he will make a statement. [51702]

Mr. Nick Brown: The development of a competitive, sustainable UK agriculture industry is in the interests of farmers and consumers alike. It is therefore entirely consistent with the increased emphasis we place on the needs of the consumer.

Genetically Modified Foods

16. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will disseminate widely the list his Department is collating in respect of the known suppliers of genetically modified foods. [51703]

Mr. Rooker: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the list of suppliers of non-genetically modified soya and maize that is freely available on the MAFF internet web pages. Details of genetically modified foods assessed as safe to market under the terms of the EC Novel Foods Regulations are published in press releases and in the annual reports of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes.

20. Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tests are being undertaken on the interactions between genetically modified crops and the range of currently available fertilisers and herbicides, and on their consequential effects upon (a) human health and (b) biodiversity. [51707]

Mr. Rooker: A wide range of data to assess the impact on human health and the environment is being generated from field trials in which genetically modified and conventional crops are grown under standard agronomic conditions. For herbicide tolerant crops this includes treatment with the herbicide to which they are tolerant and other herbicides.

21. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on genetically modified food. [51708]

Mr. Rooker: I have in the past few months received representations about genetically modified foods from a wide range of organisations and the general public, including consumer and environmental groups.

Common Agricultural Policy

18. Mr. Forth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the progress made on reform of the CAP in respect of the beef sector during the UK presidency of the EU. [51705]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to be able to tell the right hon. Member that good progress was achieved. We presided over the first substantial political discussion of the reform proposals and, by the end of the our presidency, officials had virtually completed the first technical read-through of the Commission's detailed proposals.

Agricultural Deficit

19. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to reduce the trade deficit in agriculture over the next three years. [51706]

Mr. Morley: The Government support a range of measures to help the UK agriculture and food industries become more competitive at home and abroad.

Organic Farming

23. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources he is allocating over the next three years to provide advice to farmers wishing to convert to organic production; and if he will make a statement. [51710]

Mr. Morley: Free advice, including a telephone help line and on-farm advisory visits, is available from the Organic Conversion Information Service (01179 227707), funded by the Ministry. I am considering the amounts to be made available to fund this service in the light of the comprehensive spending review.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decisions he has taken on the recommendations of the review of the organic aid scheme; and if he will make a statement. [54385]

Mr. Nick Brown: Since we came to office, we have been determined to encourage more farmers to convert to organic production. We have made more resources available for advice to help them and I am pleased to say that many more are realising the opportunities that organic farming can offer and seeking to convert. However, conversion has costs and the additional returns cannot be realised immediately.

More support is justified for farmers during the conversion period. Subject to the agreement of the European Commission, it is my intention to increase payment rates under the English scheme to those recommended in the review which we commissioned last year.

If organic farming is to become a mainstream option, it is important to encourage larger farms to convert. For this reason, I intend to go beyond the recommendations of that review and lift the 300 hectare limit on the area which can qualify for aid. I will also be going beyond the recommendations of the review by making the annual payment at the end of the first quarter, thus helping farmers' cash flow at a difficult time.

Sustainable Fisheries

24. Mr. Woodward: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy on sustainable fisheries; and if he will make a statement. [51711]

Mr. Morley: The Government's policy is to conserve fish stocks for future generations and secure a sustainable future for the sea fishing industry.

Animal Welfare

25. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to achieve a welfare directive for farm animals across the EU. [51712]

Mr. Morley: I am delighted to confirm that, at the conclusion of our Presidency in June, we succeeded in obtaining agreement to a Directive which sets welfare standards for all species of farm animal across the EU.

Farm Diversification

26. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to encourage farmers to diversify. [51713]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to our hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle) on 28 July 1998, Official Report, column 225.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made on the introduction of measures to ensure that all British-registered fishing vessels maintain a real economic link with United Kingdom populations dependent on fisheries and related industries. [54383]

Mr. Nick Brown: I am pleased to announce that, following on from the Prime Minister's exchange of letters with the President of the European Commission in June 1997, the Commission has now confirmed that our proposals for ensuring an economic link between UK flagged vessels and populations dependent on fisheries and related industries are compatible with Community law.

A new licence condition will be introduced with effect from 1 January 1999 requiring all vessels to demonstrate an economic link with the UK by one of the following means:

A. landing at least 50 per cent. by weight of the vessel's catch of quota stocks into the UK,

or

B. employing a crew of whom at least 50 per cent. are normally resident in a UK coastal area,

or incurring a given level of operating expenditure in the UK for goods and services provided in UK coastal areas,

or

D. demonstrating an economic link by other means (including combinations of the above) providing sufficient benefit to populations dependent on fisheries and related industries.

A paper setting out the new economic link requirements has been deposited in the Library of the House. Fisheries Departments will be writing to industry shortly with further details concerning the introduction of the new arrangements.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he has taken to support the United Kingdom brewing industry. [52635]

Mr. Morley: By its nature, the UK brewing industry has a number of important interfaces with Government. MAFF works closely with the brewers, and with other Government Departments, to promote a successful and competitive industry, responsive to its particular role in society. The Ministry makes limited contributions to relevant research and development, and has recently supported an industry initiative to enhance perceptions of the opportunities afforded by a career in the licensed retail trade. More widely, the Government have begun a comprehensive review of licensing law; and completed a review of alcohol and tobacco fraud, proposing a number of ways to protect the industry from fraud and smuggling.

Farmers (Marketing Schemes)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each current United Kingdom and EU scheme which will provide assistance to farmers in setting up marketing schemes together with the total sum available for each scheme and the minimum and maximum figures for individual application where applicable. [52474]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 July 1998]: I will write to the hon. Member with the information he has requested as soon as possible. It is necessary to draw together details of schemes administered by each Agricultural Department and it will take a little time to ensure that the reply is comprehensive.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission in support of a Community-wide ban on the export of live horses for slaughter. [51380]

Mr. Morley: The Government do not consider it a realistic objective to persuade the European Commission to propose an EU-wide ban on the export of live horses for slaughter. We support the active enforcement, in all member states, of EU rules on the welfare of livestock in transit and at slaughter, and have argued for the same rules to be strictly applied when animals are exported from the EU to third countries. We will draw to the attention of the EU Commission specific complaints relating to the EU export of horses for slaughter.

Hedgerows

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to provide selective assistance for the maintenance and improvement of hedgerows. [52810]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 July 1998]: Payments are available for the restoration of hedges and their subsequent maintenance under the Environmentally Sensitive Areas (ESA) and Countryside Stewardship Schemes in England. In certain ESAs, there are payments for positive maintenance of hedges.

Quarantine

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to bring forward reforms to the quarantine regime; and if he will make a statement. [53681]

Mr. Rooker: Ministers await the report of the Advisory Group on Quarantine which we expect to be published very shortly, most probably during the Parliamentary summer recess. A full public consultation will then be held.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53356]

Mr. Rooker: The Welsh Language Board invited the Ministry on 15 December 1997 to prepare a Welsh language scheme. Consultations between MAFF officials and the Welsh Language Board predate this letter and officials met the Welsh Language Board on 5 June 1998. A draft scheme has been produced. The deadline for approval of the scheme is 31 December 1998.

Growth Promoters

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to impose a unilateral ban on the use of growth promoters licensed by the European Union under Directive 70/524. [53713]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have noted that the Agriculture Select Committee favours a ban on antibiotic growth promoters. The Committee's report has been drawn to the attention of the Veterinary Products Committee, who will advise the Government. Further advice is also expected from the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food. The Government will act in the light of the advice of their scientific committees.

Meat Imports

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom bacon consumption is of imported meat; and from which countries such imports originate. [53714]

Mr. Rooker: In 1997, the United Kingdom was 51 per cent. self-sufficient in bacon; the main countries of origin of imported products were Denmark and the Netherlands.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of United Kingdom un-cured pork consumption is of imported meat; and from which countries those imports originate. [53716]

Mr. Rooker: In 1997, the United Kingdom was 106 per cent. self-sufficient in pork and was therefore a net exporter. Quantities of pork were imported from Denmark, the Netherlands, Ireland and France.

Timber

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to eliminate dumping of foreign timber upon the United Kingdom market. [50817]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

It is the responsibility of the European Commission to investigate complaints by the EU industries concerned about allegedly dumped imports into the EU. I am not aware of a complaint to the European Commission about the dumping of foreign timber.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government have yet reached a decision on their proposed controls on vitamin B6. [54810]

Mr. Nick Brown: The Government have now completed their consideration of the responses to the consultation exercise on the proposed controls on dietary supplements containing vitamin B6. Copies of the responses received have been deposited in the Library. We have also deposited copies of the responses received to the consultation by the Medicines Control Agency on its parallel proposals on controls on licensed medicines containing vitamin B6.

The Government have taken full account of the Agriculture Select Committee's report on vitamin B6 and have made their response today. (The decision on when and how this is published is a matter for the Committee).

The Government's assessment of the science remains that of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) and our advice to the public will continue to reflect this. However, we accept that there is a case for delaying any action on vitamin B6 until the new Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals has completed its consideration of the wider issue of the principles on which controls for ensuring the safety of vitamin and mineral supplements sold under food law can be based. This should take between eighteen months and two years. In view of this we have concluded that a decision on legislation on the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements should be deferred until after the Expert Group has produced its report.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she intends to reply to the letters to her dated 2 April, 15 May and 16 June from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mrs. H. Nasrin, 58 Clitheroe Road. [51463]

Mr. Denham: The delay in responding to my right hon. Friend's letters was very much regretted. Unfortunately, the Department did not receive a copy of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's reply to the letter regarding Mrs. Nasrin until 16 July 1998.

Mrs. Nasrin's case is a complex one. However, I hope to let my right hon. Friend have a full reply as soon as our investigations are complete.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Spelthorne, dated 16 May, concerning Mr. R. A. Weedon of Ashford, Middlesex, reference 3/3642/14. [53796]

Mr. Denham: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 28 July.

Pensioners (Fuel Bills)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her oral statement of 17 July 1998, Official Report, columns 703–05, if she will estimate the respective contributions of (a) price reductions, (b) VAT reductions, (c) winter fuel payments and (d) other changes to the average lowering of pension fuel bills for single and for married pensioners (i) on income support and (ii) not on income support. [52034]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table. Accurate consumption data are not available by type of pensioner.

Average fuel bill and estimated possible savings

Fuel bill (combined electricity and gas)	614.50
Price and competition reductions	62.50
VAT reductions	17.00
Winter Fuel Payments (Income Support (IS))	50.00
Winter Fuel Payments (non-IS)	20.00
Total savings—Income Support	129.50
Total savings—non-Income Support	99.50

Notes:

1. Bills are based on average standard credit and VAT rates in force on 1 April of the financial year
2. Bills are calculated on standard consumption of 3,300 kWh for electricity and 18,000 kWh for gas
3. Price reductions include the new tariffs introduced by electricity companies in April 1998 as part of the new two year price restraints and new British Gas tariffs announced in January 1998
4. Price reductions include an estimate of a typical saving that would accrue to customers switching supplier for the 1998–99 financial year. Estimates of savings from switching supplier will vary case by case depending on when and to which supplier someone switches to
5. All figures are rounded to the nearest 50p

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those of working age have never paid national insurance contributions. [52523]

Mr. Denham: The working age population is some 35,036,000. Departmental estimates show that 34,433,000 people, aged between 16 and state pension age in 1995/96, paid National Insurance contributions at some time between 1975/76 and 1995/96. However, an unknown number of these people are no longer included in the working population, because they have left the country.

For years before 1975/76 it is not possible to distinguish between contributions which were paid and those which were credited.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will evaluate the cost to her Department arising from violence within families; and if she will make a statement. [52442]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on Wednesday 29 July 1998, Official Report, column 258.

Common Minimum Pension Age

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the net public expenditure cost for introducing a common minimum pension age of 60 years. [52912]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to him on 1 June 1998, Official Report, column 111.

Welfare Provision

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what role he intends for approved welfare providers in his plans for welfare reform; and if he will make a statement on their relationship to pension providers. [53251]

Mr. Denham: The Welfare Reform Green Paper, "New ambitions for our country: A New Contract for Welfare", proposed that the public and private sectors should work in partnership to make welfare provision. Such private-public partnerships are one of a range of possibilities currently being considered.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53062]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is in the table.

Number of men and women employed by the department aged over 60 years on 1 January 1998

Business Unit	Male	Female
Benefits Agency	515	605
Contributions Agency	74	63
Child Support Agency	40	28
War Pensions Agency	17	18
ITSA	10	3
ISBs	14	8
DSS HQ	8	10
Total	678	735
Departmental Total	1,413

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53043]

Mr. Denham: There are no staff currently employed within the Department who have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. However, the Permanent Secretary has discretion to retain staff beyond their 60th birthday, if they remain fully efficient and there is a need for their services.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the task forces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by his Department since 1 May 1997, indicating in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers, (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53284]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is as follows:

Pension Provision Group

(a) To provide an independent analysis of the current state of pension provision in the United Kingdom and of likely future trends.

(b) Membership is drawn from pensions experts from outside the Government who come from a wide range of backgrounds and interests.

(c) None

(d) None

(e) None

Pensions Education Working Group

(a) To advise on the development of a longer term pensions awareness strategy; to establish and evaluate the telephone helpline experiment; work to develop free-standing initiatives and partnerships to implement their recommendations; to consider how to give consumers basic and comparable information in plain English on pension schemes and products.

(b) Representatives from the pensions industry, employer and employee organisations, consumer organisations, regulatory authorities and officials from various Government departments.

(c) None

(d) None

(e) None

Pension Sharing Consultation Panel

(a) To enable representatives from the key interest groups to work together with the Government to review proposals for the detailed operation of the policy.

(b) Representatives of the pensions industry, family lawyers, groups representing divorcing couples and officials from various Government Departments.

(c) None

(d) None

Benefits

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what factors underlay his decision to withdraw the offer of extra subsidy to local authorities to detect housing benefit fraud; [53277]

(2) if he will require retrospective introduction of weekly benefit savings for the 1997–98 financial year; [53274]

(3) what reasons subsidy to local authorities will be lost if housing benefit (a) ceases and (b) is reduced before a designated fraud officer becomes involved; [53272]

(4) what incentive he will provide for local authorities to detect housing benefit fraud; [53273]

(5) when he will reply to the Local Government Association representations on the Draft Weekly Benefit Savings Subsidy Guide. [53267]

Mr. Denham: This Government are committed to taking tough action against all benefit fraud including Housing Benefit. Significant incentives for local authorities to detect Housing Benefit fraud are already in place. A financial incentive scheme has been in operation since 1993 which rewards local authorities for good performance in detecting benefit fraud. Payments of additional subsidy to local authorities to reward them for their anti-fraud work has risen year on year (£5.9m in 1993–94 to £65.6m in 1997–98).

Recent National Audit Office and Audit Commission reports questioned the interpretation of the Subsidy Order by some local authorities when claiming additional subsidy for anti-fraud work. We have therefore made the criteria explicit in the 1998 Subsidy Order. To qualify for this additional subsidy authorities must show that benefit was reduced or stopped following investigation by a designated fraud officer. In each case they must show that benefit has been overpaid as a result of fraud or, in a case where benefit has not been put into payment, an attempt was made to claim fraudulently and this was prevented by their action.

The Department is still awaiting comments from the Local Government Association on the draft instructions on claiming weekly benefit savings. When received they will be considered and a reply issued as soon as possible. We have, however, already had the opportunity to consider some of the initial comments made by the Local Government Association and, as a result of this, the strengthened criteria for claiming fraud weekly benefit savings will not now be retrospective.

Benefit Fraud

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons housing benefit claims are to be classed as fraudulent based on the balance of probabilities. [53275]

Mr. Denham: This test has been the agreed basis for awarding additional subsidy payments since the anti-fraud incentive scheme was introduced in 1993. The criminal test would be unduly onerous for local authorities.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will permit local authority housing benefit officers to assess the possibility of malicious allegations before referring housing benefit fraud allegations to fraud teams. [53268]

Mr. Denham: Local authority housing officers are already free to do so.

Weekly Benefit Savings

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if weekly benefit savings will be made available to local authorities whose tenants abandon properties. [53269]

Mr. Denham: It would not be appropriate to give local authorities additional subsidy for normal housing benefit administration activities.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will allow local authorities to secure abandoned properties to prevent vandalism before a fraud team investigates and for the weekly benefit saving to be protected until the investigation is concluded. [53270]

Mr. Denham: In these circumstances additional subsidy related to weekly benefit savings could be paid if, as a result of a fraud investigation, fraud was discovered and a suspended Housing Benefit claim was stopped.

Non Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c) (ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [53858]

Mr. Denham: Of the 15 non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) sponsored by the Department of Social Security on 1 May 1997 (a) none have been disbanded; (b) six will be disbanded during the second half of 1999; (c) none have had their functions transferred; (d) none have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role; and (e) 15 have been unchanged. Details of all other NDPBs in existence on 1 May 1997 sponsored by this Department are listed in "Public Bodies 1997".

No new NDPBs have been established since 1 May 1997 and this Department is currently responsible for 15 NDPBs.

The Government are committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective. Many of the new NDPBs established since 1 May will be essential in helping the Government deliver their Manifesto commitments.

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the estimated expenditure of the £178 million budget for the New Deal for Disabled People which is not accounted for by funding of (a) innovative schemes and (b) personal advisers. [53891]

Mr. Denham: The New Deal for Disabled People is being funded with £195 million from the Windfall Tax, which will be used over the lifetime of the current Parliament. £5 million will fund a number of Innovative Schemes which will test new ways of helping disabled people into work, and the result of the first tranche of bids was announced on 16 July. A further £17 million (£5 million in 1998–99, and a further £12 million in 1999–2000) will be used to pilot a new Personal Adviser service for disabled people, initially in 12 areas, offering advice and support on an individual basis to disabled people who want to move towards work. Some funds will be made available for research and evaluation of the New Deal, and for publicity and information. Decisions about how the rest of the money will be spent will be made in the light of information provided by the Innovative Schemes and the Personal Adviser pilots.

Income Support

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Scotland do not claim the income support to which they are entitled; and how many of those do not receive benefit payments to which they are entitled of between (a) £1 and £10, (b) £10 to £20, (c) £20 to £30, (d) £30 to £40, (e) £40 to £50 and (f) £50 and over. [53707]

Mr. Denham: There are estimated to be around 100,000 pensioners in Scotland who do not claim the Income Support to which they are entitled. Information on the range of the amounts unclaimed by numbers of pensioners not claiming is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Number of pensioners entitled to but not claiming income support in Scotland in 1995–96 by amount unclaimed

Amount unclaimed	Number of pensioners
£0-£9.99	50,000
£10-£19.99	30,000
£20 or more	20,000
Total	100,000

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten thousand. The estimates are based on the 1995–96 Family Resources Survey and are almost certainly subject to some degree of error The highlighted estimates are based on particularly small sample sizes and should be treated with some caution
2. It has not been possible to provide the figures with the breakdowns requested because the sample sizes are too small
3. A pensioner, for Income Support purposes, is a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple (married or unmarried) where at least one of them is aged 60 or over

Lone Parents

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents in Scotland had their benefit reduced as a result of the removal of the lone parent premium and lone parent rate of child benefit. [53738]

Mr. Denham: Recipients of the lone parent rates of family premium and child benefit at the date of removal will continue to receive the higher rates and will therefore suffer no reduction in benefit. There will be no cash losers. The estimate of the number of lone parents in Scotland at the end of 1998–99 who will have a lower level of benefit as a result of the changes is in the table.

Benefit	Caseloads end 1998–99
Income support	26,000
Housing benefit	5,000
Council tax benefit	4,000
Child benefit	9,000

Note:

1. Caseloads have been rounded to the nearest 1,000. Caseloads for the individual benefits cannot be added together because some cases will be affected by the changes to more than one benefit
2. Caseloads show the situation at the end of 1998–99. They do not include cases who have moved onto benefit after the changes but who have flowed off benefit before the end of 1998–99

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the extension of the winter fuel payment scheme beyond next winter will include separate (a) £10, (b) £20 and (c) £50 payments per pensioner household depending on the rules of entitlement; and what will be the administration cost per payment. [53710]

Mr. Denham: Forming part of the £2.5 billion pensions package announced on 17 July 1998 Official Report, Column 704, a further £0.5 billion has been allocated to extend the Winter Fuel payments scheme beyond next winter. From the winter of 1999–2000 all eligible pensioner households will receive £20.

The precise details of the extended scheme have yet to be determined, but it is expected to be similar to the existing provision which provides £20 to every eligible pensioner household not receiving Income Support. Under the existing provision, those who live alone, those who are the only eligible pensioner in a household, or are without accommodation receive a payment of £20. Otherwise, each eligible person receives a payment of £10, including each person in a couple where they are both entitled to a payment.

From April 1999, pensioners receiving Income Support will receive increased amounts of weekly benefit—three times the increase they would have got under the usual Income Support uprating rules. In addition, some pensioners with incomes at, or just slightly above, the current levels of Income Support will become entitled to Income Support.

We will also be introducing for the first time, a new delivery system to begin to help the estimated one million pensioners currently missing out on extra benefit they are entitled to.

Until the precise details of the Winter Fuel payment provision beyond next winter are determined and decisions are taken on the most appropriate and cost-effective delivery mechanisms it is not possible to establish the administration costs of each payment made.

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to announce the qualifying week for next winter's fuel payments; and when these payments will be made. [54886]

Mr. Denham: Amending regulations are presently being printed and should be laid before Parliament shortly.

We consider it important that pensioners should receive their Winter Fuel Payment in time to help towards the heaviest fuel bill when it arrives. Priority will also be given to the poorest.

Any pensioner receiving one of the qualifying benefits during the week beginning 9 November 1998 will be entitled to a payment. Using this qualifying week should enable payments of £50 to be made to the estimated 1.5 million eligible pensioners receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance by the end of November and payments of £20 or £10 to the remaining 8.3 million eligible pensioners during January 1999.

The list of qualifying benefits has been extended to include all of the Industrial Injuries Benefits. This change aims to ensure everyone over state pension age receiving a Social Security benefit is entitled to a payment.

As announced by the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Camberwell and Peckham (Ms Horman), Winter Fuel Payments will continue beyond next winter, with each eligible pensioner household getting £20.

Pensioners on Income Support will also benefit from an above inflation increase, from April 1999, which will ensure they have a minimum income of at least £75.50 per week for a single person. Couples and older pensioners will receive more.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53351]

Mr. Denham: The Department of Social Security and its executive Agencies are individually responsible for preparation of a Welsh Language Scheme when requested by the Welsh Language Board.

The present position is summarised in the table.

Welsh Language Schemes

Pensioners (Incomes)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) single pensioners, (b) pensioner couples, (c) adults and (d) lone parents in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK as a whole have an income less than half of average income. [54387]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Including the self-employed, the numbers of people living in households with incomes below half the Great Britain average are:

Thousand

	Before housing costs		After housing costs
	Great Britain	Scotland	Great Britain	Scotland
Single pensioners	960	80	1,280	110
Pensioner couples	1,160	(100)	1,320	(110)
Adults	6,770	610	9,240	750
Lone parents	1,280	(190)	2,490	250

Source:
Households Below Average Income (HBAI)

Excluding the self-employed, the numbers of people living in households with incomes below half the Great Britain average, are:

Thousand

	Before housing costs		After housing costs
	Great Britain	Scotland	Great Britain	Scotland
Single pensioners	880	(80)	1,050	(80)
Pensioner couples	1,020	(100)	1,170	(100)
Adults	5,390	510	7,600	630
Lone parents	1,050	(160)	2,310	240

Notes:
1. The data come from the Department's Households Below Average Income (HBAI) series, based on the Family Resources Survey (FRS) and covering Great Britain.
2. Figures are for 1995–96, the latest year for which data are available.
3. Figures in brackets relate to fewer than 100 families in the sample. Numbers are given to the nearest 10,000 but because they come from a sample survey they are not accurate to this degree. All results are subject to sampling error.
4. The income measure used is weekly net (disposable) equivalised income. The definition of income used follows that in the published HBAI series for FRS based results. The figures are given both before and after housing costs in line with usual HBAI practice. The figures may be sensitive to the choice of equivalence scale used.
5. The income measures for the self-employed are inherently uncertain. For this reason, results are presented both including and excluding the self-employed.
6. For all figures, half the Great Britain national average income has been used as a benchmark. Separate averages were used for the including and excluding self-employed measures.
7. A single pensioner is defined as a single adult of state pension age or over and a pensioner couple is defined as a couple, where the man is of state pension age or over.
8. The tables show the numbers of people in each cell. This means that, for example, 1,160,000 people living in pensioner couples, or 580,000 pensioner couples, in Great Britain have incomes less than half the national average before housing costs.

Persistent Inquirers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of his Department's agencies have procedures to identify persistent inquirers for information. [53956]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Welfare Reform, on 19 May 1998, Official Report, column 358.

Overseas Pensions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of the current exchange rate on overseas pensions. [54401]

Mr. Denham: Pensions and Overseas Benefits Directorate (POD) currently pays in excess of 800,000 customers in around 200 countries worldwide.

Various methods of payment are used to pay pensions abroad. Customers in 30 countries are paid by Credit Transfer in sterling. This is converted to local currency and paid directly to customers' bank accounts. Pensioners are offered a favourable rate of exchange due to the bulk buying of currency. They are not charged for this service.

Pensioners who do not receive their benefit by this method are paid in sterling and they are responsible for converting their payments to local currency.

The exchange rate is variable and subject to fluctuation. There are no provisions in legislation to allow adjustments to be made when variations occur between sterling and foreign currencies. POD monitors the exchange rates to ensure that customers continually receive a preferential rate when paid by Credit Transfer.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he is making for introducing the new linking rule for incapacity benefits and abolishing the 16 hour restriction on unpaid voluntary work. [54884]

Mr. Denham: The Government have a fourfold strategy for helping disabled people who want to work. We are providing the active help and encouragement people with disabilities need to move into work under the New Deal for Disabled People; removing obstacles to work from the benefits system; making sure that work pays; and promoting radical change in the workplace to ensure equality and opportunity.

We intend that the regulations introducing the new 52 week linking rule, and removing the 16 hour restriction on unpaid voluntary work, will be made in late August or early September, and will come into force from 5 October 1998 as announced in the Budget and our Green Paper "New ambitions for our country: A New Contract For Welfare" (Cm 3805). These regulations will help to remove some of the risks disabled people face from a return to work and reclaiming benefit.

The new linking rule will provide a period of 52 weeks following a return to work in which periods of entitlement to benefit on the grounds of incapacity can be linked. The rule will apply to people who leave benefit voluntarily having been incapable of work for at least 28 weeks.

The linking rule will protect a person's access to a number of the longer-term benefit rates that are payable to people who are incapable of work—for example: the short-term (higher) and long-term rates of incapacity benefit; Severe Disablement Allowance; access to the Disability Premium payable in Income Support/Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit; and Income Support mortgage interest payments. The rules will also give protection to Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance claimants who have a partner who leaves an incapacity benefit (or NI credits awarded on grounds of incapacity) to return to work and whose benefit ceases as a consequence. In addition transitional protection in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit will also be protected for those who reclaim in the 52 week period.

This offers reassurance that if disabled people make the move from benefits into work and reclaim benefit they will not have to requalify for higher rates of benefits payable on grounds of incapacity, as they do now.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated cost to his Department of raising the earnings disregard for people on long-term incapacity benefit to (a) £20 and (b) £25. [53817]

Mr. Denham: There is no current earnings disregard for people receiving Incapacity Benefit. Recipients cannot normally do any work unless it qualifies under special rules permitting a certain amount of therapeutic or voluntary work. The Government announced in the Green Paper "New Ambitions For Our Country: A New Contract For Welfare" proposals to pilot changes to benefits to remove barriers faced by disabled people who want to work. The proposals included allowing people receiving Incapacity Benefit to do a small amount of paid work, subject to a weekly limit of £15, although the precise level has still to be finalised. The expenditure consequences of such a change will depend on the effect it has on the numbers of people leaving or staying on benefit. Information on which to base an estimate is not currently available, but will be provided by the pilots.

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52706]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 July 1998]: The term research covers a wide range of activities from scientific and engineering research through to consultancies and public opinion surveys. The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those who have accompanied (i) him or his predecessor and (ii) his departmental Ministers on overseas visits since 1 January indicating (a) the venue of the visit, (b) the purpose of the visit, (c) the names of those involved, (d) the job of those involved, (e) the reasons why they were included in the visit and (f) the cost to public funds. [53844]

Mr. Denham: All overseas visits by Ministers are conducted in accordance with the principles set out in the Ministerial Code. Information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I can confirm that since 1 January 1998 Ministers in this Department have been accompanied on the following overseas visits:

Minister	Date	Place visited	Purpose	Accompanied by
Frank Field	February 1998	Athens	Pensions seminar	Private Secretary
Keith Bradley	February 1998	Vienna	Minister for Labour, Health and Social Affairs	Private Secretary and one official
Joan Ruddock	March 1998	New York	Commission of the Status of Women	Private Secretary
Keith Bradley	March 1998	USA	Welfare to work projects	Private Secretary and one official

Minister	Date	Place visited	Purpose	Accompanied by
Frank Field	April 1998	Paris	Post Office	Private Secretary
Keith Bradley	April 1998	Paris	Social Partners	Private Secretary and two officials
Frank Field	June 1998	Stockholm	Centre for Business and Policy Studies	Private Secretary
Frank Field	June 1998	Paris	OECD	Private Secretary

The total costs incurred by the Department for this period are £26,000.

SCOTLAND

Sheep Annual Premium Scheme

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the likely impact of new regulations and attendant financial penalties in respect of the sheep annual premium scheme and hill livestock compensatory allowances on (a) future percentage lambing yields and (b) future stock improvement progress; and if he will make a statement. [51442]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 21 July 1998]: The legislation governing Sheep Annual Premium and Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances is longstanding. Enforcement of that legislation should not impact on general flock health or lambing percentages.

Following recent representations by the Government, the European Commission has accepted our proposals aimed at reducing the frequency with which sheep on common grazings need to be gathered for the purpose of subsidy inspection.

New Deal

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people his Department is committed to employing during 1998 under (a) the subsidised job option and (b) the unsubsidised job option of the New Deal programme. [52590]

Mr. Dewar: The Scottish Office has developed New Deal proposals to employ 50 people under the subsidised job option. We are aiming to fill these positions as soon as possible, but whether all 50 posts will be filled during 1998 depends on the number of eligible and suitable candidates identified by the Employment Service. No specific targets have been set for the numbers to be recruited under the unsubsidised option. We will of course consider eligible applicants, if they are suitable for our vacancies.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken to reduce the length of time taken over planning inquiries for (a) wind farms and (b) hydro-power projects; and if he will make a statement. [52445]

Mr. Macdonald: A new regulatory and best practice framework for planning inquiries for all types of development was introduced last year. This should reduce the overall time taken to determine proposals for wind farms and hydro-power projects which go to inquiry. Scottish Office officials are currently working jointly on guidance for developers for consultation with Scottish Natural Heritage and other interested parties.

Fish Farm Discharges

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on possible funding for the Aberdeen Marine Laboratory proposed investigation over the effects of fish farm discharges on sea lochs. [52550]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 27 July 1998]: The Marine Laboratory has a programme of research associated with the impact of fish farming. It is also a potential participant in a possible new project to monitor the environmental impact of sea lice treatments. This inter-departmental project, if approved, will be subject to public tender.

Women's Aid

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue guidance to local authorities on support for services provided by Women's Aid. [52794]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 28 July 1998]: It is for local authorities to decide whether to support such services in their area. The proposed Scottish Partnership on Domestic Violence—which will include local government representation—will be expected to recommend minimum standards of service, to be implemented as resources allow, for women experiencing domestic violence. This should help encourage consistent service delivery throughout Scotland.

NHS Efficiency Savings

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates his Department has made of (a) the savings accruing from the cancellation of the eighth wave of GP fundholding and (b) other NHS efficiency savings since 1 May 1997. [53222]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 29 July 1998]: There were no applications for entry to the Standard Fundholding Scheme outstanding at 1 May 1997 and, therefore, no savings were planned or made in respect of the Scheme. The Government intend to bring forward legislation which, subject to Parliamentary approval, will abolish GP Fundholding from 1 April 1999.

The estimated savings from reducing bureaucracy are set out in the table.

Year	£ million
1997–98	10
1998–99	10
1999–2000	20

New Electoral Systems

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department will be spending on its campaign to educate and inform electors in Scotland on the new electoral system to be used in the elections for their assembly. [53685]

Mr. McLeish: The Government are considering what publicity arrangements are needed to inform electors of the new voting system for the Scottish Parliament. It is not possible at this stage to provide details of these arrangements or estimated costs.

Civil Marriages

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the results of the consultation undertaken by the Registrar General on civil marriages outwith registration offices; and if he will make a statement. [54621]

Mr. McLeish: I am placing a copy of the results of the consultation in the Library. Widespread support was expressed for the idea of extending the choice of couples to have civil marriages other than in local registration offices. The responses emphasised the need to retain the seemliness and dignity of the marriage ceremony. A number of useful comments were made about civil marriage venues which will aid the drafting of appropriate statutory provisions and of practical guidance to the registration service. The Government would wish to see the proposals carried forward, and hope that the Scottish Parliament will consider enactment of appropriate legislation.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the task forces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by his Department since 1 May 1997, indicating in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers, (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53281]

Mr. Dewar: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and arrange for a copy of the letter to be placed in the House Library.

Telephone Interceptions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors underlie the number of telephone interceptions sanctioned by him and his predecessors since 1985. [53431]

Mr. McLeish: I refer my hon. Friend to the latest report of the Interception Commissioner (Cm 4001) in which he states:

"The great majority of warrants issued by both Secretaries of State [the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland] are for the prevention or detection of serious crime.

Serious crime is defined in Section 10(3) of the Act as an offence involving the use of violence or resulting in substantial financial gain or involving a large number of persons in pursuit of a common purpose, or alternatively as an offence for which a person who has attained the age of 21 and has no previous convictions could reasonably be expected to be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 3 years or more. All of the serious crime warrants which I have examined have bene concerned with offences which would rank as serious crime by any reckoning . . . All have comfortably passed the 3 years imprisonment test . . .

I am satisfied that the substantial increase in interception is due to the continuing incidence of large scale crime coupled with the greater facilities now available to the various agencies. The strict criteria laid down by the Act continue to be applied".

Pig Industry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the pig industry; what steps he is taking to address the concerns of the industry; and if he will make a statement. [53451]

Mr. Macdonald: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State recently met representatives of the Scottish Pig Industry to discuss the problems which the industry is facing at present. These problems essentially stem from over supply on the European market due to substantial expansion—including vigorous expansion in Scotland—when prices were strong. Contraction in the industry as a whole is inevitable and restructuring will be necessary. My noble Friend has commissioned a study into the Scottish industry which should assist the restructuring process. He has also called on the public, on retailers and caterers to back farm assured pigmeat and pigmeat products.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Buildings (Asbestos)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what sums from the money allocated to his Department following the Comprehensive Spending Review will be used to remove asbestos from school buildings. [51864]

Ms Estelle Morris: The removal of asbestos from school buildings is already regarded as a high priority in the allocation of capital funding for schools.

It will remain the responsibility of LEAs to determine their priorities for capital works following the Comprehensive Spending Review. The Government will continue to treat as high priority applications for funding where asbestos removal is necessary for health and safety reasons.

Playing Fields

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of playing fields or parts of playing fields, the total acreage sold and the total revenues raised in each year since 1988. [51942]

Ms Estelle Morris: My Department does not collect this information.

School Swimming Pools

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the total number of maintained schools with swimming pool facilities in use in each year since 1988; [51944]

(2) what was the total number of maintained schools with swimming pool facilities in each year since 1988. [51943]

Ms Estelle Morris: My Department does not collect this information.

Cycling

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to the Government's announcement of 20 July 1998, Official Report, columns 784–88, on reasons to encourage cycling, when he will order the removal of the signs around his Department which forbid the leaving of bicycles attached to railings. [51934]

Mr. Mudie: There are signs on the railings at the perimeter of Sanctuary Buildings which state that "Bicycles left chained to these railings will in future be removed". These signs will not be removed as we need to continue to meet Cabinet Office Security guidance.

Apart from the security risk, bicycles chained outside Sanctuary Buildings would create a Health and Safety issue as the pavement is narrow and they would constitute a hazard.

However, the Department does provide 65 secure cycle parking spaces for its staff in London; these are adequate for current needs.

Private Schools

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children in England he estimates are currently taught in private schools. [52088]

Ms Estelle Morris: Provisional figures show that 572,000 pupils were being taught in Independent schools in England in January 1998.

GEST Funding

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what savings have resulted from the change to 60:40 GEST funding to the Standards Fund for Cumbria. [52209]

Ms Estelle Morris: In 1997–98 Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) supported education expenditure of £3,327,500 in Cumbria at a grant rate of mainly 60 per cent. The expenditure to be supported in Cumbria by The Standards Fund in 1998–99 is £5,659,512, at a grant rate of mainly 50 per cent. The 50 per cent. funding reflects the Government's commitment to raise standards in partnership with Local Education Authorities.

Infant Class Sizes

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria he has set to judge the impact on educational standards of reducing infant class sizes to 30; and if he will publish these. [52564]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 July 1998]: We believe that there is already substantial evidence that smaller infant class sizes will improve standards of education in schools and that is why we have promised that by September 2001 at the latest, no 5, 6 or 7 year old will be in an infant class of more than 30 pupils.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library the responses received by his Department as a result of the consultation on draft regulations on limiting infant class sizes. [52567]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 July 1998]: We are currently considering the responses to our consultation on the draft class size regulations and guidance. We will place a summary of the comments we received in the Library of the House once we have completed our analysis.

Church Schools

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will commission an independent evaluation into the (a) effectiveness and (b) equity of admissions procedures to Church schools with voluntary-aided status. [52406]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 July 1998]: A new framework for admissions will be established under provisions in the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, underpinned by a new statutory Code of Practice. For the first time all admission authorities—including the governing bodies of voluntary-aided schools—will be required annually to consult locally before determining their admission arrangements. Objections to those arrangements may be referred to an adjudicator, and, where they relate to religious or denominational criteria, to the Secretary of State. The decision of the Secretary of State or the adjudicator will be binding. We shall be evaluating the impact of the new admission framework once it is operating.

Class Sizes (Stoke-on-Trent)

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the pupil-teacher ratio in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) at Key Stage One in Stoke-on-Trent in each of the last five years; [53236]

(2) what was the average class size (a) in primary schools and (b) at Key Stage One in Stoke-on-Trent in each of the last five years. [53237]

Ms Estelle Morris: The available information is shown in the tables.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the review of SSA and area cost adjustment for education under review; and when he proposes to implement changes arising from the review. [53239]

Ms Estelle Morris: We are in the middle of a review of the SSA formula, including the area cost adjustment. We will not take final decisions on the SSA methodology for 1999–2000 until the autumn, after we have considered the views of local government as a whole.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the education standard spending assessment for those local authorities which achieved unitary status in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [53253]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table sets out the education SSA for 1998–99 for those local authorities which achieved unitary status in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997.

School Closures

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out the procedures to be followed by a local education authority in promoting the temporary closure of a maintained school. [52996]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 28 July 1998]: Where a local education authority seeks to close a school maintained by it, it is required to published statutory proposals, having consulted those it considers to be appropriate in the light of guidance published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Statutory proposals must also be published to establish a new school, whether or not this is in the premises of a closed school. If the school proposed to be established is a voluntary school, the proposals would need to be published by the promoters of that school. Under current legislation, proposals affecting voluntary schools fall to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for decision.

Teaching Vacancies

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, for each local education authority, the number of applications received, on average, for each (a) headship and (b) teacher vacancy, during 1996–97 and 1997–98. [53567]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This information is not collected centrally.

Special Schools

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effect on children's educational achievement of being placed in a special school against (a) their and (b) their family's wishes. [53381]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None: the Education Act 1996 provides that, subject to certain conditions, children with statements of special educational needs (SEN) should be educated in a mainstream school provided that is what their parents wish. Parents have a right of appeal to the independent SEN Tribunal if they are dissatisfied with a local education authority's (LEA's) decision in this respect. The Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of SEN encourages LEAs and others to take account of views of children themselves wherever practicable.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many local education authorities in England have a special school catering for the age range five to 16 years for pupils with profound and multiple learning difficulties and severe learning difficulties and provision for pupils 16 to 19 years with PMLD which (a) has more than 150 pupils on roll and (b) has more than 175 pupils on roll. [53554]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information available to the Department indicates that 14 local education authorities have special schools with more than 150 pupils which cater for at least ages five to 18 and for pupils with severe learning difficulties. Nine LEAs have such schools with more than 175 pupils.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c) (ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [53863]

Mr. Mudie: Of the non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) in existence on 1 May 1997:

(a) the NDPB that has been simply disbanded is the Supported Employment Consultative Group;

(b) the Funding Agency for Schools will cease funding activities in the next 12 months, and will be disbanded late 1999;

(c)(i) the functions of the now-disbanded National Advisory Council for the Employment of People with Disabilities have been transferred to the National Disability Council. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications and the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority have been merged to form the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. The Race Relations Employment Advisory Group has been disbanded, and is intended to be shortly replaced by the Race Relations Education and Employment Forum;

(c)(ii) No functions have been transferred to a democratically elected body;

(d) the Education Assets Board is being renamed as the Education Transfer Council and the National Council for Educational Technology has been renamed as the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency;

(e) unchanged NDPBs not mentioned above are the Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research, the Construction Industry Training Board, the Engineering Construction Industry Training Board, the Equal Opportunities Commission, the Further Education Funding Council, the Higher Education Funding Council for England, Investors in People UK, Remploy Ltd., Student Loans Company, Teacher Training Agency, Registered Inspectors Appeals Tribunal and Special Educational Needs Tribunal.

New non-departmental public bodies established since 1 May 1997 are the Disability Rights Task Force, New Deal Task Force and Skills Task Force.

My Department is responsible for 20 non-departmental public bodies.

The Government are committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective. Many of the new NDPBs established since 1 May will be essential in helping the Government deliver their Manifesto commitments.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53051]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As at 1 January 1998, 31 men and 17 women aged 60 and over were employed by the Department. In the case of the Employment Service, figures are not readily available from Personnel Systems for 1 January, but can be provided from data collected at 10 March 1998. At this point, some 72 men and 186 women aged 60 years and over were employed by the Agency.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53052]

Mr. Mudie: Where a clear business need for any member of the Department or its Agencies to continue beyond age 60 exists, and providing that individual meets the necessary criteria for fitness and effectiveness, that member of staff may be enabled to continue beyond their 60th birthday. Only members of the Senior Civil Service (SCS) have contracts of employment which provide specifically for them to retire at 60 years of age, but 60 is also the normal minimum retirement age for all members of the Department and its Agencies. The terms and conditions of all members of the Department and its Agencies thus provide for staff to retire after their 60th birthday—in the case of the Senior Civil Service, only with the agreement of their Permanent Head of Department.

Total numbers of Senior Civil Service members in the Department are (a) 79 men and (b) 22 women. In the Employment Service, there are (a) 25 men and (b) 7 women members of the SCS. [There are also (a) 10 men and (b) 1 woman SCS members in Government Offices.]

Total numbers of staff in the Department (including the Senior Civil Service and Government Offices) are (a) 1,945 men and (b) 2,125 women; and in the Employment Service, (a) 9,541 men and (b) 23,987 women.

Access Funds

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what resources will be available for access funds for students in further and higher education institutions in England in 1998–99; and when he proposes to issue new guidance on the use of the funds. [54812]

Mr. Mudie: The Government are committed to widening participation and improving access to higher education. We are determined that students should have the support they need to take up or stay on courses of higher education. We are making available £56 million through the Access Funds for students in further and higher education in England for the academic year 1998–99. This includes £3 million (£2m in 1998–99 financial year) which we are providing to help remit the fees of part-time under-graduate students who lose their jobs after their course has started.

The total sum is being allocated between the two Funding Councils for England as shown. The allocations take account of adjustments between the higher education access fund and the further education access fund to help part-time higher education students who are studying at further education institutions.

	£ million
Higher Education Funding Council for England:	45.76
of which: Undergraduate fund	39.44
Postgraduate fund	5.50
Further education fund	0.82
Further Education Funding Council:	10.24
Total	56.00

Disability Discrimination Act

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he proposes to consult further on provisions in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [54814]

Ms Hodge: The National Disability Council and the Government have today launched a joint consultation exercise on the duties under Part III of the Act to be implemented in October 1999. The duties will require service providers to make reasonable adjustments to enable disabled people to make use of their goods, facilities and services. The Council is consulting on its draft proposals for a Code of Practice and the Government on proposals for supporting regulations and draft regulatory impact assessment (an estimate of the costs and benefits of the new provisions).

The Government are also consulting on a draft regulatory impact assessment and a draft Code of Practice concerned with the duties on trade organisations under Part II of the Act to make reasonable adjustments for their disabled members and applicants for membership. These duties will also be implemented in October 1999.

Both consultations will end on 13 November 1998.

Some of the documents in the consultation packages bear the name of my predecessor. We have decided not to reprint these documents as this would cut into the time available for consultation and entail an additional call on public funds.

Copies of both consultation packages will be placed in the Libraries.

Educational Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will introduce legislation to allow the pilot schemes for educational maintenance allowances to proceed; [53611]

(2) if families of children involved in the pilot schemes for educational maintenance allowances will lose their entitlement to child benefit; [53612]

(3) what will be the cost to public funds of the pilot schemes for the educational maintenance allowance; [53613]

(4) which areas he proposes to use as pilot areas for the educational maintenance allowance; [53614]

(5) when he proposes to start the pilot schemes for the educational maintenance allowance; [53615]

(6) what will be the rate of the educational maintenance allowance. [53616]

Mr. Mudie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 28 July 1998, Official Report, column 141. The pilots are planned to start in September 1999.

Teachers' Pay

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of the number of advanced skills teachers to be appointed in the current year who will be paid at the top rate of £40,000. [53895]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is for governing bodies to determine the five point range on the Advanced Skills Teacher pay spine on which to place any ASTs employed in their schools. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not made any estimate of the cost of the number to be appointed in the current year who will be paid at the highest point on the pay spine.

Teacher Recruitment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to ensure the recruitment of more teachers with particular reference to Greater London. [53594]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The recruitment of sufficient numbers of well-trained teachers is a key challenge facing this Government and the education service. It is the contribution of high-quality, committed and motivated teachers that will help us drive up standards of achievement in schools.

The proposals we set out last week for a major Green Paper on the future of the teaching profession and the additional funding announced under the Comprehensive Spending Review, 14 July 1998, Official Report, columns 187–94, will boost the status of the profession and encourage recruitment. Our reply to the report of the Select Committee for Education inquiry, published in January, set out the measures we are taking to encourage more good candidates to enter teaching. We are continuing to consider options further to increase teacher recruitment and to address the particular need for an adequate supply of teachers in London. The Teacher Training Agency continues also to raise the profile of teaching and is working with key partners in the region to address the particular needs of London.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53355]

Mr. Mudie: The Welsh Language Board formally invited this Department to produce a Welsh Language Scheme on 4 December 1996. The Department offered a draft Scheme to the Board for comment in August 1997. Since then, officials and the Board have held a number of consultations on the contents of the Scheme. I hope the Board will shortly confirm that it has no further suggestions to amend the draft. This Department can then consult the public; that is necessary before formal submission to the Board.

Primary Schools (Norfolk)

Dr. George Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the additional costs incurred by Norfolk County Council in supporting an above average number of small primary schools (a) in total and (b) per pupil in the primary sector. [53718]

Ms Estelle Morris: No. It is not possible to carry out such a calculation on a satisfactory basis since it would involve making unsupported assumptions about the classification of schools as "small" and the funding distribution which might be adopted by the LEA in different circumstances. There is also no reliable way of estimating the offsetting additional costs which might be incurred on transport if the pattern of schools was different.

School Inspectors

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many current school inspectors were former head teachers; [53384]

(2) what are the criteria for the appointment of school inspectors in respect of previous educational experience. [53434]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Task Forces

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the taskforces and advisory groups composed of independent members which have been set up by his Department since 1 May 1997 and in each case (a) their remit, (b) their membership, (c) how many members are (i) scientists, (ii) engineers and (iii) small business people or representatives of small businesses, (d) any remuneration members receive for their services and (e) their budget. [53148]

Mr. Mudie: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Life Science Graduates

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of life science graduates gain employment related to their field of study [53223]

Mr. Mudie: Life science courses are included in the 'biological sciences' category in the statistics collected by the Higher Education Statistics Agency but cannot be identified separately. The latest available information is for students who qualified in 1997 and relates to first destinations as reported by 31 December 1997. The table gives a complete list of occupants entered and other destinations of first degree graduates in biological sciences.

School Leaving Age

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding the lowering of the school leaving age to 14; and if he will make a statement. [53436]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State receives a wide range of representations on educational issues. While some of these touch upon the difficulties of engaging all pupils in the 14–16 age band in learning, very few commentators advocate an end to compulsory education at 14.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Unpaid Fines

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many attachments of earning orders were issued by each magistrates' court in the Greater London area to collect unpaid fines in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [52050]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor's Department does not collect information on the number of attachment of earnings orders issued by magistrates courts and these figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Courts (Modernisation)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to modernise the court environment. [51723]

Mr. Hoon: The Court Service has an on-going programme of maintenance and repair, and minor improvements for their court buildings. Magistrates' Courts Committees have similar programmes for the courts they occupy. Guidance has been issued by both the Court Service and Lord Chancellor's Department Headquarters for magistrates courts on the type of facilities it is expected should be provided in new or refurbished court buildings including facilities for disabled people and separate waiting rooms for witnesses. The Court Service is also taking forward a project to provide a testbed for new technology in the courts. The aim is to pilot different types of technology, in a live courtroom environment. Evaluation of these pilots will inform decisions about the courtroom infrastructure needed to enable technology to be used.

Judiciary

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the proportions of (a) judges, (b) Queen's counsel, (c) other members of the Bar and (d) pupil barristers who are (1) women, (2) black, (3) Asian and (4) of other ethnic minority origin. [53587]

Mr. Hoon: The tables show the figures for women and those believed to be of the different ethnic origins requested for judges, Queen's Counsel and other members of the Bar. The figures for the ethnic origin of judges are believed to be correct, but as the ethnic origin of candidates for judicial office was not sought before October 1991, the data may be incomplete. There are no detailed figures available about pupil barristers. The Bar Council has estimated that 46 per cent. of pupils and "squatters" are women and 13 per cent. of pupils and "squatters" are of ethnic minority origin.

(a) The number of female judges and judges of ethnic minority origin as at 1 July 1998

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c)(ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [53866]

Mr. Hoon: None of the Lord Chancellor's Department's non-departmental public bodies has been disbanded since 1 May 1997. The Supreme Court Rule Committee and the County Court Rule Committee will probably be disbanded in the next 12 months. Their functions will have been transferred to the Civil Procedure Rule Committee.

The Civil Procedure Rule Committee and the Civil Justice Council, which were both provided for by the previous Administration's Civil Procedure Act 1997, were set up after 1 May 1997.

Non-departmental public bodies are listed in the Cabinet Office publication 'Public Bodies'. Other than the General Commissioners of Income Tax, the tribunals listed under this Department in the edition published for 1997 are no longer classified as non-departmental public bodies. They are still in existence, but as part of the Court Service Agency.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) men and

(b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53049]

Mr. Hoon: For the Lord's Chancellor's Department, including the Court Service, Public Trust Office, Public Record Office, Land Registry and the Northern Ireland Court Service, the information is set out in the table.

	Men	Women
Lord Chancellor's Department Headquarters	164	260
Court Service Agency	2,713	5,577
Public Trust Office	194	235
Public Record Office	7	0
Land Registry		See below
Northern Ireland Court Service	197	358

Note:

1. As at 27 July 1998, the Land Registry employs 8,895 people: (a) 3,148 men and (b) 5,747 women. The terms of employment for staff in the Land Registry (with the exception of those in the Senior Civil Service (SCS) are governed by the "Land Registry Conditions of Service Code"

2. The conditions of service for all staff in the Land Registry include a normal retirement age of 60, with provision for an annual review of projected operational and staffing needs to determine whether individuals may remain in service to a maximum age of 65. However, staff in administrative grades at EO equivalent and above, on reaching the age of 62 with 30 years service, are required to downgrade one grade. If any member of staff in this category wishes to remain in service beyond the 63rd birthday, they are required to downgrade to an AO equivalent grade. There are currently 3,534 staff in administrative grades at EO equivalent and above, (excluding the SCS) of whom 38 are aged 60 and over (25 men and 13 women).

Mr. Chope: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53072]

Mr. Hoon: For the Lord Chancellor's Department, including the Court Service, Public Trust Office, Public Record Office, Land Registry and the Northern Ireland Court Service, the information is set out in the table.

	Men	Women
Lord Chancellor's Department Headquarters	11	7
Court Service Agency	186	400
Public Trust Office	14	5
Public Record Office	7	nil
Land Registry	156	110
Northern Ireland Court Service	25	6

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Heritage Grants

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the endowments which have been granted by the Government when giving land to charitable trusts for heritage purposes in the last 15 years. [49279]

Mr. Banks: This information is not held centrally and a comprehensive answer could be given only at disproportionate cost. We are aware of the following:

Chatham Historic Dockyard Trust: £11.3 million provided in 1984.

Waltham Abbey Royal Gunpowder Mills Trust: £5.5 million provided in 1996.

Portsmouth Naval Base Property Trust: £6 million provided in 1998. The property was not gifted, but leased for 99 years.

National Trust: £14.3 million provided in 1989 for Ham House and Osterley Park.

National Trust: £2.3 million provided in 1993 for Orford Ness.

Support has also been given in the form of specific grants for use in the formative years of the Trust, often to meet accumulated repair and maintenance commitments. Recent examples include:

Tadworth Court: £2.85 million provided to the Children's Trust Tadworth for freehold purchase and dilapidations.

Eltham Palace: £2.5 million provided to English Heritage (an exempt charity) in 1996 and a further £1 million in 1997, which had some endowment element.

Royal Naval College, Greenwich: £17 million to be provided to the Greenwich Foundation over the next three years to cover dilapidations plus £1.5 million a year for seven years towards ongoing maintenance.

Somerset House: A contribution of £3.1 million in 1996 towards the costs of landlord's works related to the installation of the Gilbert Collection in the South Wing and £4 million over the next four years towards start-up costs of the new Trust, Somerset House Ltd.

Central Council of Physical Recreation

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the size of the CCPR's legal costs arising out of the recent fraud trial; and how these costs will be funded. [52913]

Mr. Banks: Details of the expenditure and income of the Central Council of Physical Recreation (CCPR) are published in the CCPR's Annual Report and Accounts.

In the year ended 31 March 1996, the CCPR incurred exceptional legal and professional costs of £240,522 in connection with investigations prior to and following the termination of certain employment contracts in 1995. The CCPR claimed the majority of these costs as an additional contribution from the English Sports Council (ESC) under the Heads of Agreement of 17 May 1972.

£228,923 in respect of these claims was paid by the ESC to the CCPR as additional income. The ESC has subsequently stated it currently regards £164,474 of this contribution as an advance of future funding. A working party of representatives of the CCPR, ESC and Department for Culture, Media and Sport, chaired by the latter, is currently reviewing the investigation. Following this review, the ESC will determine the extent, if any, to which it may require repayment of the £164,474.

In the year ended 31 March 1997, the CCPR incurred further exceptional legal and professional costs of £113,895 in connection with these investigations. Most of this, at this stage, has not been funded by the ESC.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what new controls have been introduced by the Central Council for Physical Recreation to prevent a repeat of major fraud incidents. [52914]

Mr. Banks: The Central Council of Physical Recreation (CCPR) set up an Organisational and Services Review Group and have agreed seventeen recommendations for changing the corporate structure and working practices of the CCPR. A second stage of the Review has now started to oversee the detailed implementation of the recommendations and manage the transitional arrangements.

Alongside this, the CCPR, English Sports Council and Department for Culture, Media and Sport, have been working together and with advisers to review and provide recommendations for detailed improvements to the CCPR's internal control systems and enhance corporate governance and accountability.

As my hon. Friend may be aware, even sound systems of internal control may not be proof against collusive fraud.

Rugby League Challenge Cup

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport in what circumstances the existing sponsorship of the Rugby League Challenge Cup will continue. [52719]

Mr. Banks: The future individual sponsorship arrangements are matters for the sports concerned although they will have to comply with the legal requirements of the European Union Tobacco Advertising Directive. The current arrangements with Gallaher Limited for the Challenge Cup extends until May 2001.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what financial assistance his Department will offer to sports currently funded by tobacco sponsorship that are now looking for alternative moneys. [52510]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 29 July 1998]: Through negotiation, we have ensured that the European Union Tobacco Advertising Directive reflects a fair balance, providing reasonable time for sports to adapt while ending the totally inappropriate link between smoking and sport. This timescale, coupled with the support of the Task Force, demonstrates our commitment to delivering alternative moneys for these sports events.

Television Channels

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many UK licensed television channels there are. [52138]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Independent Television Commission's Annual Report for the year ending 31 December 1997 states that, in addition to the 16 Channel 3 regional licences, the Channel 4 licence, the Channel 5 licence and the public service teletext licence, there were also 173 Satellite Television Service licences and 90 Licensable Programme Services.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the President of the Council how much her Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52886]

Mrs. Beckett: The Privy Council Office spent £61,714.80 on IT equipment during 1997–98. Of this sum, £57,296.04 was spent on personal computers. None of the other items specified was purchased.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much his Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figure are available. [52892]

Dr. John Cunningham: Capital expenditure on IT within my Department, its Agencies and the Central Office of Information in 1997–98 was £5.6 million. IT expenditure is not broken down within my Department into the precise categories asked for in the question but has been analysed to provide the following estimates of itemised expenditure:

	Cabinet Office	Agencies
(a) Personal computers	525,000	1,030,000
(b) Mainframe	0	0
(c) Mini-computers	15,000	0
(d) File servers	250,000	435,000

Departmental Research

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the cost of all research undertaken by his Department since May 1997, excluding the cost of green papers and other public consultation documents drafted by his officials; and if he will list in each case the organisations which undertook that research. [52707]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 29 July 1998]: The term research covers a wide range of activities from scientific and engineering research through to consultancies and public opinion surveys. The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for what reasons the responses and comments received from other Government departments to the White Paper on the Freedom of Information Bill "Your Right to Know" have not been made public; if he will place these responses and comments in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [53368]

Dr. John Cunningham: The White Paper "Your Right to Know" invited public consultation and comment on collectively agreed government proposals. The responses to the consultation, as well as substantial background material relating to the proposals, have been published with copies placed in the Library of the House. Discussion within government since publication has concerned the detailed translation of the proposals into draft legislation. Internal policy discussion of this sort is protected from disclosure under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

European Legislation

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the role of business test panels in the European Community's legislative process; who will select delegates; how many will serve; how many panels will be formed; which organisations will be eligible to supply candidates; and what is the length of duration of their panel service. [53774]

Dr. John Cunningham: The test panel of European businesses is a pilot initiative of the European Commission to improve consultation on new EU legislative proposals with business, and particularly with small and medium-sized enterprises. It is an addition to the Commission's usual consultation procedures.

I am delighted that this new initiative was launched and given the backing of EU Ministers during the UK's Presidency of the EU. We are strong supporters of improved consultation in the EU legislative process and see this pilot as an important step towards achieving better European regulation. The UK intends to participate fully in the pilot phase, giving UK businesses a direct voice in the Brussels policy-making process. We are particularly keen to ensure that the needs of small firms are taken into account.

The UK's participation in the pilot will be co-ordinated by the Better Regulation Unit in the Cabinet Office. Business panels will be selected according to the proposals under review. New panels will be constituted for each proposal. Officials are currently in discussion with business organisations and other Government Departments to identify a representative panel to comment on the first area, an amendment to the Directives dealing with annual accounts—(78/660/EC) and (83/349/EC). We expect to issue short questionnaires to about 300 UK firms in the Autumn.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c) (ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [53862]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Non-departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) for both the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and the Prime Minister are listed under my Department in the booklet "Public Bodies" published by the Stationery Office. For the purposes of this question I am answering on behalf of my Department and the Prime Minister.

(a) Since 1 May 1997 we have abolished two NDPBs: The Citizen's Charter Panel of Advisers; and the De-regulation Task Force.

(b) There are no proposals to disband any bodies within the next 12 months.

(c) No bodies have had their function transferred to another NDPB or a democratically elected body.

(d) No bodies have been removed.

(e) Details of all other NDPBs in existence on 1 May 1997 sponsored by this department are listed in "Public Bodies".

We have established two NDPBs: The Better Regulation Task Force and, on behalf of the Prime Minister, the Security Vetting Appeals Panel. My Department is currently responsible for ten NDPBs.

The Government are committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective. Many of the new NDPBs established since 1 May will be essential in helping the Government deliver their Manifesto commitments.

People's Panel

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 24 July 1998, Official Report, column 745, if he will publish (a) the budgeted figures for spending on the second wave of research and (b) the budgeted spending figures for 1998–99 for spending on the people's panel. [53897]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The figures are as follows.

(a) The budgeted figure for spending by the Cabinet Office on the second wave of research using the People's Panel is £60,000. Budgeted figures of other departments and public bodies are not yet known.

(b) The budgeted figure for spending by the Cabinet Office on the People's Panel in 1998–99 is about £500,000.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those who have accompanied (i) him and (ii) his departmental Ministers on overseas visits since 1 January indicating (a) the venue of the visit, (b) the purpose of the visit, (c) the names of those involved, (d) the job of those involved, (e) the reasons why they were included in the visit and (f) the cost to public funds. [53835]

Dr. John Cunningham: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the Summer Recess. I shall therefore be writing to the hon. Member and will place a copy of the letter in the libraries of the House.

Rebuttal Officers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many rebuttal officers or civil servants with similar roles are currently employed in the Civil Service. [53593]

Dr. John Cunningham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) on 8 June 1998, Official Report, column 424.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53071]

Dr. John Cunningham: The figures for my Department at 1 January 1998, including our Agencies, and The Central Office of Information (COI) which is a separate Department reporting to me, are as follows:

	Men	Women
Cabinet Office	17	12
Agencies	97	7

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53048]

Dr. John Cunningham: At 30 June 1998, the figures for my Department, including our Agencies, and The Central Office of Information (COI) which is a separate Department reporting to me, are as follows:

	Men	Women
Cabinet Office	187	252
Agencies	568	122
COI	23	34

HEALTH

Expenditure Services

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each county the expenditure on ambulance services in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 (i) as a percentage of total health spending and (ii) in cash terms. [52207]

Mr. Boateng: Details of health authorities' expenditure in 1997–98 on ambulance services will be placed in the Library when ready later in the year, along with details of planned expenditure in 1998–99.

Group B Streptococcus

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out to determine the percentage of women who could be possible carriers of Group B streptococcus. [52041]

Ms Jowell: This is a subject that has received attention in a number of countries. A list of relevant research of which we are aware will be placed in the Library. The Department is not currently supporting any research into Group B streptococcus.

Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues to those constructing buildings for which it is responsible on the use of materials containing asbestos. [52304]

Mr. Milburn: The Department, in respect of buildings in its ownership, does not issue any specific guidance to contractors on the use of materials containing asbestos. However, the Department's conditions of contract require that contractors comply with all relevant statutory legislation. This will include the Asbestos Prohibition Regulations 1992 and the Asbestos Licences Regulations 1993.

Myodil

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a public inquiry into the use of Myodil in myelography and into the associated risks of adhesive arachnoiditis; and if he will make a statement. [52299]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans to hold an inquiry. My noble Friend the then Minister of State for Health, Baroness Jay, recently held a meeting with the Myodil Action Group. Officials are currently considering the points raised at that meeting.

Consultants

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) of 21 July 1998, Official Report, column 528, regarding numbers of consultants, if he will list (a) the number of consultants for each specialty working within the Shropshire Health Authority, (b) the ratio of consultants in each specialty to patients within the Shropshire Health Authority and (c) the average national ratio of consultants in each specialty to patients. [52427]

Mr. Milburn: The number of consultants (whole time equivalents (WTEs)) in the Shropshire Health Authority area is listed in the table. Information on numbers of patients is not collected centrally.

Medicines (Children)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Licensing Medicines for Children report of May 1996, produced by the joint working party of the British Paediatric Association and the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, on the development of medicines for children; and if he will make a statement. [43822]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 1 June 1998]: The report of the British Paediatric Association and the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industries joint working party on the development of medicines for children made five recommendations. Of these five, three were felt by the working party to require action by the Department, and more particularly the Medicines Control Agency (MCA).

The three recommendations and action taken on them are:

Medicines are licensed for specific age ranges.

It is the MCA practice to license products for use in the recommended specific age ranges when appropriate data are presented. Use of the age ranges has been confirmed in the revised European guideline on the investigation of medicinal products in children.

The Committee on Proprietary Medicinal Products reviews its guidelines in the light of these concerns.

This has been done. The revised guideline came into operation in September 1997.

That surveillance at various levels is introduced on the use of unlicensed medicines and the prescribing of medicines "off label".

The MCA has well-established systems for monitoring the safety of marketed medicines in normal clinical practice. This covers all patient groups using medicines, including children, and "off label" usage. Nevertheless, a more targeted approach to surveillance of medicines used by children may be warranted, and the MCA reviewed the matter in conjunction with the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health. As a first step the MCA has agreed to fund, jointly with the Trent Health Region, the first year of a study which will assess the advantages of a regional monitoring centre for drug safety in children. It is hoped that this will be up and running in September 1998.

Pharmaceutical Graduates

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of pharmaceutical graduates in the period to 2001. [52871]

Mr. Milburn: The pharmacy workforce is forecast to grow at a steady rate, with the exception of 2000 when there will be few newly qualified pharmacists because of the recent extension of the course from 3 to 4 years. National Health Service employers are adopting a range of strategies to recruit and retain pharmacists and make better use of pharmacy support staff.

Breast Cancer Radiologists

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to secure the provision of additional breast cancer radiologists. [52870]

Mr. Milburn: The Specialty Workforce Advisory Group (SWAG) advises the National Health Service Executive and the Welsh Office on the number of higher specialist trainees needed to ensure an adequate supply of properly trained doctors in each specialty. It carries out annual reviews of each specialty's estimated need for consultants.

For 1998–99, SWAG recommended further increases in the number of higher specialist trainees, in diagnostic radiology. It has recommended that these increases be treated as a priority.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what extra provision of funds will be made available to the National Health Service following the comprehensive spending review to deal with the date change problem. [53157]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced additional resources for the National Health Service in England, totalling £17.7 billion over the years 1990–2000 to 2001–02, on 14 July 1998, Official Report, column 194. This additional funding will allow the NHS not only to meet all pressures including the date change problem, but also to deliver a better, more modern NHS.

Restrictive Patents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that restrictive patents on beneficial medicinal techniques do not prevent the use of those techniques on patients in the United Kingdom. [52897]

Mr. Milburn: Not all inventions concerning medicinal techniques are patentable in the United Kingdom. Both the United Kingdom Patents Act (1977) and the European Patent Convention (1978), which govern the grant of patent rights having effect in the United Kingdom, expressly exclude from patentability methods of treatment by therapy, surgery and diagnosis which are practised on the human body.

Existing UK Patent Law already includes safeguards specifically to prevent the abuse of patent rights for any invention, including those associated with medicine, such as providing for compulsory licensing of rights in the event that the supply of a patented product is not being met on reasonable terms.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many reported cases there have been of the new antibiotic resistant tuberculosis; and if he will make a statement. [52922]

Ms Jowell: Data on tuberculosis (TB) that is resistant to antibiotics are split into two categories: TB resistant to one or more of the antibiotics normally used to treat TB (drug resistant TB); and TB resistant to isoniazid and rifampicin, the two most effective drugs for treating TB (multi-drug resistant TB). United Kingdom information for the years 1994 to 1997 is given in the table.

	UK laboratory isolates
Year	TB resistant to one or more anti-TB drugs	Multi-drug resistant TB
1994	206	43
1995	212	49
1996	241	60
1997	220	49

Drug resistance is not new. TB infections consist of a mixture of organisms, some of which are naturally resistant to some antibiotics. These can multiply if the treatment for the TB is inadequate. This has been known since antibiotic treatment for TB first became available in the 1950s.

Multidrug resistant (MDR) TB in the UK remains at low levels and we intend to keep it this way. One of the aims of national TB policy is to prevent the emergence of drug resistance. Guidance from the Interdepartmental Working Group on Tuberculosis (IDWG) called "Recommendations for the Prevention and Control of Tuberculosis at Local Level" was issued by the Department of Health and Welsh Office in 1996. This guidance contained recommendations for ensuring that patients with TB complete their treatment and about infection control to prevent the spread of TB as well as advice on drug-resistant TB. Copies are available in the Library. An Expert Working Group has been set up under the IDWG to make more detailed recommendations for the prevention of transmission of TB in immuno-compromised (eg HIV) patients and of drug resistant (including MDR) TB to supplement the published guidance. Its report is expected to be issued shortly. Advice on the management of patients with HIV and MDR-TB has been issued by the British Thoracic Society.

Dental Services

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists currently treat NHS patients; and if he will make a statement. [53105]

Mr. Milburn: 16,148 principals, 608 assistants and 544 vocational trainees were practising as general dental services dentists in England and Wales on 31 March 1998. These figures exclude salaried, hospital and community dentists.

Smoking

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research the Government have commissioned recently into health risks of smoking in public places. [52921]

Ms Jowell: In March this year the Department published a report by the scientific committee on tobacco and health. The committee scientifically reviewed and appraised a range of important issues relating to tobacco and health, including the health effects of exposure of non-smokers to environmental tobacco smoke. The Department has not recently commissioned any separate research into the associated health risks of smoking in public places.

Copies of the report are available in the Library and are also available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the evidence originating (a) domestically and (b) overseas which has been considered and rejected in the course of preparing his forthcoming White Paper on Tobacco. [53387]

Ms Jowell: The Government have received a wide range of material, from numerous sources, in connection with the forthcoming White Paper on tobacco control. There are no plans to publish that material.

Information Technology

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department spent on IT, itemising (a) personal computers, (b) main-frame, (c) mini-computers and (d) file servers in the last year for which figures are available. [52885]

Mr. Milburn: The total Departmental spend, including agencies, on new items for the financial year 1997–1998, including replacement equipment for an upgrade of our internal office information system, was:

personal computers: £3,286,845

main-frame: Nil

mini-computers: Nil

file servers: £1,037,210.

Maintenance costs for these items and the outsourced mainframe services totalled £897,553 in 1997–98.

NHS Doctors

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors joined the NHS and how many doctors left the NHS by year, for the last four years. [53771]

Mr. Milburn: Information about doctors joining and leaving the National Health Service is not collected centrally.

Head Injuries

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he will take to ensure a consistently high standard for the diagnosis of head injuries at hospital accident and emergency departments; and if he will make a statement. [53569]

Mr. Boateng: All accident and emergency departments should have written guidelines on the management of patients who attend with head injuries.

In Executive Letter (93)115, the Department drew the attention of the National Health Service to published guidance on the management of head injuries. Copies of this Executive Letter are available in the Library.

Radiotherapy

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce waiting lists for radiotherapy in NHS hospitals in the London Region. [52808]

Mr. Milburn: [holding answer 29 July 1998]: An extra £104.6 million has already been allocated to health authorities in the two Thames regions in 1998–99 to tackle National Health Service waiting lists. It is for health authorities, in partnership with NHS trusts and local primary care teams, to make decisions on how these extra resources should be invested to reduce waiting lists.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals his Department has to increase the availability of trained radiotherapists in the NHS. [53389]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald (Miss Widdecombe) on 29 July 1998.

Negligence Claims

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce negligence claims on the NHS. [52865]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 29 July 1998]: On 29 April my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State wrote to a number of organisations representing professional, legal, NHS and patient interests seeking their views on what can be done to reduce the threat of litigation. Officials are in the process of studying replies in order to identify suggestions which might be taken forward in the future.

Waiting Lists

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of patients joining National Health Service waiting lists in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999. [53018]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 29 July 1998]: No.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients joined National Heath Service waiting lists in (a) 1996 and (b) 1997. [53017]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 29 July 1998]: The latest figures on admissions to waiting lists suggest that in 1996–97 around 4.1 million patients joined National Health Service waiting lists.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of patients in England and Wales suspended from NHS surgical waiting lists at 30 June. [53734]

Mr. Milburn: Information on the number of suspensions from surgical waiting lists in England at 30 June 1998 will be available in due course.

GP Recruitment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the proportion of the proposed increased GP recruitment which will be recruited from outside the United Kingdom. [53019]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 29 July 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 28 July 1998, Official Report, column 177.

Psychiatric Wards

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a national computerised record of vacant beds in psychiatric wards. [53830]

Mr. Boateng: No. What is important is that available resources are used to fund direct patient care. There would be no guarantee that a national computerised record would be sufficient and sufficiently up-to-date to allow for access to vacant beds particularly in an emergency. Admissions are best handled at local level using appropriate contacts and knowledge coupled with effective liaison by professional and managerial staff.

Ashford Hospital

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the monthly waiting list statistics for Ashford (Middlesex) hospital from May 1997 to June 1998. [53217]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. For 1997–98 waiting list figures for trusts and health authorities were collected quarterly. The inpatient waiting list figures for Ashford Hospital National Health Service Trust were as follows:

Date	Number
30 June 1997	3,670
30 September 1997	3,776
31 December 1997	3,947
31 March 1998	4,125

Monthly waiting list figures for April to July 1998 will be available at the end of August.

Written Answers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average length of time taken by his Department in the current session to give substantive answers to written questions tabled for answer on a named day. [53728]

Mr. Milburn: During the period 15 May 1997 to 31 March 1998, 91 per cent. of questions tabled for answer on a named day were given substantive answers on that day. Of the small minority not answered on the named day, 90 per cent. were answered within one week and 98 per cent. within four weeks.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 May 1997 that (a) have been disbanded, (b) will be disbanded in the next 12 months, (c) have had their functions transferred to (i) another non-departmental public body and (ii) a democratically elected body, (d) have been renamed but continue to perform a similar role and (e) have been unchanged; if he will indicate in (c)(ii) the relevant successor body; what new non-departmental public bodies have been established since 1 May 1997; and how many non-departmental public bodies his Department currently is responsible for. [53856]

Mr. Milburn: Of the non-Departmental public bodies (NDPBs) in existence on 1 May 1997 one, the Advisory Committee on Design Quality in the National Health Service, has been abolished. None are currently planned for abolition within the next 12 months but the Central Council for Education and Training for Social Work (an executive NDPB) will be abolished by 31 March 2001, subject to Parliamentary approval. No NDPBs have had their functions transferred to another non-departmental public body or to a democratically elected body and none have been renamed; the rest remain unchanged.

The Royal Commission on the Long-Term Care of the Elderly has been established since 1 May, but it must be wound up by 17 December 1998. The Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens, which was a Departmental committee, has been reclassified as an advisory NDPB. We are responsible for 7 executive and 38 advisory NDPBs.

We are committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective. Many of the new NDPBs established since 1 May will be essential in helping the Government to deliver their manifesto commitments.

The NDPBs for which the Department of Health is responsible are listed in Public Bodies, copies of which have been laid in the Libraries of both Houses.

Employees Over 60

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women aged over 60 years were employed by (i) his Department and (ii) his Department's agencies on 1 January. [53065]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is in contained in the table.

Staff over age 60 on 1 January 1998

	Male	Female
Department of Health (excluding agencies)	15	8
Agencies
Medicines Control Agency	2	11
Medical Devices Agency	0	0
NHS Estates Agency	1	1
NHS Pensions Agency	6	10

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women employed by (1) his Department and (2) his Department's agencies have contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday. [53041]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is contained in the table.

Staff with contracts of employment which permit them to retire after their 60th birthday

Strokes

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a response to the specific recommendations regarding strokes in the CSAG report published in June. [53733]

Ms Jowell: The Government have already welcomed the Clinical Services Advisory Group report which has been circulated widely to health professionals. It is envisaged that clinicians will take on board recommendations from the report and that they will be reflected in standards of patient care.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will not be making any additional response to the specific recommendations regarding strokes.

Hospital Deaths

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths occurred in hospitals during the period between June and October, in each of the last 10 years. [53749]

Mr. Milburn: Information for the years 1991 to 1996 (the latest year available) is in the table. Comparable data are also available for 1989 and 1990 but are not immediately accessible. We will write to the hon. Member shortly with data for those years.

Asthma

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on (a) preventing and (b) alleviating asthma in children; what national initiatives are targeted at children with asthma; and how much each of these initiatives costs. [53358]

Ms Jowell: The Government are working closely with the health professions, the National Asthma Campaign and all those with an interest in asthma to improve knowledge of the causes of asthma and to make life as normal as possible for children and adults who suffer from it.

Management of asthma, in children as in adults, mainly takes place in primary care. 93 per cent. of general practitioners run organised programmes of care for asthma under the Chronic Disease Management Programme. The Department of Health is currently considering funding for a project, co-ordinated by the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health, to develop new evidence-based clinical guidelines for asthma in children and adults.

The Medical Research Council spends about £2 million a year on research into prevention and treatment of asthma and related areas. The Department of Health, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the MRC are jointly funding a major research initiative on the relationship between air pollution and respiratory disease, which may inform prevention strategies. The National Asthma Campaign is managing, on behalf of the National Health Service Executive, the NHS National research and development Programme on Asthma Management. Many of the research projects commissioned will be pertinent to asthma in children.

Asthma is featured in the joint Department for Education and Employment and Department of Health guidance on "Supporting pupils with medical needs in school", issued in October 1996. Asthma prevention will be encompassed in the healthy schools initiative launched by the two Departments in May, for which £2 million is committed for 1998–99. In the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation", healthy schools are identified as a key setting, and asthma also heads the list of possible local target areas.

The National Asthma Campaign also works closely with schools. The Department of Health gave the Campaign a Section 64 project grant, totalling nearly £60,000 over the three years 1994–97, to create a childhood asthma education officer post.

Doctors' Training

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the potential of information technology to provide the means for the ongoing training of qualified doctors; [53224]

(2) what proposals he has for the ongoing training of medical practitioners under the lifelong learning programme. [53225]

Mr. Milburn: We recognise that the availability of appropriately trained staff is one of the key determinants of the quality of patient care. The importance of lifelong learning as one of the key activities underpinning Clinical Governance is recognised in the recently published consultation document "A First Class Service—Quality in the NHS".

In this document we have set out a new approach to lifelong learning including the identification of professional and local service needs and priorities in personal development plans to be developed by individual health professionals in discussion with colleagues locally. Organisations will also be encouraged to complement these individual development plans with organisational plans.

Our aim is for all National Health Service employers to have training and development plans in place for the majority of health professional staff by April 2000. We have given a commitment to work with professional and educational bodies to explore a range of practical issues including the role of monitoring, peer review and appraisal, the role of new technology and distance learning, how the expertise of professional and statutory bodies can best support local CPD, and the educational infrastructure required to identify and meet CPD.

Later this summer we will issue an NHS human resource strategy which will include ways of developing the ability of staff to contribute to the improvement of services, and further guidance will be issued this Winter on the development of a locally based approach to lifelong learning.

The NHS Executive, as part of its information management and technology strategy, has had an active programme to develop clinical awareness of the benefits of the effective use of information through IT. The supporting infrastructure has developed considerably over the last three years. There are a number of projects within medical schools and in post-graduate education programmes to support professional development. Examples of good practice case studies are made available through intranets and over the internet.

Nerve Gas Attacks (Japan)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the clinical data on the long-term health effects on the victims of the nerve gas attacks on the Tokyo subway and Matsumato in 1994 and 1995; and if he will make a statement. [54538]

Ms Jowell: Officials at the Department of Health have studied published material on the two nerve agent attacks by terrorist groups, to which my hon. Friend refers. Some of these papers relate to delayed effects of nerve agents.

Prescription Charges

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of requiring a single prescription charge for patients whose illness or condition requires them to be prescribed two or more medicines or treatments; and if he will make a statement; [52414]

(2) if he will estimate the costs of requiring patients to pay a single prescription charge when their medical condition requires two or more medicines or treatments; and if he will estimate the costs in terms of (a) revenue forgone and (b) administrative costs incurred. [52415]

Mr. Milburn: A single prescription charge for each occasion where a number of medicines are supplied to a patient would mean a loss of revenue to the National Health Service, or an increase in the level of the charge to avoid this. Prepayment certificates are available to help patients who pay charges and need a number of medicines.

The revenue forgone from patients paying the current prescription charge to cover all items on the prescription form, rather than paying for each item, is estimated as being in the order of £55 million. This estimate takes no account of any revenue lost because of any switch from purchase of prepayment certificates that might result, or the cost of any additional drugs which may be prescribed if such a scheme was introduced. The administrative costs of such a change are likely to be minimal.

Vaccination Programmes

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation", if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on (a) the introduction of a universal adolescent hepatitis B vaccination programme and (b) the introduction of a universal meningitis vaccination programme. [53885]

Ms Jowell: Policy on the use of vaccines to protect against hepatitis B and meningitis is based on the recommendations of independent experts, including the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI).

The United Kingdom has one of the lowest prevalence rates of hepatitis B carriage in the world. Our policy is to target hepatitis B immunisation at groups at increased risk of infection because of their lifestyle, occupation or other factors such as close contact with a case or carrier of hepatitis B. The JCVI has recently considered our immunisation strategy. It has not recommended the introduction of universal immunisation for the present, but it wished to see the selective programme reinforced. We are considering ways of achieving this.

The introduction of haemophilus influenzae b vaccine in 1992 has led to the virtual elimination of this disease, which used to be the most common cause of bacterial meningitis in the under 5s. Most cases of bacterial meningitis are now caused by meningococcal disease. There is no vaccine available against the most common strain of meningococcal disease, Group B, whilst Group C vaccine does not protect those at most risk from the disease (that is, very young children), offers only about 80 per cent. protection and does not offer long term protection and, as such, is not suitable for routine use. Current policy is, therefore, to use Group C vaccine only whenever local circumstances indicate, such as in outbreaks of an unusually high incidence of Group C infection.

We are funding work to evaluate new meningococcal and pneumococcal vaccines in United Kingdom children. These studies are being conducted by the Public Health Laboratory Service in collaboration with the National Institute for Biological Standards and Controls, the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research and the Institute for Child Health. The studies have shown very encouraging results already for meningococcal Group C vaccines and early indicators for Group B are encouraging. There are reasonable prospects that these vaccines will eventually be able to induce long term immunity although more research is needed before their suitability for widespread use can be considered.

Carers

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of people in the United Kingdom who are currently caring for parents and children or parents and grandchildren; and if he will provide this information by gender, age and employment status of carer. [54160]

Mr. Boateng: Such information as is readily available is included in the Office for National Statistics' Supplement A to the 1995 General Household Survey, entitled 'Informal Carers'. Copies of this information are available in the Library.

Xenotransplantation

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will publish the responses to the consultation exercise held last year on Animal Tissue into Humans: report of the Advisory Group on the Ethics of Xenotransplantation. [53726]

Mr. Dobson: We are making the responses available and announcing our action on the regulation of xenotransplantation today. 51 responses were received. Two respondents asked that their responses be kept confidential. All other responses are being made publicly available through the Department of Health, Scottish Office, Welsh Office, Northern Ireland Office and the Library.

Welsh Language Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date his Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board in relation to the need to prepare a Welsh language scheme; on what date his Department and the Board held consultations on such a scheme; when a scheme was formally submitted to the Board; and if it has been approved. [53357]

Ms Jowell: The Department received notification from the Welsh Language Board on 5 December 1996. Consultations took place within the Department and with the Welsh Language Board until early May 1997. On 7 May 1997 the Permanent Secretary's office wrote to the Welsh Language Board confirming the Department's position which was that it had suitably flexible arrangements in place to fulfil its responsibilities to Welsh speaking people and saw no need for a formal Welsh Language Scheme.

Correspondence

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Spelthorne dated 2 June, concerning Mrs. W. Pockett of Sunbury-on-Thames, reference POH(4)5430/17. [53798]

Mr. Boateng: I replied on 24 April. A copy of the letter was sent to the hon. Member on 29 July.

Residential Care

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend legislation to allow the elderly in long-term care to use any capital they have which is wholly disregarded by the means tests to make up the difference in cost between the care which their authority is prepared to arrange and the care they choose. [53957]

Mr. Boateng: The terms of reference of the Royal Commission on long-term care of elderly people ask them to look at how the cost of long term care should be apportioned between public funds and individuals.

NHS Pensions Agency

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will approve and publish the annual report and accounts of the NHS Pensions Agency. [54630]

Mr. Milburn: We have approved the Report and Accounts which has been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of Section 5(2) and 5(3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921.

Copies have been placed in the Library.

Nannies (Registration)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to require the registration of nannies. [53150]

Ms Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are consulting on the regulation of early education and day care, including the scope of services which should be regulated. The aim is to produce a system of regulation which supports the development of a national childcare strategy but also meets the needs of children and families for safe and high quality day care. We will announce our proposals once the responses to the consultation, which ends on 31 July, have been considered.
